CAL POLY NOW TWO COLLEGES

The Pomona campus of California State Polytechnic College was made a separate college Thursday, May 12, becoming the 19th California State College.

Governor Edmund G. Brown created the new college when he signed Senate Bill 45 authorizing the State College Board of Trustees to make the change as early as mid-August separating the campus from its older, sister college in San Luis Obispo.

The Pomona site, known as the Kellogg-Voorhis Campus, has an enrollment of more than 4,500. The campus at San Luis Obispo has about 7000 students.

Proponents of creating a new college as requested by the Trustees contended that the rapid growth of the two Cal Poly campuses has caused administrative problems with the sites located more than 200 miles apart. The legislation also calls for the hiring of a separate president for the Pomona college.

Cal Poly was established as a "statewide" college, specializing in programs of agriculture and engineering. Dr. Julian H. McPhee its president for 33 years is retiring next month.
