Accepting The Kindness of Others

When you are the type of person who loves to give to others, it is very difficult to receive...even in times of need. You can be kind but have difficulty in accepting the kindness of others.

I suffer from that condition.

I come from a legacy of givers, from my grandparents Floyd and Essie Brown to my grandmother Melba Minter to my parents Hardy and Cheryl who have committed much of their adult lives to community service. In my family, at an early age, we are trained to give to others.

So the recent fire that devastated us and destroyed much of our business and personal property left me scrambling, trying to maintain my daily routine of running the paper while dealing with the enormous loss as well as with insurance adjusters, contractors, environmental consultants and others.

I kept my head down and just kept working with the rest of my team, trying not to think about the tremendous clean-up and rebuilding process I was about to go through. As the news started trickling out, I started getting text messages, phones calls, Facebook posts and shares, and general hugs and well-wishes from our friends in the community as I went about my regular work day.

A serendipitous encounter at the Regal Movie Theater in Riverside with Professors Deborah Wong, Christine Gailey and Carole Nagengast shortly after the fire, netted us some supplies and a loaned computer. And Deborah called our friends in the media prompting The Press Enterprise to visit our burned out structure and publish a story on our tragedy.

I say serendipitous because when Elizabeth Balistreri told her boss Richard Roth about our situation after she read the article, he immediately thought to offer his underutilized law office as a temporary office for the VOICE. It is a tremendous savings for us as well as a comfortable landing place as we continue to sift through the rubble for tear sheets, art, awards and a few other items of value – some literal, some sentimental. I hadn't cried throughout this entire ordeal, but Mr. Roth's gesture brought tears to my eyes. We are now in that space and are extremely appreciative of his kindness. This will allow us to continue to provide vital news and information to you - our community - from a great space on the first floor of the Innovation Building on the corner of Spruce and Chicago in Riverside.

We are open for business Monday thru Friday 9 am to 5 pm. Please stop by and visit us...we'll give you a newspaper, a cup of coffee or tea, and a smile... and if you smell what seems to be smoke when you shake my hand, or give me a hug, it's probably because I just returned from the old office trying to find something else I just discovered was still missing.

Invisible Children

"I would say that, well, obviously my high school didn't prepare me for college."

- Darryl Briggs,
youth leader and college student

The third of five boys born in the Bronx to a single mother who dropped out of high school, Darryl Briggs was starting out with at least two strikes against him. Growing up poor, Black, and bright in the Bronx without guidance, by the time he got to high school he already felt completely ignored, almost invisible. Darryl's high-poverty high school was eight floors overflowing with 8,000 students and an obvious lack of resources: "There were easily 35 students to a classroom and there weren't even 35 desks in the classroom for the 35 students to sit in . . . there was one lab in the entire school." The physical conditions discouraged learning, but for Darryl, the worst part was the lack of one-on-one attention. His classes were uninteresting and way too easy. None of the teachers noticed his potential and need for academic challenges, or even noticed him at all. When he skipped class, no one asked why. When he started hanging out with the "wrong crowd," no one told him that wasn't a good idea.

When he was 15 Darryl ran away from home and got arrested and sentenced to two months in juvenile detention centers. When he tried to go back to high school, school officials said without guidance and support he couldn't come back. They suggested he get a G.E.D. Soon he was arrested again. The turning point for Darryl was getting involved as a community organizer, finding a mentor, and going through leadership training programs.

A friend introduced him to a community organizing group where Darryl met the person he now calls his lifetime mentor and found his calling making a positive difference for other young people. He became a youth program coordinator for a nonprofit organization, For a Better Bronx, focused on combating youth and environment disparities in the South Bronx, and discovered he wanted to get his G.E.D. and continue his education. Darryl recently graduated from Bronx Community College and is pursuing a bachelor's degree in social work at Lehman College. He chose social work because it offers an opportunity for him to continue making the one-on-one connections he missed so much. An alumnus and current national trainer for the Children's Defense Fund (CDF)'s Young Advocate Leadership Training (YALT) program, Darryl was a panelist at the Educational Testing Service-CDF's June symposium in a session on "Lived Experience" which helped participants understand the struggles young Black males face and supports they need in the high school years. Darryl's ideas about what works come partly from his personal experience with what didn't work in the all-too-common schools like the one he dropped out of.

Darryl feels strongly that one caring adult can make all the difference. "That's what I was lacking as far as my high school experience and as far as my adolescence. I didn't have really anyone to guide me and say, hey, D, maybe you could take this route instead of this route, maybe you could make this decision instead of that decision, or maybe I could hold your hand while you do this instead of doing that."

