The California State University has announced Timothy P. White as chancellor, who will overlook all 23 campuses.

Timothy P. White will become the California State University system’s seventh chancellor after current chancellor Charles Reed retires at the end of the year.

The announcement was made Thursday, Oct. 4, 2012 during a closed meeting in the chancellor’s office in Long Beach, according to the California Faculty Association website.

White is currently the chancellor of UC Riverside and has been there since 2008.

“It’s a very important day in my life personally. It’s a day when I double down on my commitment to the state of California,” said White in a press conference. “It’s a nice chance for me to give back to this great state,” continued White.

The CSU is the largest system of higher education in the United States, with a total of 23 campuses all over California. The campuses will be under White’s supervision starting late December.

White will keep Reed’s salary of $421,500 annually plus a $30,000 supplement from CSU Foundation sources, as well as the standard benefits package for CSU employees, according to the San Francisco Chronicle.

White was originally born in Argentina. He moved to California at a very young age and was the first to attend college in his family, receiving his baccalaureate at Fresno State University, his Master’s at Cal State East Bay and his doctorate at UC Berkeley.

“Tim has experienced firsthand the powerful impact of higher education, and has the leadership qualities to guide the system through these fiscally challenging times,” said CSU trustee Bill Hauck.

California Faculty Association President Lillian Taiz commented on the CFA website that they are eager to work with the new chancellor.
CSUSB gets Military Friendly School award

By MARIA AGUILAR

CSUSB has been placed on the Military Friendly Schools list by G.I. Jobs Magazine for 2013. This list contains the top 15 percent of colleges, universities and trade/vocational schools in the nation who offer programs and services important to the military community, according to G.I.jobs.com.

The Military Friendly Schools Academic Advisory Board Members evaluate the schools based on their veteran-student support, flexibility, academic accreditation and tuition discounts to name a few.

“The competition for our 2013 Military Friendly Schools list was fierce and as a result we raised the already stringent criteria to a higher benchmark,” said Rich McCormack, G.I. Jobs publisher, on G.I.jobs.com.

As of May 25 Veterans on campus can seek guidance and have their questions answered at the Veterans Success Center.

The center has assisted 1,053 people to date with inquiries about benefits, enrollment as new students, transfer students, spousal benefits and more.

“We really try to advocate for our Veterans. We make sure students have resources available to be successful,” said Marci Daniels, the Veterans Success Coordinator.

This quarter, CSUSB has approximately 700 veterans, active military and dependents enrolled on campus.

Rhenigold speak at ‘Literacy by Design’

By MANAL MUSETEF
Assistant A&E Editor

Attention Communication majors looking for a push in the right direction. We’ve got a force you’re sure to appreciate.

Join us on Oct. 18 from 1-3:30 p.m. in the Obersaw Dining Room as part of the TRC year-long series “Literacy by Design.”

To kick off the accumulation of presentations, CSUSB is proud to invite digital media enthusiast and acclaimed Journalism Professor Howard Rheingold of Stanford University to deliver a public lecture.

Rheingold is a TED (Technology, Entertainment and Design) speaker and the author of “Net Smart: How to Thrive Online” as well as “Tools For Thought.” To many, his work has presaged the social media revolution and presaged its uses in education.

Rheingold will outline fundamental digital literacies.

The class will also describe the qualities of participation that empowers the online community.

If you are interested in the world of online journalism and digital media this is an event you won’t want to miss.
Gas prices make it a pain at the pump

By BRENDA ACUNA

The Commerce Department announced Sept. 28 that U.S. consumer spending has reached its highest mark in six months, thanks in large part to higher gas prices.

According to the government report, consumer spending rose from 0.5 percent in August from July and had risen 0.4 percent in July, making it the largest jump since February.

“The U.S. personal income and spending data for August are worse than the headline figures suggest and indicate that subdued jobs growth is hitting incomes,” said Paul Dales, a secondary indicator that subdued jobs growth is hitting incomes,” said Paul Dales, a senior economist with Capital Economics. The increase, “was largely due to extra spending caused by the surge in gasoline prices.”

Despite the increase in consumer spending, Americans’ personal income has only grown 0.1 percent. After tax deductions and inflation, income has actually decreased 0.3 percent; the poorest performance since last November, according to reports from DailyFinance.com.

High unemployment, in conjunction with weak wage growth, has hindered Americans from saving money. Economic researchers believe that Americans are rummaging through their saving accounts to make ends meet.

A report from the Consumer Department shows that savings rates fell to 3.7 percent of after-tax income after reaching 4.1 percent the month before.

Consumer spending accounts for nearly 70 percent of economic activity. Although Americans are spending more due to higher gas prices, this does not necessarily imply that it is improving the state of the economy.

Last month, the U.S. Census Bureau reported that consumers spent 0.9 percent more in retail businesses in August from July. However, the report shows that retail rose only 0.1 percent since the impact of gas prices is excluded.

The government report also showed that Americans reduced their consumption of electronics and clothing.

Economists report that Americans are reluctant to spend as a result of higher gas prices. “Consumers were not willing to spend much at the mall since they are feeling the pump price pinch,” said Chris Christopher, an economist at IHS Global Insight.

The hike in gas price is also affecting college students as they commute to and from campus. The highest recorded average price of gas in June 2008 was at $4.61.

As higher unemployment rates rise same goes for gas prices going up in the past six months, which is really affecting college students as they commute to and from campus. The highest recorded average price of gas in June 2008 was at $4.61.

The hike in gas price is also affecting college students as they commute regularly to campus. “All my money is going to gas,” said incoming CSUSB freshman Misty Landeros. “It’s crazy! I paid $4.29 to gas,” said incoming CSUSB freshman Misty Landeros. “It’s crazy! I paid $4.29 per gallon today. It’s making me broke!”

