Anne Frank’s story comes to life at CSUSB

Barbo Karlen who claims to be the reincarnated Anne Frank, shares her story with CSUSB as part of “Five Decades of Reincarnation Research”

By RYAN LIBBY Staff Writer

Reincarnation researcher Dr. Walter Semkiw shocked students on May 28 when he presented Barbo Karlen, who is believed to be the reincarnation of Anne Frank.

The event was brought forth by communications professor Mary Fong, Cross-Cultural Center, College of Arts and Letters, Asian Studies and the Language Exchange Club. Semkiw has dedicated 18 years to reincarnation research. He has gathered case studies, like Karlen, that support this idea. As a westernized culture, we are not exposed to the concept of reincarnation, however “nearly 50 percent of the world believes in it,” according to Semkiw.

Feds want to double your interest rates

By CALEB GASTEIGER Staff Writer

The Student Loan Program that President Barack Obama pitched to young voters during his re-election is now on the table for discussion and if passed, could stop a doubling of interest rates on the July first budget.

The president will host several college students at the White House on Friday as he calls on Congress to stop the rates from doubling.

While we welcome that House Republicans have paid some attention to this issue this year, their proposal unfortunately does not meet the test,” said White House spokesperson Jay Carney on May 22.

It fails to lock in low rates for students while also eliminating a safeguard that provides middle-class families most in need with lower interest rates for student loans,” said Carney.

This comes as welcome news to most college students who have mounts of debt from student loans that continue to pile up throughout their student career.

With current interest rates at 3.4 percent on subsidized loans, on a $20,000 loan over a 10 year period, you will pay $3,620 in interest.

If the rates double, the amount of interest will blow up to $7,619.

CSUSB Junior Maria Lopez believes as a college student that does not get financial aid, her only option is student loans with high interest rates.

“I try to stack up classes as much as I can because I want to get out of here as soon as possible with the least amount of money that I have to pay off,” Lopez said of her college career.

Everyone knows class sizes are getting smaller and sections are being closed so instead of getting out of here on time or earlier, [we stay longer], which causes us to spend more money than I was planning on spending,” Lopez said.

The Associated Press (AP) on Yahoo News has said that this political issue is far more “low-key” than Obama made it out to be on the campaign trail when he was attempting to attract the youth vote.

His actions this week are being compared to this time last year when he launched a full and aggressive campaign

Honors student earns DC internship

The Panetta Institute gives students a variety of study opportunities in politics, public policy and in government.

The Institute for Public Policy has chosen Edgar Lopez, a second year at CSUSB with junior credits, to be a part of its Congressional internship program this upcoming summer and fall.

“I was shocked just taking it in, and my parents were the first I called and they were really excited for me,” said Lopez about his initial reaction upon his acceptance.

Participants will get a firsthand look at the legislative process by working in a Congressional office in Washington D.C. as part of the internship Lopez will join one student from each of the 23 California State University campuses for a two week training session in August at the Panetta Institute.

After this, the students will be Rown to D.C. to begin their 11-week internship, with a selected member of the California Congressional Delegation.

He graduated with honors in 2011 from Beaumont High School and is now attending CSUSB as a political science major with a minor in business finances.

Lopez is an active student at CSUSB, he is a part of Santos Manual

Students find jobs scarce after graduation

With low job prospects, upcoming graduates are advised to network and build a strong resume

By AMEE VILLALPANDO
Staff Writer

Class of 2013 graduates struggle to stay positive at a time when the unemployment rate for workers under age 25 is 16.2 percent, over twice the amount of the national average.

The Economic Policy Institute reported in April that although the labor market is slowly beginning to improve, the future remains grim for young college graduates.

In the time of a recession, when there is a shortage of decent paying jobs, “young workers always experience disproportionate increases in unemployment during downturns,” reported the EPI.

Worse still, for those who are able to get a job, 20.3 percent are underemployed, claimed the EPI.

The EPI reports that, “Between 1989 and 2011, the share of employed young college graduates who receive health insurance from their employer dropped from 60.1 percent to 31.1 percent.”

“Between 2000 and 2011, the share of employed young college graduates who receive pension coverage from their employer dropped from 41.5 percent to 27.2 percent,” according to the EPI.

Between 2000 and 2012, the real (inflation-adjusted) wages of young college graduates declined 8.5 percent. The EPI pointed out that “graduating in a bad economy has long-lasting economic consequences,” that may affect income and benefits for these graduates for the next 10-15 years.