Darryl appreciates that he's able to connect with and serve as an example for the young people he works with because they know he comes from the same place they do. But even when teachers don't automatically have that connection with their students, Darryl stressed the importance of teachers knowing something about the community their students come from and making the effort to establish some connections: "A sense of cultural competence needs to play a role. We have many teachers that come from different backgrounds." Something as simple as giving all staff a tour of the surrounding neighborhood can be a start: "Even those small little things, like, 'Okay, I bought cereal there,' you can use that to connect to your students, because they're like, 'All right. Well, my mom shops in said places [too].' So you've established that connection off of something you wouldn't even expect." Once again, it comes back to adults making personal connections with the children they serve.

Darryl's ultimate goal is to found a nonprofit serving young people in the juvenile justice system. He uses his own story for the young people he works with today to keep them in school and out of prison: "It sounds like a cliché, but never give up, because there are many different roads to achieve the same goal. So whichever venue you take, just never give up, and ultimately, be the best at whatever it is you do."

Poetry And Portraits Of San Bernardino Depicted In New Book By Two CSUSB Faculty

San Bernardino

For six years, two Cal State San Bernardino professors documented, photographed and reflected on the cultural urban landscape of the city of San Bernardino.

Professor and critically acclaimed poet Juan Delgado of the CSUSB English department and professor and accomplished photographer Thomas McGovern of the art department have published a new book of poetry and portraits, "Vital Signs." The book is published by Heyday Publications.

The book is a documentary photography project that takes a visual tour through the city of San Bernardino portraying business signs and other wall paintings that represent the intensity of the stories of the working-class Latino communities in the Inland Empire.

McGovern, who teaches photography at CSUSB, uses his photos of hand-painted signs and murals to depict the compellingly rich stories of the immigrant population of San Bernardino, a city often portrayed by media as a center of urban blight and high crime.

McGovern believes that the Mexican muralist tradition had an obvious influence on the hand-made signs used for marketing. But the signs also suggest the "economics of a modest city where immigrants and established locals alike set up shop and try to provide for themselves and their communities."

"As a photographer, I am interested in the countless details of our city that are often overlooked, ignored or even reviled, but which I find emblematic of our richly diverse community," McGovern said. "I was lucky to collaborate with Juan Delgado, a poet who shares this sensibility and whose words enhance my images, creating what we feel is an authentic portrait of San Bernardino," he said.

Delgado, who teaches creative writing and Chicano literature at CSUSB, was named the 2013 outstanding professor last spring. "I hope that 'Vital Signs' reminds people that gazing at art is not an escape from the world, but a way to situate ourselves in our ever-present past," Delgado said.

Delgado's work often portrays the realities of the immigrant experience, with its related poverty and hardships as illustrated in his 1998 collection of poems, "El Campo," about Mexican farm workers and their hardships as illustrated in his 1998 collection of poems, "El Campo," about Mexican farm workers and their families. "Our book is a testament to our fondness for San Bernardino and its people. I hope our poems and photos give the readers ways to reanimate their sense of place and their wonder. It is a joy to work with Tom because he is such an accomplished artist," said Delgado.

Other of Delgado's works include: "Green Web" (1994), which was awarded the Contemporary Poetry Prize at the University of Georgia, and "A Rush of Hands" (2003). His poems have been included in the anthology "Touching the Fire: Fifteen Poets of Today's Latino Renaissance" (1998).

Delgado is a graduate of CSUSB, earning a bachelor's degree in English. He holds an M.F.A. from the University of California, Irvine, where he was a Regents Fellow. To read a selection of poems from Delgado, visit <http://www.poetryfoundation.org/bio/juan-delgado>.

McGovern has also written several books, including "Bearing Witness (to AIDS)," "Amazing Grace" and "Hard Boys + Bad Girls." He earned an M.F.A. from Cal State Fullerton and a bachelor's degree from Empire State College, New York City. To browse through a collection of photos from the book, visit McGovern's website at <http://thomasmcgovern.net>.

MoVal Councilman Arrested

Moreno Valley

Riverside County District Attorney Paul Zellerbach recently confirmed that Moreno Valley Councilman Marcelo Co has been arrested on eight felonies including fraud and grand theft of property, filing fraudulent documents and presenting a false claim.

64-year-old Co was arrested at his house along the 16500 block of Saddlebrook Lane of Moreno Valley which the embattled councilman used as his address in campaign paperwork.

Released on a $15,000 bail, Co was booked at the downtown Riverside jail around 5:03 p.m.

In an email statement to this office, Senior Public Information Specialist John Hall states that this investigation is entirely separate from any other investigation involving Co but would not go into any further details on the other investigation.

"This case involves the In-Home Supportive Services (IHSS) program. Co is listed in that program as a provider for his mother and therefore collected IHSS income for her care," states Hall.

"It is alleged that it would have been impossible for Co to provide care to his mother during certain periods of time because she was not in the United States while he still was in the country. It was determined through the investigation that Co reportedly collected nearly $15,000 in state funds during the times when he could not have been caring for her as they were in different countries."