On Oct. 3, the average price of a gallon of regular gas in the San Bernardino-Riverside area was $4.20, up from $4.16 a week earlier, according to AAA’s Daily Fuel Gauge Report. The average cost of gas was $3.82 exactly one year ago.

As of Oct. 4, gas prices are reaching an all-time high. “This is the first time in 12 years that the price of gasoline rises 20 cents in just one day,” said Sanka Wickramaratne, a manager at the local AmPm on Palm Ave. in San Bernardino. “On Monday gas was $3.99. Wednesday, it rose to $4.21 and today [Thursday] it is $4.41 for regular gas,” continued Wickramaratne.

The rapid increase in gas prices is due in large part to a supply issue fueled by refinery and pipeline outages. Gas prices are also high across America with an average of $3.78 a gallon. California is the most affected as inventories are lower than they have been in more than 10 years.

Analysts had reported in 2011 that gas prices would reach a record high in 2012. The highest recorded average price of gas was $4.614 in June 2008.

On Oct. 4 the highest price recorded was $4.69, making it the highest average in California to date. Prices are expected to increase within the coming weeks.

Due to resulting injuries and accidents on Highway 18, nine new highway signs are being installed, instructing drivers to turn their headlights on during the day. This section of road starts at the Crestline Cut-off and continues until the Big Bear Dam.

The plan for the new signs was put in place after local residents expressed their safety concerns for the highway at a community meeting last year. Present at the meeting was Caltrans, a state agency responsible for highway, bridge and rail transportation planning, construction and maintenance.

“Some people brought this idea up to our panel members and our staff while we were there,” said Terri Kasanga, Caltrans spokeswoman, according to SBSun.com. Caltrans officials discovered there had been more than 300 crashes between early 2009 and early 2011 along Highway 18, 130 resulting in injury.

There were 228 crashes that occurred during the day in that period.

“The 18 is the worst. Sometimes you can’t see 10 feet in front of you because the clouds roll up there,” said Melissa Moreno, student and local resident. “It gets so dense.”

However, student Alfred Gutierrez has a different view, “I don’t see how putting on headlights would improve vision if it’s daylight outside,” said Gutierrez.

This is not the first daylight headlight section in the area. There are several others already in place around Southern California, including a section of the 15 freeway near Barstow and another section of Highway 138 west of the 15 closer to Palmdale.

Police will be on high alert at this section of road starting Nov. 1 pulling over drivers who are not falling into line regarding the new policy. Instead of issuing tickets, they will be informing them of the new law and enforcing the importance. Motorists will be given leniency allowing them to become accustomed to the new guidelines.

“For 30 days officers will be giving people verbal warnings, giving people some fudge room,” said Benjamin Baker, a CHP officer. “October will be a grace period,” continued Baker.

Starting Dec. 1 tickets will start to be written citing section 21461(a) of the California Vehicle Code which states, “It is unlawful for a driver of a vehicle to fail to obey a sign or signal.” Penalty fines could end up costing drivers as much as $350.

Some students brought up questions regarding draining battery life.

“Sounds like a good idea. You can see a car better with its headlights on. It’s safer,” said Rangel.

There are several way to drain a car’s battery, driving with your headlights on; however, is not one of them, according to eHow.com.

As long as you drive for longer than 20 minutes at a time it will not kill your battery. This gives the alternator time to recharge the battery. Over the long term, repeated short-distance driving can shorten the expected life of a car battery, which typically should be from three to five years.

CSUSB student Geo Rangel is for the new plan. “Sounds like a good idea. You can see a car better with its headlights on. It’s safer,” said Rangel.

Scholarship Myths

Myth #1

Scholarships are only for economically challenged people.

This statement is not true. Numerous scholarship applications don’t require financial information. In addition to that, you need to find out what their definition of economically challenged is. It may be a big surprise to you that you fit within the guidelines they require for this. If you don’t find out, you may be forfeiting money. If they have financial requirements they are usually listed on the application itself. If this is not the case, I suggest giving them a call or visit their website.

Myth #2

Scholarships are only for people who have good or excellent grades.

This is the one myth that almost everyone believes. As I have mentioned, there are scholarships that are only available to this population, but there are just as many, that are not. If you fit in this category, make certain that you mention all scholastic honors and awards you have received up to this point in your education. A word of warning, you will also want the scholarship committee to relate to other aspects of your character besides intelligence. This will give them a more rounded view of you as a person, and help to ensure that you make that essential personal connection.
It’s time to step up that ‘Yote pride hat do USC and UCLA have in common besides residing in California and astronomical tuition fees?

By MEGAN DAVIS

Two words: school pride.

You can see students of these universities practically bleeding the colors of their institutions and showing up by the thousands to their school functions, specifically anything that involves a field or a court.

So why is it that compared to these schools, our own CSUSB is seems to fall so short in school spirit?

Some may say it is because we do not top the lists of best party schools or possibly, because we are a commuter school and not too many people stick around campus after class.

Those statements would be true, but here’s some news for you fellow Coyotes.

This school has the academic potential and the resources that should make students not only excited to come here, but proud as well.

Recently, U.S. News ranked us nationally in the list of top public schools, weighing us in at a respectable number 17.

For this reason alone, students are in dire need of some amped up, rejuvenated school pride.

So what is the key to gaining school pride? The answer is simple: get involved!

There are countless clubs and organizations here on campus that serve a variety of different interests. These range from academic clubs to athletic clubs to religious clubs to sororities and fraternities and school teams.

“Really the possibilities are endless. After going here for a year I have found there is always an event going on, and there is really something for everybody,” said Veronica Daniel, a peer health educator for the Student Health Center.

Being involved with our school is what will enable you to connect more with fellow students and create that unforgettable college experience everyone strives to have.