While these statistics are disheartening, job opportunities are still out there and savvy students can make the most of them.

Claudia Estrada, a career counselor in the Career Development Center, offered words of advice for the class of 2013: “My recommendation for new grads on their resumes (utilize your schools Career Center), target networking, and targeted advertisements to make the most of their low market value.

Focusing your search on jobs you’re truly passionate about instead of submitting your resume to thousands of employers on a whim, TM&E magazine offered tips on how to get your dream job in a bad economy:

1. Focus your search on jobs you’re truly passionate about instead of submitting your resume to thousands of employers.
2. Develop a project portfolio that you can share with future employers.
3. Stay organized and NETWORK, NETWORK, NETWORK!
4. One successful way of networking is the use of social media.
5. Professional social media sites like LinkedIn could help generate interest for your resume by connecting to companies that may not otherwise be advertising jobs.

Student Union Board of Directors, president of the Well Christian Club, a mentor for the Faculty Student Mentor Program, and Hispanic scholarship chapter academic success chair.

On top of his leadership skills, Lopez has also volunteered for Alternative Spring Break, Latino Education Advocacy Days.

In an article published by the Press Enterprise, Lopez discussed his hopes and aspirations as he prepares for the congressional internship.

“I hope to learn and gain hands-on experience in public policy,” said Lopez.

Lopez also discussed the future impact he wishes to have on others.

“I don’t just want to be another member of society going through the motions, but be a catalyst for change and impact people’s lives in a positive way,” Lopez said.

He has plans of attending law school after graduating from CSUSB and work as a public servant in the near future.

“I am intrigued by law so seeing the way laws are made through the legislative branch, is going to be something I am looking forward to,” said Lopez.

Lopez also shared his goals and future plans after the internship.

“I hope to gain experience and learn as much as I can through my interaction with people interested in what I am interested in doing,” said Lopez.

He also added what he plans on doing on campus with the knowledge and experience he acquires from the internship.

“I want to be able to take what I learn and bring it back to campus so that I can be a great student advocate,” said Lopez.

Lopez will begin his internship this upcoming summer and continue to change the world.

Interest rates to double to pressure Republicans to act by giving speeches at college and high school campuses in presidential battleground states.

According to The AP, the House passed legislation last week, which would link the rates to financial markets by pegging them to fluctuations in Treasury notes.

The White House has said that if this is the version that is placed on the president’s desk, they will veto. The Senate has yet to act on this bill.

Obama’s proposal would also link the rates to the financial markets but, unlike the Republican proposal, interest rates would be locked in for borrowers while under the Republican plan, rates would be set at a cap.

Some Democrats would prefer a two-year extension of the current rate until efforts are taken up to create a higher education bill.

Republicans believe that this is a costly and irresponsible move as the extensions would cost $9 billion, according to the AP.

Brendan Buck, a spokesman for House Speaker John Boehner said, “It’s obvious that the White House would love nothing more than to change the subject from its growing list of scandals, but scheduling this PR stunt reeks of desperation.”

With July first fast approaching if no action is taken loan rates will double by said date and eventually burn holes in students’ pockets.

Fear may overshadow celebration and enthusiasm as job opportunities appear slim for soon-to-be graduating students.

Going to college becomes costly and students continue to worry about increasing loans, interest rates and mounting debt.

With more and more people using the Internet for forms of written communication, the Postal Service is losing billions in revenue.

The effects of this loss has caused the daily mail delivery service to quickly sink within the past year.

The Postal Service has existed for 238 years and despite its prestigious history is now losing $25 million each day. The system lost $1.9 billion between January and March of this year and a total of $15.9 billion last year reports, The LA Times.

According to The LA Times, officials said the Postal Service has reached its borrowing limit with the Federal Treasury. As a result, other strategies must be sought out to keep the service afloat.

The Government Accountability Office states that Americans use paper mail volume has decreased by a quarter since 2006.

Since the decrease of revenue, actions have taken place in order to save money. The Postal Service has tried different avenues such as merging mail facilities and lowering express delivery standards.

"Staffing cuts and elimination of facilities have saved the Postal Service some money, but not enough," said Postmaster General Patrick Donahoe.

As a result of failed attempts to keep the company alive, they have considered a reform.