The In-Home Supportive Services Program serves low-income seniors and people with disabilities.

LLU Health to receive $990,000 grant from Covered California

Loma Linda

Loma Linda University Health will receive a grant of $990,000 from Covered California to conduct outreach and education programs on how, starting in 2014, Californians can access affordable health care coverage under the federal Patient Protection and Affordable Care Act.

Loma Linda University Health (LLUH), in partnership with Community Clinic Association of San Bernardino County, is one of 48 lead organizations receiving grant awards totaling $37 million from Covered California to help residents access affordable health care coverage.

The selected organizations will reach nearly nine million people and more than 200,000 small businesses in California's 58 counties. Covered California will focus its outreach on 5.3 million Californians in need of individual insurance, about half of who may be eligible for financial assistance with their premiums.

"We are very excited to build on partnerships with organizations that have trusted relationships in diverse communities throughout the state," says Peter V. Lee, executive director of Covered California. Covered California is charged with creating a new insurance marketplace in which individuals and small businesses can get access to health insurance, as provided by the federal health care law.

"Loma Linda's strategy to use provider educators that will champion Covered California has great outreach potential," says Sarah Soto-Taylor, Covered California deputy director of community affairs. "Our partnership with Loma Linda will help raise awareness about our new health care marketplace in San Bernardino County among the medical professionals who come in contact daily with consumers who may benefit from premium assistance."

The grant will allow LLUH and the Community Clinic Association of San Bernardino County to pursue an outreach plan, developed under the leadership of Dora Barilla, associate director of the LLUH Institute for Community Partnerships, to reach out to diverse, uninsured populations within the county.

The plan includes staging group meetings, attending community events, coordinating with community clinics, and educating health care providers about the new California Health Benefit Exchange, a major component of the federal health care law.

At a recent training session held at Loma Linda University Health, training consultant Susan Ladua answers questions from representatives of various organizations that received grants from Covered California about the Patient Protection and Affordable Care Act.

"Key to successful implementation of the Patient Protection and Affordable Care Act is education, and we are very honored to have been selected by Covered California to help educate and assist the residents of San Bernardino County gain access to affordable health care," says Gerald Winslow, Ph.D., vice president for mission and culture at LLUH, and director of the Institute for Health Policy and Leadership, the organizational entity responsible for administering the grant.

Seniors Complete Environmental Class

Riverside

Nine seniors, all residents of Mount Rubidoux Manor completed the first five-session Greenery Program offered by Seniors Go Green.

The Greenery Program, developed by Seniors Go Green Chairman Dale Dobson, is designed to raise the awareness of environmental threats from global warming. Participants learn about climate change, conservation of energy, pollution, legislation, and other threats to the environment and how to take action to help heal the environment.

The Program is divided into five one-hour workshops. Each workshop has a theme: global warming; history of the green movement; reduce, reuse and recycle; how to be a green senior; and, letting your voice be heard. Participants watch and discuss videos; view PowerPoint presentations and complete hands-on activities appropriate to the session topic.

The focus of the program is on awareness. Seniors learn how they can take action to leave a green legacy for their grandchildren and great-grandchildren.

"To my knowledge this is the first program of its kind," stated Dobson. "One of our goals [Seniors Go Green] for 2013 was to inform and educate seniors about global warming. The Greenery Program was created to meet the goal."

Dobson hopes that other senior residential communities; senior centers and organizations for seniors will make use of the materials. The Greenery Program outline, hand-out materials, Power Point presentations, and links to videos can be found at the Seniors Go Green website: <http://www.gogreenseniors.org/>

Implementing Health Care Reform

As an educator for more than two decades, I hold a deep conviction on providing the knowledge necessary for any situation. Just as important is the responsibility to stop the spread of misinformation and myth.

Beginning January 1st, Americans will see the Affordable Care Act take root at the individual level. Many have used that date as an opportunity to warp and twist facts as it suits them, confusing citizens to advance an agenda. Now, I think, is the time we set some of the facts straight.

Since President Obama signed the Affordable Care Act into law in March 2010, we have already seen numerous reforms take shape. Already, a new Patient's Bill of Rights has gone into effect, protecting consumers from a range of the health industry's abuses. No longer are children denied coverage based on pre-existing conditions. No longer do seniors have to pay full price for prescription drugs under Medicare. No longer can insurance companies raise rates without cause and not be held accountable. The law's efforts to tackle healthcare fraud have recovered more than $4.2 billion in taxpayer dollars in 2012 alone. These are big steps in the right direction, and we are about to take one more.