“As soon as I came to CSUSB I wanted to feel a connection to everyone. I wanted to get involved so I could not only succeed but also be a part of something greater,” said student Nahal Hosseini, a new-found sister of the Kappa Delta sorority on campus.

Our school even hosts a National Exchange program, which hosts 20 to 30 students at a time from all across the nation.

“The people here have been so nice and the professors have been great. I’m so happy with my decision to come here,” said student Katrina Mahaney of Worcester State University in Massachusetts.

Even if you choose not to get involved in a specific organization yourself, there are still many events put on by the students that you could attend. There are games you could go to with a group of friends (like our fantastic volleyball team) and a state of the art recreational center complete with hip-hop classes and a rock wall.

“Really the possibilities are endless,” said student Jenny Stone.

So why is it that compared to these schools, not too many people stick around campus probably, because we are a commuter school and we lack a notorious sports team or, possibly, so short in school spirit?

There are games you could go to with a group of friends (like our fantastic volleyball team) and a state of the art recreational center complete with hip-hop classes and a rock wall.

The truth of the matter is our school can only be as good as the student body chooses to make it.

So no, we do not live on the beach and no, we don’t have a football team that is televised every Saturday.

But we do have a student body that is capable of banding together to say we come from San Bernardino.

This is our home and we should be proud to rep a little black and blue.

Majoring in what you love is no longer enough

By MELISSA O’BECK

School is not a career, it is the training grounds for a career.

With unemployment rates at a devastating 7.4 percent, it is time that college students start strategically choosing their majors not only for the passion, but for the opportunity for a career.

In an era where degrees are a dime a dozen, the stakes have been raised and going to college is no longer the ticket. It is simply just a passport.

Students need to understand where their major’s career path will end up. While some job markets are dying, others are flourishing.

According to USA Today, “49 percent of employees are having difficulty hiring — particularly in math and science, high-tech jobs, manufacturing and mechanics. The jobs are there, the education is not.”

Practically none of the not very student will want to major in math or science.

Not every student has a desire or interest in these fields.

“I definitely think you should go to school for what you are passionate about,” said student Jenny Stone.

“Four years of college is a lot more bearable when you are studying what you are passionate about, versus studying a major where the only goal is a bigger paycheck. They say you never work a day in your life if you do what you love.” However, if you don’t choose your major properly, you may never work a day in your life if you do what you love.

There are cheaper ways to follow your passion than to spend 50k plus on a piece of paper that in no way entitles you to a career.

If you do not choose a major that can benefit your future, after graduation your phone will not ring and there will be no paycheck of any sort to collect.

There are cheaper ways to follow your passion than to spend 50k plus on a piece of paper that in no way entitles you to a career.

Doing what you’re passionate about is important, but should not be the only factor in choosing a major.

If it was, then there would not be so many college graduates still serving at the local eatery or making your lattes and frappuccinos every morning at Starbucks.

The Bureau of Labor Statistics has claimed that 3.7 million employers across the United States still have “Help Wanted” signs posted looking for qualified workers.

I think these corporations and business leaders need to get involved in the reform of higher education by offering programs and schooling to workers out of their own badgets.

Doing so will help workers learn the specific skills these companies need.

They need to point out to students that there are actual structured requirements for those jobs.

Students, educators and business leaders need to band together and enforce the fact that there is accurate and attainable information about which job markets are hiring.

While others continue on the passion route, this will help the students who are actually looking for the opportunity to be successful.

Let immigrants drive, but fin aid should go to citizens

A new law granting illegal immigrants the right to obtain driver’s licenses has left some wondering if the state will grant them further privileges.

Let immigrants drive, but financial aid should go to citizens

By STEPHANIE “LILO” MADRIGAL
Staff Writer

If giving illegal immigrants a California driver’s license benefits me, then I am all in.

But if giving illegal immigrants more privileges start taking away my opportunities, such as financial aid, then I have a problem.

Gov. Jerry Brown signed a new law under an Obama Administration policy that gives non-citizens, who are eligible for work permits, the right to be granted a California driver’s license.

"President Obama has recognized the unique status of these students, and making them eligible to apply for driver’s licenses is an obvious next step," said Brown spokesman Gil Duran to the Christian Science Monitor.

According to immigration. procon.org, the only argument against this law is that these students are not legal citizens.

Not much of an argument, I would say.

“I think it is fair because they are here working and possibly driving illegally and they are not taking anyone’s money, so it doesn’t bother me," said student Kristina Beltran.

Personally, I think this will benefit citizens more.

Immigrants are and will continue to drive whether it’s legal or not, so we might as well make it legal to avoid further complications.

Obtaining a driver’s license can help non-citizens insure their cars.

Therefore, when involved in an accident, insured citizens will not be suffering in debt.

Call me selfish, but I am okay with giving them an opportunity that benefits me.

I’m not bothered by the driver’s license issue because it will benefit me, however, illegal immigrants receiving financial aid does.

Most student jobs available on the CSUSB campus require the applicants be eligible for work-study.

However, the thought of illegal immigrants being granted funds and work-study is troubling.

“I think they should receive financial aid because they have been in America for a significant amount of time, however I do feel like there should be regulations," said student Monique Torres.

I would be more satisfied with seeing all the less-privileged citizens attending CSUSB receive aid before illegal immigrants.

“The (finance) department says that 2,500 students would qualify for aid under the bill and estimates the costs to equal $14.5 million of a $1.4 billion program," Foxnews.com stated in 2011.

$14.5 million going to just illegal immigrants? I do not like the sound or look of that.

I strongly stand by my word when I say I do not agree with immigrants receiving government aid when citizens are not receiving any or less money.

If illegal students really want their driver’s license or help with college expenses, then I believe there should be strict criteria in place that would help determine who really deserves these privileges.

I believe that illegal immigrants should know and abide by the laws, read and write English and pass a test proving their desire to make our country a better place.

