Alumni Thriving in Regional Museums, Doctoral Programs, Teaching Positions and More

After graduating from the Master of Arts in History program, alumni have taken diverse paths to thrive in many different fields. Some, like Kristina Cardinale (pictured below) have gone on to doctoral programs in history, and others have pursued further graduate work in interdisciplinary cultural studies at University of California campuses in the region, and further afield from Arizona to Mississippi. Others have begun working as lecturers and adjunct faculty at neighboring two- and four-year institutions. Several alumni are working in museums around Los Angeles and San Bernardino County, while others enrolled and graduated from our program all while continuing to teach their students in junior high and high schools.

We welcome students with a wide range of research and professional interests, and we work to empower our students and help them thrive in many fields, with the solid foundation that a Master of Arts in History from CSUSB can provide.