In 2014, new state run healthcare exchanges will begin operating – their goal being to expand coverage for those who need it and provide everyone with a plan most beneficial to them. Leading the charge is California's own initiative, "Covered California." This program will help individuals and families find the plan that's best for them by allowing them to compare health coverage in one, easy place, and learn if they qualify for tax credits that help bring down the cost of care.

The plan appears to be working. Released earlier this year, the Covered California rates were found to be as much as 29 percent below the average 2013 premiums small employers pay. Not limited to just California, the New York health care exchange also released its rates earlier this year and similarly proved to be a better value, as rates were on average 53 percent lower than current individual direct-pay rates.

Progress is being made, that much is clear. Yet there are those who continue to throw up roadblocks at every opportunity. We have seen Congressional Republicans waste time and tax dollars attempting to overturn the Affordable Care Act 40 times, regardless of the Supreme Court's ruling or the pressing need to fix a bloated, flawed health system. Several Republican governors are trying to block the law's implementation wherever they can, stifling the benefits despite the people in their state expressing an overwhelming need for change.

I have little patience for those trying to undo this improvement. Our job is not to stand in the way of these advances but work with our constituents and be a source of information and direction. My office will be hosting an Affordable Care Act Town Hall in conjunction with State Senator Richard Roth and Assemblyman Jose Medina on Saturday, August 24th at the Moreno Valley Convention and Recreation Center at 10:00am to illustrate the process and answer questions.

Americans need healthcare and deserve as many opportunities as can be provided. I hope you'll join me on August 24th to learn more about taking advantage of these new programs.

Making History... Again

Remember the March on Washington? August 28, 1963. Tens of thousands of activists on the National Mall. A preacher's son from Atlanta talking about his dream for the country.

We don't need a history lesson. Even if we weren't at the March itself - even for those like me, who were not yet born - Dr. King's words are etched into our minds as deeply as they are inscribed in stone at the base of his memorial. The preacher's son has taken his rightful place in the pantheon of national heroes.

We don't need to watch a rerun of that fateful day. We need a sequel.

On Saturday, August 24th, the NAACP is co-hosting a sequel to the March on Washington for Jobs and Justice: the 2013 March on Washington. The march begins at 8:00 am, at the steps of the Lincoln Memorial. Join us.

If this year has shown us anything, it's that the work of the 1963 march is not yet finished. Texas and South Carolina are sprinting forward with voter ID after the Supreme Court gutted the Voting Rights Act. African American unemployment has flat lined. Our children are gunned down each and every day in senseless acts of violence. Trayvon Martin lies in the ground after one such senseless act.

At the same time, our culture of civic engagement is experiencing a renaissance. In the past month, hundreds of cities held vigils and rallies to protest the Zimmerman verdict. The nation is having a serious conversation about racial profiling for the first time since 9/11. In North Carolina, Moral Mondays has grown larger with each passing week.

We have the numbers, and we have the capacity for motivation. The question is whether we will allow ourselves to be motivated.

So join us - NAACP, National Action Network, Realizing the Dream and others - on the National Mall on August 24th. If you live within two hours of Washington, DC, hop in a car or on a bus - or even better, organize a bus. If you live farther away, you are still encouraged to come and be a part of history.

The 2013 March on Washington will be a people's movement. It will not be fueled by cash - it will only be energized by your decision to participate. We need you there to help us gain a critical mass of voices, and prove once again that organized people can beat organized money any time.

On this fiftieth anniversary of the March on Washington, we should celebrate our history, but it's more important that we never stop making history.

Meet us at the Lincoln Memorial. Join us on August 24th.

Understand Lupus

Dear Dr. Levister: My sister was just diagnosed with lupus. What causes it and is it contagious?
G.F.

Dear G.F.: Lupus (its full medical name is Systemic lupus erythematosus) (SLE) is a mysterious illness. Although various aspects of it were described as far back as the 1840s and it was recognized as a systemic disease well over a century ago, the cause is still unknown and a cure is still elusive.

Like AIDS, lupus involves the immune system. There the similarity ends. Lupus is not transmissible from one individual to another; in no case has contagion even been suspected. In the majority of patients it does not prove fatal and the illness is essentially the opposite of AIDS.

Lupus is a chronic autoimmune disease, which causes inflammation of various parts of the body, especially the skin, joints and kidneys. It may also affect the blood. The immune system normally protects the body against viruses, bacteria and other foreign invaders. In an autoimmune disease like lupus, the immune system loses its ability to tell the difference between foreign substances and its own cells and tissues. The immune system then makes antibodies directed against the body itself.

When lupus first sets in, symptoms such as fatigue and pain are often non-specific. They can be signs of so many other health problems, which can make diagnosis hard. The most common complaint people have is fatigue that is so severe it stops them from being able to function normally. This fatigue is often related to fibromyalgia. Fever, muscle and joint pain are also quite common.