If these requirements were in place, then I would feel better granting them privileges that legal citizens enjoy.

Memes guy shows the soul of school spirit

By AMANDA WIGLEY

Introducing Michael Diaz! Better known to most CSUSB students as “the Memes Guy.”

Diaz is an Advertising Management Major and the brains behind the popular CSUSBMemes Facebook page.

He defines memes as “a cultural inside joke that takes the form of pictures with words on them that people can relate to. It might sound simple but they actually follow a pattern, a pattern that for one reason or another is understood by my generation.”

Diaz says he grew an interest in memes because of the unique humor they offer to our generation and he understands them. His decision to make a CSUSBMemes Facebook page began in February of this year when he realized that several universities had meme Facebook pages but CSUSB did not. He took action and made one.

He invited a handful of his friends to like the CSUSBMemes Facebook page and, over night, he had nearly 90 likes.

The success of the page quickly grew to 1,000 likes and before Diaz knew it, his page was the most liked Facebook page out of all the CSUSB campus organizations.

The CSUSBMemes Facebook page recently passed the Rec Sports page by 300 more likes which held the number one spot for quite some time.

Diaz feels his page was able to become successful by word of mouth and by attracting students to the memes table he sets up during campus social events, like Late Night with Rec Sports.

Based on a survey from his CSUSBMemes page, most students consider the memes page to be looked at as the “heart and soul of school spirit.”

Many other Universities with memes Facebook pages have lost it’s hype, but the CSUSBMemes page is still alive, strong and does not show any signs of losing its momentum.

With the success and growth of the campus’ memes page, Diaz decided to make an Instagram account, csusbcoyote.

Followers are able to see daily photos of the campus’ memes page, Diaz decided to make an Instagram account, csusbcoyote. Followers are able to see daily photos of the little stuffed coyote mascot, recognized by his Facebook followers who have seen his memes.

Diaz will be graduating this December, therefore the page will have to be passed on to someone else.

He said he still plans on being in charge of the Facebook page, but he will have a trustworthy student to take over as an administrator of the page and help keep it a fun part of campus life.

He hopes to work in the advertising field of social media after graduation and incorporate memes in his future endeavors, although he is aware he cannot make a living off them.

The CSUSBMemes Facebook page is reliant on its followers and as long as students keep following, the page will continue to thrive.

So for now, the current 2,746 people that like the page can continue to relate to the comical CSUSB-related posts, and the “memes guy” can continue his love of making them.

Group X says get healthy

Shanieka Perrier, attendee of the Cycle Fit class said, “I love that I’m sweating a lot. When I sweat I know that I’m losing weight. Being in this class motivates me to get into shape.”

The Rec Sports Center has recently acquired 14 brand new spin bikes guaranteed to make you sweat!

Next up was the Yogilates class. Yogilates, what is that? It’s a combination of Yoga and Pilates aimed at focusing on attracting students to the memes page he recently passed the Rec Sports page by 300 more likes which held the number one spot for quite some time.

The instructors are there for their students to place them on the path to a healthier lifestyle. Improve your spiritual and physical wellness today by taking a class or two at the SRFC, where everyone is welcome.

Entering the Greek social life

Natalie Cleary is in charge of all Greek life to make sure that each fraternity and sorority follows the recruitment rules on campus.

Sororities go through a formal process of recruitment. A carnival is held so the young women may explore each sorority with a few members representing each.

Events that follow include an information night for parents to further understand Greek life, open house and a Philanthropy Night where all the girls are introduced and philanthropies are explained. Each sorority donates, volunteers, and hosts events for their cause throughout the year.

On the final day, known as Preference or Bid Day, the girls get to choose the top two sororities in which they prefer to join. By the end of the day, decisions are made and the sisters from each sorority issue out bids to the girls.

Fraternities and sororities may have different processes of handling recruitment, but both work together to help each other and focus on each philanthropy.

The Greek life can be a social life that can provide opportunity to build good relationships between the campus and the individual. But one will never know if the Greek life is for them unless they test the waters.

ow that the school year has started, some students may start to feel over-whelmed by the amount of homework, readings and quizzes that are added on to classes.

Here are some tips that can help you manage your stress.

You can also practice some relaxation techniques when you feel too much pressure like meditation and breathing exercises, which can help clear your mind.

Finally, knowing the source of your stress can help you to have a better idea on what strategy will be the best to deal with it.

And remember, everyone copes differently with stress. So if listening to music, playing Scrabble or drinking a good cup of tea is your thing and makes you feel good and relaxed, then continue doing it. It is really important to take a moment to stay focused.

Los Angeles Auto Show will debut Nov. 30. Before visiting California, au-tomakers are all at the 2012 Paris Motor Show in France to unveil their latest models to the public.

Every two years, automakers bring their latest production and concept cars to Paris to show them to the public and to car journalists from all over the world.

Like in America back in 2009, the European auto industry is going downhill. However, despite the crisis, many new models have been revealed for the Euro-penan market.

Since the Paris Motor Show is an international show, the curtain has unveiled a couple of models that will make their debut on our side of the globe next year.

Ford presented an updated version of its popular subcompact, the Fiesta. The 2014 version adopts the blue oval new global design language – borrowing front-end design cues from the latest Ford Fu-sion.

Fuel economy being an important thing for Ford, the Fiesta will get an all-new fuel-efficient 1.0-liter three-cylinder EcoBoost engine of 99 horsepower. This small engine is supposed to get the best fuel economy in its category.

Japanese automotive manufacturer Mazda revealed the all-new Mazda6 family – a sedan and a wagon. Both models are packing a fluid and sexy look, inspired by the 2011 Takari concept car.

For 2014, the Mazda6 gets the latest fuel-efficient Skyactiv engines. A diesel engine is also on the map, but speculation is still up in the air if either or not an oil-burning option will be offered in the States.