Separate graduations

Students should feel encouraged to attend Black and Latino Grad ceremonies

By ERIN LEACH
Staff Writer

CSUSB joins other college campuses in adding graduation ceremonies that celebrate varying ethnicity.

This adds a unique twist to every ceremony and allows each individual culture to express themselves and celebrate according to their own unique backgrounds.

Aunjolay Lambert is a African American student who is participating in “Black Grad.”

She said, “it is an honor to have a separate ceremony devoted to my culture. As an African American women, I don’t get singled out for my accomplishments very often.”

Currently, CSUSB has three separate graduation ceremonies: African American, Latino, and the traditional ceremony where all students are highlighted without any ethnic flare.

Doreen Hatcher, who helps to coordinate these ceremonies said that they are mostly culturally oriented.

Although these ceremonies are open to any student who wishes to participate, they are mainly tools for recognizing the accomplishments of minority groups that have lower graduation rates then normal, according to Hatcher.

For example, the average four year graduation rate for all first time freshman is 9.4 percent while the averages for African American first time freshman is 3.5 and Hispanic 6.5 according to CSUSB’s Office of Institutional Research.

The separate graduations were designed for celebrating students overcoming stereotypes of a culture and attempting to increase their graduate percentage in the process.

The separate ceremonies allow for the addition of songs and languages. Things like African drums and Latin American music are custom designed to highlight student’s culture.

Student Daniel Berceca said, “I will not be participating but I appreciate the choice […] I have seen people participate before and it’s a great thing.”

An anonymous student said, “I low-key feel like its racist, I want people to feel proud, but these ceremonies are taking things too far.”

Racism is generally understood as demeaning other races and I believe these ceremonies lift up those being honored and their inclusive factor in no way bash on the other races.

Others believe that its perfectly fine because it is optional.

“I just like that it’s open to everyone,” said student Mayra Vega.

They are celebrating groups that have long been ignored in America because of there status and celebrating their rise in society.

While the recent vote allows for openly homosexual scouts to remain part of the organization, the verdict is still out when it comes to troop leaders and scouts over the age of 18. One reason for lack of change are concerns regarding sponsorships.

By BRENDA SERVIN
Staff Writer

For over 20 years the Boy Scouts of America’s policy has prohibited openly homosexual scouts from gaining membership into their organization.

At the annual Boy Scouts of America meeting in Grapevine, Texas, 1,400 Nation Council members voted on the policy that would allow openly homosexual boys into the scouts. The policy change won with 61 percent of the vote to allow openly gay youths to join.

The new policy for the Boy Scouts of America states, “no youth may be denied membership in Boy Scouts of America on the basis of sexual orientation or preference alone,” it will take into affect January 1, 2014.

The new policy change was a bittersweet victory considering that the Boy Scouts of America feared that they would lose both members and more importantly, sponsorship by lifting the bans.

Taking into consideration that the Boy Scouts’ main sponsors are religious groups who typically frown upon the LGBT community, it is a pleasant surprise that The Mormon Church, one of the Boy Scouts biggest sponsors, will continue to support the organization.

According to The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints’ website, “Sexual orientation has not previously been—and is not now—a disqualifying factor for boys who want to join Latter-day Saint Scout troops. Willingness to abide by standards of behavior continues to be our compelling interest.”

Furthermore, the mutual interest in providing guidance and teaching skills to boys remains a priority for those associated with the Boy Scouts organization.

But the organization still continues to discriminate when it comes to homosexual troop leaders, the current policy for the adult leaders wasn’t even taken into consideration at the annual meeting.

Bill Hodges, the Fitchburg Troop 41 Scoutmaster says, “Sexuality and sexual conduct have never been part of the Scouting experience,” Hodges thinks that no scout leader, regardless of sexual orientation, should have their “sexuality on display.”

At the meeting, the organization failed to address what will happen to all the openly gay boy scouts after they turn 18, will these scouts be thrown out of the organization?

The policy basically comes with an expiration date. Once the openly homosexual boys turn 18 they will be kicked out of the organization unless any new changes are made to the policy regarding homosexual adult members.

The Boy Scouts of America will be experiencing more changes and will have to deal with homosexual boy scouts who will want to eventually become scout leaders.

I’m sure there have been homosexual scouts, boys, and men, within the Boy Scouts for years but were most likely not open about their sexuality.