Sometimes people with lupus experience a "flare." This occurs when some symptoms appear or get worse for short periods then disappear or get better. Even if you take medicine for lupus, you may find that there are times when the symptoms become worse. Learning to recognize that a flare is coming can help you take steps to cope with it. Many people feel very tired or have pain, a rash, a fever, stomach discomfort, headache, or dizziness just before a flare.

It's estimated that more than 16,000 Americans develop lupus each year. More than 90 percent of people with lupus are women between the ages of 15 and 45.

In the United States, lupus is more common among African Americans, Asians, Hispanics, and Native Americans than Caucasians.

VOICE

After a Long Road, Has a Riverside Public Medical School

The UCR School of Medicine is designed to produce doctors specifically for this area, culturally diverse, and dedicated to primary care

Riverside

By Kris Lovekin – Special to the VOICE

An admiring crowd of 700 people cheered on the inaugural class of 50 students in UC Riverside's School of Medicine on Friday, Aug. 9. Each student slipped into the doctor's white coat, held by a faculty member, to mark the beginning of four years of hard work.

The live string quartet, floral arrangements, beautiful programs and colorful lights are not typical for UCR's Student Recreation Center -- the home court of UCR basketball -- but the campus needed its biggest room to fit the students, the families, the faculty and all the community supporters of this new kind of medical school, designed to increase the supply of primary care doctors practicing in the Inland Empire.

"I've been telling the students this is a once in a lifetime event, like the sighting of Haley's comet, said Kendrick A. Davis, director of medical education for the UCR School of Medicine. "It is rare that you are in the right spot and you can take advantage of it. It is beyond a milestone. You are talking about embarking on something that hasn't really been done, the way that we are doing it," he said. "Every person involved in this is a pioneer, so you have to be excited about it, and be willing to put in all the work to make this successful."

The mission of the UCR School of Medicine is to improve the health of the Inland Empire by producing culturally diverse primary care doctors who will stay and practice medicine in the area, which has a chronic shortage of doctors. UCR has had the first part of a medical school program for more than 30 years, but the students always finished their work at other medical schools, including UCLA. Now medical school students can stay to finish their M.D. UCR is also developing residency training programs in partnership with regional hospitals.

The effort to establish the school took a concerted community effort over many years, capped off recently with a state budget deal that included $15 million in annual funding, thanks to the successful advocacy of the Inland Empire Caucus, the Monday Morning Group and Inland Action.

"We are at the end of a long relay," said Dr. G. Richard Olds, the founding dean of the School of Medicine. "Each time we had a roadblock, our community doubled down on their effort. I want to thank everyone for that effort."

Five people earned honorary white coats for the heavy lifting in the last stretch of a 10-year long relay race: State Sen. Richard Roth; Assemblymember Jose Medina; Interim Chancellor Jane Close Conoley; and two leaders from the University of California Office of the President, Dan Dooley and Patrick Lenz.

The goal is a healthier California, at a time when Obama's Affordable Care Act is creating more opportunities to get medical insurance for the uninsured.

Olds thanked all the organizations and individuals who pulled together to create the mosaic of a medical school -- financial support, political will, hospital partnerships, professional accreditation, top faculty, students and staff, all following a clear mission.

URBAN FARMERS

in the INLAND EMPIRE Grow a $

Owner of Hickman Farms, George Hickman

George (Elder) Hickman began his career as an urban farmer in 1975, after retiring from the U.S. Air Force. He bought land in Bloomington, then a vineyard, before learning that the market for that kind of grapes was below the cost to grow them. In time he began to focus on gardening for the kinds of food his family enjoyed. Word spread, interest went up, orders for fresh southern-style foods flowed in, and people began calling or driving to Hickman Farms from the 'ebony enclaves' of Southern California to as far away as Las Vegas for organically grown, pesticide free, fresh fruits and vegetables.

Farming is hard work and subject to lots of risk. Times, tastes, and markets go up and down. At times in the past, Elder Hickman hired as many as 20 employees, now he has two employees who have been with him for many years, and are like family. His health is 'different' from when he began. He states that he may retire, eventually.

Ardess Lilly, well known in the Inland Empire from his work with the Conservation Corps and coordination of the 2010 U.S. Census campaign, has been urban farming since his early 1970s graduation from U C Riverside. Ardess, his son Jamal, and his wife Nova, in partnership with Hickman, plan expansion of the Bloomington farm and have applied for the acreage to be designated as an agricultural preserve, safe from the commercial development moving into the area. They also are exploring grant possibilities.

Subject to all the usual risks of nature such as storms, drought, flooding, heat, cold, and winds, organic farming also is subject to crop damage from insects not controlled by the use of pesticides. Things were fine until the delivery of manure fertilizer several years ago spread over their fields. This manure contained weeds that grow rapidly and choke off young, low-growing crops. Deeply rooted, these weeds must be hand pulled by those trained to know the weeds from the crops.