The new Mazda6 will be a strong competitor in the mid-size segment among the Toyota Camry, Honda Accord and Ford Fusion.

Another major unveiling of the show was the seventh-generation Volkswagen Golf, which is 220 pounds lighter than its predecessor – thanks to the new Modular Querbaukasten (MQB) platform.

As an iconic car, the Golf keeps is traditional design, but with subtle changes that make it more aggressive and sportier than the outgoing model.

The new Volkswagen is also longer, lower and wider. It also has shown a prototype of the Golf GTI, which is supposed to have more power than the current generation while being more fuel-efficient.

One of the stars of the Paris Motor Show was the much anticipated Jaguar F-Type, a stunning sports car from every angle.

Without being a retro-retread, the F-Type truly shows Jaguar unique sports car DNA. We can feel the heritage of the leg-endar design, but with subtle changes that make it more aggressive and sportier than the outgoing model.

The Paris Motor Show will end Oct. 14. By then, be sure not to miss out on the Los Angeles Auto Show, where there are more than 40 new models which will make their debut.

Jaguar designer Ian Callum shows off the new supercharged V6 and V8 500 horsepower stunner, the Jaguar F-Type at the Paris Motor Show. More than 40 beauties like this fancy Jaguar will be showcase on Nov. 30 at the Los Angeles Auto Show.
The concert was certainly a success for the band, but also for CSUSB through the help of the Director of the Coussoulis Arena and the Underground Music Society (UMS) which put together the event for the community.

"Best Coast really lived up the crowd, with nice melodies to dance to the whole night," said Nancy Artes of the UMS.

Even within the massive Coussoulis Arena, Best Coast managed to connect to Coyotes and played their set with a sense of intimacy. The concert was well worth attending, if not for only the experience. Creating an environment is key at a show and they nailed it.

Beth and Bobb bring the beach to Berdoo
By MARISSA MOONEY
Asst. A&E Editor

Bethany Cosentino: I moved to New York for a short period of time and that’s kinda what reinstated my love for California, was leaving and coming back to it. But I would probably never move.

CC: What are some of the similarities and differences between Crazy For You and The Only Place?

Bethany: Well, the biggest difference is production quality. The Only Place is a lot more produced sounding. And the similarities are that the songs are a lot poppy. The way that I wrote was very similar and nothing really changed, nothing drastically different.

CC: I did an album review on just this last album (The Only Place) that dropped in May and I loved it, it was really good. Do you have any favorite TV shows?

Bethany: I love TV, I can’t even think of what TV shows I like. We watch the same thing, we like Showtime and HBO. “Sopranos,” “Homeland,” “American Horror Story.”

CC: Ahh, are you guys excited for that to come back on?

Bethany: Oh yeah, so excited!

CC: I noticed you both already ate, but what do you guys like to eat pre-show or afterwards?

Bethany: I don’t like to eat a lot before we play because I get really bloated. But there is nothing better than eating just shitty junk food after you play a show especially when you are on tour, there is nothing like it.

CC: What about your tour? You just announced some dates?

Bethany: We are going on tour with Green Day.

CC: Awesome. If you are having a bad day, which everyone does, what do you like to listen to?

Bethany: Ummm...Fleetwood Mac, Neil Young even though he kinda makes me depressed. Sometimes there is something nice about being depressed while listening to depressing music.

CC: I saw your performance with Kendrick Lamar. How was that? Did you enjoy working with him?

Bethany: Yeah that was really fun to do. I think he is super talented and he is another awesome L.A. artist. So that was a really fun thing just to get to make with him and he was super nice.

CC: Are there any hobbies you like to do outside of making music?

Bethany: I love cooking.

CC: Cooking, yeah? What’s your favorite dish to cook?

Bethany: I like to make salmon with kale and tomato and garlic, a very simple dish and sometimes a gluten-free pasta.

CC: That sounds delicious! One last thing, what would you say to CSUSB students who are seeing you perform tonight, like a little encouragement about school.

Bethany: For me it is kinda like if something is important to you just work really hard at it and don’t give up. You can kinda make anything happen, we sorts proved that by doing just that. Without one of us [points to Bobb Bruno] being here, we wouldn’t be doing this. So it is definitely achievable if you just work really hard and keep your mind to something you can definitely achieve it. So that’s my cheesy valedictorian speech.

CC: Have a great show!
Flying Lotus sends us on a cosmic trip

After Steven Ellison’s third 2010 album release Cosmogramma, the artist better known as Flying Lotus has finally released his fourth highly anticipated album, Until the Quiet Comes.

Being a Los Angeles native and the great nephew of Jazz musicians Alice and John Coltrane, with influences such as Dre and J Dilla, Flying Lotus inevitably developed an impeccably unique sound that lead him to becoming one of the founders of the electronic and African percussion are used by abstracting a collage of multiple genres creating a psychedelic, euphoric feel.

FlyLo fans - brace yourselves. Looking back to his previous masterpieces, we tend to expect the same, if not more. "Twists and Turns" is set to open its doors Nov. 9. "Twists and Turns" is a tour-ing production and will be visiting various middle schools and high schools in the Inland Empire. It will open at the Barnes Theatre on Nov. 29.

"Hay Fever," written by Noel Coward, tells the story of an awkward family meet-up at a country estate. "Noel Cowards’ witty and precise comedy of bad manners follows the antics of the family, as they entertain their guests, carry on their affairs, and attempt to eat a single meal without fighting," states the Theatre Arts website.

"It’s a very slapstick comedy with very smart, intelligent wit in the writing. For me at least that makes it a very good well rounded comedy," said Gren. "Hay Fe-ver" opens March 8, 2013.

The popular eight-time Tony Award-winning musical "Hair-spray" will also come this year. Opening May 31, 2013, the musical follows Tracy Turnblad as she becomes an instant local star in the 1960s. This rendition is an adaptation of John Waters’ 1988 film Hairspray.

For this production, the Theatre Arts Department will have a live orchestra, including the Music Department.

"I expect it to be a very good, exciting, riveting season," said Gren. "We have an incredible mix of newer works and more established works."

For more information about the Theatre Arts Department, ticket sales and hours visit theatre.csusb.edu or call (909) 537- 5884.

Flying Lotus envelopes us in a euphoric trance of trippy melodies and lyrics with his new album Until the Quiet Comes.
The CSUSB Music Department has a busy schedule this year as it prepares for a variety of events that are sure to fulfill many musical tastes. Whether you like jazz, opera or classical music, the department’s events will feature students, faculty and professional musicians.

“We do a lot of events,” said Music Department Chair Todd Johnson.

The next music department production is the CMS Small Ensemble event on Oct. 22 at 7:30 p.m. Admission prices for the event are $6 for students, $9 for seniors, staff and faculty and $11 for the general public and earnings will go towards a scholarship within the music department.

Not every event requires paid admission. Throughout each quarter the department hosts free admission events featuring professional musicians on Tuesdays and student performances on Thursdays.

The next Tuesday show on Oct. 26 will feature “White Fort Duo,” whose two members play what some may call classical music with a twist as it features electric guitar and electric violin.

“This is definitely a show that the more broad student population might enjoy,” said Johnson.

“Expect to have lots of fun, lots of dancing and listening to some good music.”

Dr. Robert Knop
Jazz Ensemble Director

Also coming up is the CSUSB Jazz Ensemble’s 2nd annual Latin event, “Caliente,” that will not only feature salsa, Latin jazz, live music and a DJ but dancing lessons as well.

“Expect to have lots of fun, lots of dancing and listen to some good music,” said Dr. Robert Knop, the Jazz Ensemble director. “We had this event last year and it was a big success.”

“Caliente” is set for Nov. 8 and the cost of admission is $11 for students, $13 for seniors/faculty and staff and $17 for general admission. Dancing lessons will begin at 6:30 p.m. with live music following at 7:30 p.m.

Coming up on Nov. 27 is the Fall Showcase which will feature some of the top faculty professional musicians and later the Winter Showcase which will include top faculty professional musicians along with top student musicians.

“The Winter Showcase allows us to put the faculty and students on the same level,” said Johnson.

As far as a Christmas production, nothing is set yet, but Knop and Marketing and Public Affairs Specialist Diana Reyes recommend to stay tuned as something may be in the works.

The big event set for Spring 2013 is a collaborative production between the Music and Theater Departments in their rendition of the comedy-musical, “Hairspray.” “Hairspray” includes 1960s style music and is the story of a young Tracy Turnblad, a girl who wishes to appear on the popular dance show, “The Corny Collins Show.” When Tracy gets a chance to dance on the show she sets out to integrate it.

“I think it will be a really enjoyable performance and a really cool production,” said Johnson.

There are many more events within the Music Department planned for this year which can be found on the CSUSB Music Department page at music.csusb.edu, as well as on the department’s Facebook and Twitter pages.
Aussie rockers impress with new album

By ERICKA RUIZ  Staff Writer

Aussie psychedelic rock band Tame Impala is back to introduce their sophomore album, Lonerism, on Oct. 9. The band is composed of five talented members: Kevin Parker on lead guitar and vocals, Jay Watson on drums, Dominic Simper on synthesizer, Nick Allbrook on bass and newest member Julien Barbagallo on backing vocals.

Their music is a mixture of psychedelic rock and indie rock with an almost dream-like mantra. Tame Impala wants to be considered, “A steady dream-like mantra. Tame Impala wants to create a tru- mphetamine rock and indie rock band that emphasizes a dream like melody,” according to todayonline.com.

In 2010 when Tame Impala’s first album, Innerspeaker came out, “It received numerous awards, both home and abroad and was even named a Rolling Stone album of 2010,” according to Quietus.com. With so much success from their first album, the band has a high expectancy to follow through for their fans.

The production of the album took place in Paris, France and one of the songs was given a French name, “Endors Toi,” meaning “go to sleep.”

The beginning of the album starts with a song named “Gotta Be Above It.” Unfortunately, the first song was truly disappointing because of its weak start. In the first couple of seconds on the track, I enjoyed the vocals whispering “Gotta be above it, Gotta be above it...” but after hearing it continuously throughout the whole track, it became very disturbing and pointless.

With the release date scheduled, Lon- erism has had a couple of singles for the public to preview. The album features twelve tracks, and their first single “Elephant,” was out this past July. “Elephant,” is by far a true single and an album favorite.

The beats in “Elephant” features drums that realistically sound like an elephant is stomping towards the listener. Lyrics for the song are minimal, but they make sense and are easy to follow. “Shak- ing his big trunk strong, for the hell of it,” refers to someone with a big, strong and confident ego.

Another song that was recently released and enjoyable to the ears was, “Apocalypse Dreams.” This song is created by beats that intermingle with each other, creating an illusion as if you were dreaming. The lyrics in the song seem like the narrator is in a relationship with a girl, but it’s also confusing because he says, “He woke up from a bad dream, with the girl of his dreams.”

Regardless of what the intentions of the lyrics were, the sound that was created by the track made up for the true meaning. As you continue listening to the album, Parker’s voice resembles a throw-back to the 1960s rock band The Beatles. Parker’s voice resembles John Lennon. You can hear it clearly in their tracks, such as “Felt like we only go backwards.” That distinguished voice that Parker has will only continue to gain fame from his present and future fans.

Tame Impala, the psychedelic rock band from Perth, Australia that gained a devoted following with their first album, Innerspeaker, are back with a French-influenced mind-bender.