Nova occasionally has been able to recruit volunteers from youth, church, and civic organizations for a "Down to Earth" excursion to the farm. This past July, the San Francisco/Bayview Hunters Point community which operates urban farms as an employment development program, sent a van full of youth from Hunters Point Family (HPF) community development agency, to Hickman Farms and participated in helping pull weeds. However, news that a small gopher snake had just been found and removed from the area where they would work did not stimulate the girls' enthusiasm to dig in or get down with pulling weeds. Still, a couple rows of okra plants were cleared.

In preparation for market day, everyone is involved: harvesting, sorting, rinsing or washing, banding, bagging, or boxing the fruits and vegetables for delivery to customers or to farmers market locations. In order to regularize their business, KRSTMoor/Crestmore Produce Hickman Farms since 2006 has provided delivery of 30 pounds of selected seasonal organically grown fresh fruits and vegetables to customers, mainly in the Los Angeles, Leimert Park, and Crenshaw areas. They are ready to expand service to individuals, groups, and others in the Inland Empire.

Almost everyone who shops for fresh fruits and vegetables at the Crestmore Produce Market which meets every Saturday from 1:00 pm to 6:00 pm at the community center on Highland Avenue at Western arrives by auto. There they will find Ardess Lilly has opened his farmers market with tables, chairs, an awning, and a load of produce. For some customers, it's like a burger drive-thru, but most park, check out the sale items, and buy a bag or two, as others stay a while to visit or meet someone new.

“Ultimately, our strongest supporters have always been our community, individually and collectively,” he said. He noted the Riverside Chamber of Commerce, the California Medical Association, the Riverside County Board of Supervisors, the Desert Healthcare District, the Greater Riverside Hispanic Chamber of Commerce, the Citizens University Committee, the Vines Society, and the medical associations in Riverside and San Bernardino counties, among many others.

Friday’s ceremony served as a reminder about the role of doctors in our lives, the witness to our births and our deaths, our tragedies and our recoveries.

“We need to include the patient, as well as the families, in the decisions about their health,” said Dr. Phyllis A. Guze, the executive dean for the school and the keynote speaker at the ceremony. She told a story about her own hospitalization after an accident, and how many times she felt that the doctors were asking how she was, but not listening to her answer.

“But one of my physicians asked me what I thought, and listened,” Guze said. “He brought to me the human, personal touch, and I will be forever grateful. So I challenge you, as you start your career, to be the doctor that you want to go to, if you get sick.”

Janel Gracia, one of the members of the first class, said she was inspired. She said receiving her own coat “makes it feel 100 percent real.” She did her undergraduate work at UC Riverside and currently serves as a mentor in the outreach programs that build a pipeline of culturally diverse college students qualified to go to medical school. The week of orientation has convinced her that she made the right choice for medical school. “We are all becoming good friends,” she said. “In four years we will be best friends.”

Jaire Saunders, another member of the class, was surrounded by his parents and a brother who were beaming with pride as they talked about this new accomplishment in his life.

Gracia, Saunders, and all the members of the first class have what it takes to launch the school on the right foot, said Davis, who has a Ph.D. in educational psychology, and got to know the students during orientation. “I’m an evaluator, I’m the data guy for the UCR School of Medicine, for evaluation, measurement and assessment. “I was blown away,” he said. “I think they are a stellar class.”

Senator Norma Torres Visits Community Hospital of San Bernardino

Hospital tour includes “high tech high touch” demonstrations

San Bernardino

California State Senator Norma Torres (D-Pomona) visited Community Hospital of San Bernardino on July 30 to learn more about the facility, how state legislation and health policies impact the hospital and its patients, and to see demonstrations of the hospital’s innovative use of technology in patient care.

During the visit, Senator Torres, hospital senior leaders and board members toured Maternal Child Services which includes labor and delivery, couplet care and the neonatal intensive care unit (NICU). On average, over 2,100 babies are delivered annually at Community Hospital. Senator Torres viewed a demonstration of the hospital’s new obstetric birthing and newborn simulators and learned how together, they provide hands-on training for some of the most difficult situations that can arise during labor and delivery.

“We are very fortunate to have this technology available in the 32nd District. It was impressive to see how the advanced birthing and newborn simulators help the team practice working together in an emergency situation,” said Senator Torres.

Senator Torres also witnessed a demonstration of computerized physician order entry (CPOE), a key component of the Centers for Medicare and Medicaid Services Meaningful Use program that supports the adoption of electronic health record (EHR) technology, including the process of entering medication orders and other physician instructions electronically instead of on paper charts. “CPOE is more efficient and improves the coordination of patient care between providers, which helps our physicians make treatment decisions quickly and safely,” said June Collison, president, Community Hospital of San Bernardino.