JGL dazzles in time travel thriller

Johnson’s new film takes audience on wild ride to the future and back

Joseph Gordon-Levitt stars with Bruce Willis and Emily Blunt in Rian Johnson’s sci-fi action thriller, “Looper.” The film’s original plot and dynamic characters are combined to create a truly fascinating film.

Rian Johnson’s new thriller film “Looper” is a great example of sci-fi/action done right. The film stars Joseph Gordon-Levitt as Joe, a man living in 2044 as a “looper.” Time travel does not exist yet, but 30 years into the future it does, although it is illegal. Loopers are paid to kill people from the future and dispose of the bodies. At every point in a looper’s life, he must “close the loop,” meaning he must kill his older self when the older self appears in front of him, getting a payoff in result and living the rest of his life knowing where his fate lies. This is where things get complicated.

When Joe’s older self (played by Bruce Willis) appears in front of him, he hesi- tates when realizing who he is, result- ing in his older self getting away. The audience is then fast-forwarded into the future, and we see how Joe’s life is in the next 30 years plays out. Joe must then find his older self and finish the job, or else face a death sentence of his own from his mob bosses. Thus, plenty of action scenes ensue.

A key element in the plot occurs when old Joe reveals to young- er Joe that he is on a mission to kill “The Rainmaker” from the future, who is responsible for the closing everyone’s loops. In present day, however, The Rainmaker is only a 5-year-old boy at that point in time. I won’t give too much else away because I don’t want to ruin the surprises of the plot, but I will say the little boy (played by Pierce Gagnon) was a phenomenal actor.

In fact, all of the acting in the film was extremely believable. Gordon-Levitt plays his lead with conviction and depth while Bruce Willis showed a distinct and authentic range of emotions as Old Joe. Emily Blunt also appears in the film with men shooting guns the whole time. The only complaint I would have about this movie would be that the Rainmaker was only a 5-year-old boy at that point in time, however, The Rainmaker is only a 5-year-old boy at that point.

Innerspeaker was extremely believable. Gordon-Levitt plays his lead with conviction and depth while Bruce Willis showed a distinct and authentic range of emotions as Old Joe. Emily Blunt also appears in the film with men shooting guns the whole time. The only complaint I would have about this movie would be that the Rainmaker was only a 5-year-old boy at that point. As with last year’s ‘Source Code,’ this is the rare action movie that rewards viewers who pay attention.

What really impressed me about this movie was that it was not just a typical action film with men shooting guns the whole time (although there is plenty of that) with no substance or real storyline. The film deals with many everyday issues including friendship, addiction, mother/son relationships and breaking cycles. The ending was both surprising and thought-provoking.

The only complaint I would have about this movie would be Joseph Gordon-Levitt’s makeup. It’s clear that he was being made to look more like Bruce Willis, but I found it distracting and fake. The two still didn’t look much alike to me, but their superb acting more than makes up for that fact.

Overall, “Looper” was an entertaining, thought-provoking and well-acted cinematic experience. I would definitely recommend checking it out.
Coyotes getting wild in the Rec Center

The Wild Coyote Adventure Challenge is a test of strength, speed, agility and, most of all, commitment.

Similar to an iron-man or triathlon, the Challenge requires participants to run/walk/hike 14 miles, cycle 70 miles, row/paddle 210 minutes and climb 1190 feet (35 routes on the recreation center’s rock wall). All of which must be completed between October 1, 2012 and November 16, 2012 at whatever pace participants choose.

You have some options for how to complete the minimum requirements but all of it must be sanctioned and counted by the recreation center.

The rowing can be done on one of the recreation center’s rowing machines or on one of the three CSUSB outdoor paddling trips: Oct. 13-14 in Santa Barbara, Oct. 27-28 on the Palos Verdes kayaking trip.

The entry fee is $10 and that covers the log, a Wild Coyote Adventure Challenge T-shirt and your entry into the drawing for participants.

“We give away a bunch of stuff,” said Greene. “It’s worth the $10.”

Some of the prizes include stuffed CSUSB coyotes, book bags and a yet to be revealed grand prize (last year it was a two-day golfing trip). And it doesn’t matter how fast you finish, everybody that completes it has the same chance of winning.

The challenge has been set, will you accept it? If so, get over to the recreation center and sign up between now and Nov. 16 and get healthy.

Coyote women’s volleyball is looking forward to coming out on top of their conference as they reach the middle of the 2012 season.

As of right now the team sits at a three-way tie for first place in the California Collegiate Athletic Association (CCAA) conference. Ironically, the lady Yotes will be facing off against the teams they are tied with in their next two upcoming matches.

The coaches of the team have their fair share of expectations for not only in the upcoming week, but the rest of the season.

“We are expecting a really tough match [against the teams], especially in our own gym,” said assistant coach Mike Gutierrez. “We definitely feel as if late we are playing better than we have been.”

According to associate head coach Danny Scott, the season started off a little rough for the team, who was plagued by a few unfortunate injuries, but it has definitely turned their game around.

This ultimately meant that many of the newer, younger players had to develop a feel for the speed of collegiate volleyball sooner than expected.

Coach Scott claims that errors due to inexperience were a big problem they faced in the beginning of the season.

Gutierrez also claims that this year has been particularly challenging due to the high level of athletic performance of Coyote women’s volleyball in the past, thus pressuring the team to continue to dominate in their conference much like in the past.

In accordance to the hype, their overall accomplishments have especially been acknowledged in the more recent years of the team’s history. In fact, the Coyote women’s volleyball team has held the CCAA championship title for the last five years running.

In addition to their championships, they have appeared in the NCAA tournament eleven out of the twelve times since the year 2000.

“Typically in the past we have more or less been expected to win a lot of games. However, because of the team’s youth this year has been a little more of a challenge.”

“Typically in the past we have more or less been expected to win a lot of games.”