“The demonstrations were great examples of how the innovative use of technology is making a difference in providing patient care for people in the Inland Empire,” said Senator Torres. “Here in the 32nd District, we are blessed to have hospitals like Community Hospital of San Bernardino that deliver exceptional health care,” she added.

“We sincerely appreciate that Senator Torres

Torres at CHSB Newborn Simulator1: Karen Bottom (far right), director of maternal services and pediatrics, demonstrates a newborn distress simulation on “Baby Hal” an advanced, full size, portable newborn mannequin simulator. took the time to allow us to share hospital successes as well as how we have improved quality with the use of technology, complementing our bedside care,” Collison added.

Proficiency Scores on Standardized Tests Show Mixed Results Countywide

San Bernardino

San Bernardino County students in grades from 2-11, as a whole, showed mixed results on the Standardized Testing and Reporting (STAR) program, according to data released today by the California Department of Education.

Countywide, the percentage of students scoring proficient or above increased in 13 grade level or subject matter indicators, maintained prior year’s growth in four indicators and saw nominal declines in 21 indicators.

“I remain impressed with the growth we have seen in the number of students scoring proficient and above on the STAR testing program over time,” County Superintendent Gary Thomas said. “Our staff and students have shown outstanding effort in meeting California’s rigorous standards, even through challenging budget times.

Countywide proficiency rates overall were slightly lower than state scores, however, statewide proficiency rates showed greater declines. English language arts proficiency levels were 52 percent for county students—the same as in 2012—versus 56 percent statewide. In math, county scores remained at 46 percent, trailing the state proficiency rate of 51 percent.

The STAR program consists of the California Standards Tests, which are given to California students each spring in grade levels 2-11 in the four core subject areas of English language arts, mathematics, history-social science and science. The State Board of Education has determined the level of “proficiency” as the achievement measure for all students.

This is the last year schools and districts statewide will likely receive any significant data from the STAR program. The 2014-15 school year will mark the implementation to new Common Core State Standards, which serve to deepen classroom instruction and student learning. A new computer-based assessment system will be used to assess students on higher level thinking skills, and college and career readiness.

County Superintendent

Full STAR results can be found on the California Department of Education (CDE) Website at <http://star.cde.ca.gov/star2013/index.aspx>.

Are you in the Zone – There is still time to save!

On June 25, 2013, the state legislature passed AB 93, which eliminates the current Enterprise Zone Program in California as of January 1, 2014. However, any credits earned through December 31, 2013, can be carried forward and utilized as needed for 10 years. The program has been eliminated, but there is still time to save!

The San Bernardino Valley Enterprise Zone (SBVEZ) is one of 40 enterprise zones established by the California Legislature and regulated by the Department of Housing and Community Development that provides tax incentives to businesses in distressed communities. The SBVEZ covers a 46 square mile area that includes the city of Colton, city of San Bernardino and portions of unincorporated San Bernardino County. Enterprise zones help businesses reduce their annual state income tax through a tax credit on a portion of wages paid to local workers and on the sales tax paid on eligible equipment purchases.

The Enterprise Zone Program consists of five State tax incentives; the most lucrative are the Hiring Credit and the Sales and Use Tax Credit.

Hiring Credit – Reduce workforce and training costs by expanding with local hires

The HIRING CREDIT rewards businesses for hiring and training local workers. A business can claim up to $37,440 for a single eligible worker for the first five years of employment. The credit allows you to claim a percentage of actual wages paid up to $12 per hour. Unused credit can be carried forward for 10 years.

Sample calculation

Based on a full time employee receiving $12* per hour, working a 40-hour work week and earning $24,960 in annual wages the credit for the five-year period is as follows:

Year 1	$12,480
Year 2	9,984
Year 3	7,488
Year 4	4,992
Year 5	2,486
Total	$37,440

*Credit is available for actual wages paid up to a maximum of $12 per hour. If wages paid are over $12 per hour, the maximum credit per hour that can be claimed is $12.

Sales & Use Tax Credit – Reduce capital costs and get more ROI

The SALES & USE TAX CREDIT rewards businesses for pro-growth capital investments made by businesses in the SBVEZ. Each year, corporations can claim up to $20 million of the sales or use tax paid or incurred to purchase “qualified equipment” that is located and used exclusively in the SBVEZ. Individuals, estates, trusts and partnerships can claim up to $1 million. Unused credit can be carried forward for 10 years.