“We’re defending well enough, we’re passing well enough, and we’re serving tough enough,” said Scott. “It’s all just a matter of maintaining a high level of offense and limiting errors.”

Hopefully the winning momentum schedule ahead of them.

They face San Francisco State this week, followed by Sonoma State for the number one spot. However, they are keeping their eyes on for next weeks home game against rival school, UC San Diego.
Smith focuses on reaching her personal goals

Camille Smith, a CSUSB two time All-American senior volleyball player obtains an intense style of play and defensive stands that creates dominance and momentum on the court.

Momentum, that carried them all the way to a 32-1 record last season with their only loss against Concordia State in the NCAA championship game.

Smith, despite having won numerous awards still has goals set up for herself this season.

“Personally my goal is to make sure that I’m a great leader and take responsibility for my teammates,” said Smith.

The Coyotes have a younger team than last season, with thirteen of the twenty players on the roster being freshman or sophomores.

“We do have a young team as everyone has probably noticed by now, but just basically make sure that I’m able to help them learn how to play Coyote volleyball and learn to know what it’s like to win and also know what it’s like to come back from defeats and just basically [help them] become a better volleyball player,” said Smith.

She along with the team have some unfinished business and a thirst for the NCAA division two title this season.

“As a team, we want to win. Obviously we want to take that CCAA title again, that would be nice for me to finish off my five years here with that,” said Smith.

“We would love to make it to the postseason, if not win the postseason.”

Winning the CCAA title has not been the only goal lingering on Smith’s mind.

She wants to play beach volleyball professionally after her career here at CSUSB.

When asked about who would be her ultimate partner of the two multiple time gold medalists Misty May-Treanor and Kerri Walsh, Smith said Misty May.

“No offense to Kerri Walsh, she’s a stud, but Misty May kind of resembles me in a way. She’s smaller like I am, she’s 5’9, she was a setter in college.

“She’s just an all-around amazing athlete and I feel I can relate to her physically in a lot of ways and I know she’s competitive so obviously I can relate to that,” said Smith.

However, before she endeavors into professional beach volleyball she wants to play indoor volleyball overseas.

Smith is an all-around athlete having participated in soccer, track, swimming, basketball and softball before giving it all up to play volleyball.

Aside from all of the goals that Smith has for herself on the volleyball court, she is kind spirited, always wears a smile and enjoys working out, lifting weights and running.

Smith works hard off and on the court but in school as well. Being a student athlete here at CSUSB has its perks, but it also has its difficulties.

“Time management has to be the hardest,” Smith said when talking about the hardest part about being a student athlete.

As far as the best part of being a student athlete, Smith is able to lay back and enjoy the fame.

“Playing the sport and having all of the fans at the school know who you are, know you play volleyball and being really friendly with everyone. It gives me an opportunity to meet a lot of people,” said Smith.

Being one of the best players on the team has allowed Smith’s popularity on campus to soar.

Despite it all, however, she remains humble and friendly.

Smith and the rest of her Coyote teammates play their next home game at the Coussoulis Arena Wednesday Oct. 10 and would enjoy having all of the students and staff members there to support them.

Red Bull flatland BMX athlete Terry Adams performed a demo at CSUSB on Sept. 24 as part of a two-week SoCal Red Bull college tour. The Louisiana native travels along with his sponsor, Red Bull promoting the sport of flatland riding to the surrounding colleges and their students.

“Our goal is to hit a lot of different schools,” said Sam Bennett, Inland Empire Red Bull Field Marketing Specialist. “It’s such a cool campus when everybody always, like right now there is a lot of people outside so the concept was to do a demo out while people can walk by and be surprised with the skill set and be blown away by it all. That’s the ideal of the overall goal,” said Bennett.

CSUSB perfectly suites this kind of sport because it contains flat surfaces and very little obstacles such as stairs to get to and from classes. It will allow riders to pick almost any spot on campus to do their thing.

“It’s about spreading the awareness of what I do and joy into the world of BMX Flatland and support them every step of the way,” said Adams.

CSUSB men’s soccer parts all on the line while practicing.

The Coyotes have seven games left in the season with plenty of room to improve and ensure this season will be the best we’ve seen.

Their next game is against Sonoma State University. The Coyotes have never beaten the SSU Seawolves in twenty tries. The game takes place in Rohnert Park Sunday, Oct. 7 at 2 p.m.

Goal keeper Tanner Olinger attempts to be as stingy as possible when it comes to allowing the opposition to score goals.

The Coyotes were able to hold the Tritons off until late in the second period at the seventy-ninth minute when the final goal gave them a 2-0 loss.

Freshman Ricardo Velasco gave a stellar performance as he was close to scoring four times throughout the course of the game. He finished with four shots on goal out of the five overall attempted by the team but was unable to get a shot past the Triton’s goalkeeper.

In addition, Raul Gomez had two attempts while Leo Mendora, Ricky Proctor, Corey Christ, Daniel Lopez and Demetri Burgess all had one attempt. Daniel Lopez was the only other Coyote to have a shot on goal.

Coyote goalie Tanner Olinger had three saves during the game and played the entire ninety minute match with two goals allowed. There were two team saves with a total of five saves throughout the match. One in the first period and four in the second period.

The boys are showing definite promise this year, having only allowed four goals against them this season with only three being in CCAA.

In their previous three games, they shut out every opponent with scores of 0-0, 1-0 and 2-0.

The Coyotes recently tied the NCAA record for most 0-0 ties in one single season. They’ve tied 0-0 to CSULA, Cal Poly Pomona, SF State, and NW Nazarene.

With only one loss so far they are well on their way to massively improving their record from last season.

Overall we have a young team consisting of fifteen underclassmen and ten upperclassmen. With a lot of practice, teamwork and perseverance, our Coyotes have a lot of room to grow.