Qualified property includes machinery and machinery parts used to:

- Manufacture, process, fabricate, or assemble a product
- Produce renewable energy resources (such as solar systems and smart lighting)
- Control air or water pollution
- Process data and communicate (computers, CAD systems, copy machines, telephone systems and faxes)

Sample calculation (Based on sales tax of 8%)

Manufacturing Machine

Net purchase cost	$150,000
CA sales tax paid	12,000

Amount sales tax credit $12,000

The SBVEZ has helped more than 200 small and large local businesses save more than $17 million in California state income tax. These savings have also allowed local companies to expand current business operations or begin new business ventures. Businesses currently participating in the SBVEZ include Global Environmental Products, Simpson Strong-Tie, Peppertree Distributors, Chaparral Motorsports, Restaurant Depot, Ashley Furniture and Hayden Industrial Products.

The San Bernardino Valley Enterprise Zone is hosting a business roundtable to provide business owners with the most current information about how they can receive these tax benefits while they are still available. Business owners large and small are encouraged to attend, as well as bankers, CPA's, real estate professionals and business organizations dedicated to saving taxpayer dollars and creating jobs in the inland region.

The SBVEZ roundtable will be held on Tuesday, August 20 at 9:00 a.m. at the Norton Regional Events Center located at 1601 E. 3rd Street in San Bernardino. The 1-hour discussion will begin with opening remarks from Mayor Patrick J. Morris. After the Roundtable, EZ experts will be available to discuss how the EZ tax benefits my benefit your business or client. Seating is limited, call 909.382.4538 or email sbvezmanager@gmail.com to reserve your seat today. For additional information on the EZ Program visit www.sbvez.com.

A “Beer” with...

Dr. Richard Olds, Dean of UCR’s School of Medicine

As told to Rickerby Hinds

A few days ago I had the opportunity to grab a beer with Dr. Richard Olds, Dean of UCR’s School of Medicine. It was the day after he had conducted the white coat ceremony welcoming the inaugural class of medical students to the campus.

On his journey to UC Riverside

People who know me kind of laugh when they see me in this job because they actually refer to this as a typical ‘Olds’ kind of job. And what they mean by that is if you knew my father and his background this is exactly the kind of jobs, often referred to as lost causes or impossible causes that he would take on.

On his father, Dr. Glenn Olds, and “lost causes”

He was not only first in his family ever to go to college, but his brothers were the only ones to ever graduate from high school. And he graduated valedictorian in a class of eight people in a little... practically three-room high school. He never would have even gone to college if he hadn’t been lucky. In those days the president of a little Methodist college, Williamette University would go around and listen to all these graduation speeches from all these little schools, and it must have been a great address because he walked up to my father afterwards and asked him, “what are you doing next year,” and my father said “I’m going to go work in the logging camps with my brothers and my father”... and he offered my dad a scholarship.

He ultimately graduated from that school, and went on to become an ordained Methodist minister, and then got a master’s at Northwestern and eventually a PhD at Yale.

The first of his, if you will, lost causes was his second presidency, he went to Kent State after the kids had been shot, which had to be like the worst presidency in the world, and he basically spent nine years rebuilding that university and bringing it back... and then he actually left Kent State because the Bishop of the Methodist church said ‘we have a problem I think you’re the only guy in the U.S. who can do this.’ There was a little private school in Alaska, called Alaska Methodist University, in Anchorage and it had been bankrupt and closed for seven years. He raised $125 million, made it nonsectarian, re-named it Alaska Pacific University and basically re-built that school.

On why the UCR position

Remember, I’m a tropical disease specialist so I spend most of my life in third world countries, and I see what people can do with no money but a strong commitment on the part of those communities to do something worthwhile.

I had been looking for dean’s jobs and most of the existing dean’s jobs were okay, but you were coming in taking over an existing structure where pretty much everything was set, and the advantage of this one (UCR) is that the missions of the school were missions that I personally believed in. But interestingly enough I didn’t think they had figured out how to deliver the missions, and I started thinking about things that I had seen work in third world countries quite frankly, and I said, you know you can solve this problem, but the way you’re thinking is wrong.

I think in part because this was a job that looked pretty risky, in part because I thought I had some ideas that I thought would work, but I probably couldn’t convince traditional places that this was the direction to go in. I certainly couldn’t tell them these were ideas that worked in third world countries so they ought to work here. And although it was a high-risk job, I guess this was an ‘Olds’ kind of job it turned out. And it actually turned out more high-risk than I had thought. But, that’s really why I came here.

On fulfilling the missions

Remember, no matter what your plan is you have to be able to adjust it if it doesn’t work. The tricky part is now we have to deliver. We’ve got a little money, we got the damn thing open, we’ve got a whole lot of support, but now we have to deliver. And if we’re going to deliver we cannot be wedded to our great ideas that we can’t recognize that this isn’t working and come up with another plan... obviously I believe these ideas will work, but if they don’t we must immediately say ‘this isn’t working let’s try something different.’

I think the basic med school is going to be okay, I think our missions are great, I think we have a good plan.