Society has begun to move forward in its acceptance to homosexuals, giving people the courage to be able to be open about their sexuality.
Students in California believed that Proposition 30 promised no more tuition hikes, but as usual this political mash up has just created confusion about where the money was supposed to go and where it actually went.

The voter guide for California has descriptions for each proposition, Proposition 30 has education finally mentioned in the last line promising, “In 2012–13, planned spending reductions, primarily to education programs, would not occur.”

According to edSource.org only $2 billion of the $6 billion supposedly collected is actually going to schools in California. The rest will go to, “reducing debt and expanding medical care under the federal health act, and a small emergency reserve,” according to Merced Sun-Star.

Information on the exact amount of money already collected was not found at this time.

Students at CSUSB felt the proposition promised the people something that would never happen. Student Sasha Henderson said, “It was misleading because tuition increases are not gonna [sic] stop, we are still going to be collecting more and more debt.”

The commercials for Proposition 30 promised that school spending would be audited every year, but they do not state what would be considered unacceptable spending creating a loophole for politicians to take advantage. The proposition itself claims the collected taxes will mainly go towards education, but it is also available to fund other programs.

During the voting season, Ads opposing Proposition 30 highlighted these problems. The teacher funded ad claimed that the politicians could not touch any of the money raised by the proposition. No on Proposition 30 ads mention a loophole that can be used by the government.

While the Ads were running for Proposition 30, the opposing groups were going back and forth regarding where the money would go and how it would be handled, but the allocation of classroom funding should be disclosed to the public which it’s not.

Professor Joel Harris commented on this, “I suppose this is true for other propositions as well. I am not so much sure of the arguments against, but the arguments for I would say that they were a bit misleading.”

Many teachers and school workers were promised that no more cuts would be made, but the proposition itself never promised a time frame for cuts.

The proposition discussed who was being taxed and how, but never clearly stated where the money was going. Not being fully informed creates a massive problem when the time to vote approaches.

Misleading Ads and strong endorsements, like the one from Governor Brown, brought Proposition 30 to fruition. The only problem now is that since instated the money is being allocated to expenses that aren’t keeping students out of debt.

“Regardless of what people do on any other measure, vote yes on 30.”

Plans for a new Interfaith Center in the Santos Manuel Student Union are looking quite positive. There is one major barrier that is delaying the development of the Interfaith Center.

“The proposed buildings are too small,” explained Aaron Burgess, Associate Director of Operations for the SMSU. “There is just not enough space, but we are determined to do as much as we can to see this project through.”

The Ad Hoc Facilities Committee held a meeting on May 30 at 2:00 p.m. where the topic was discussed and ideas were shared.

More than 10 students were present to voice their opinions about the Interfaith Center as well as professor Dany Doueiri, which expressed his desire for the interfaith center for students.

“We would like a prayer room where all students can give back to their religious affiliations,” said Doueiri. “An interfaith center would allow students to learn from each other. All of these questions from each others’ faiths can spark learning and sharing.”

“Most students don’t know about this. Once it is advertised, I think many students will embrace it,” said Doueiri about the current meditation room.

“I find it fascinating to learn about other religious denominations. It opens the opportunity to share my faith with others, and in the process solidifying the strength of my own faith,” said Lopez.

There are two main options that could be taken concerning the placement of the inter-faith center.

Option A includes incorporating the old Women’s Resource Center (next to the Pub) plus the Green Room for the prayer room and transforming them into the interfaith center.

This will also mean that the current meditation room will be moved downstairs to the green room.

This option will include an increase in space of about 540 square feet.

In total the inter-faith center will be about 760 square feet.

Option B includes moving the Program Board Room into the old Women’s Resource Center room and creating the inter-faith center there.

This option will include a total area of about 460 square feet.

A lot of student organizations want to learn about other faiths. Having an inter-faith center will enable the students to find commonalities,” said Burgess.

Another issue concerning the new inter-faith center was the monetary costs associated with maintenance and staffing.

This issue will be taken care of by using a volunteering committee. Most models of prayer centers from other schools use this form of staffing.

Despite the difficulty, Burgess was adamant on providing for the students’ religious needs.

“For us to ignore the requests of that part of our student populations would be an insult. If it is important to us, we will get it done,” said Burgess.

The committee voted to recommend the addition of the inter-faith center to the Board of Directors.

The Board meeting will take place on June 6 at 10:00 am; once the Board makes a final decision, the new inter-faith center addition will begin to take place simultaneously.

Students, keep your fingers crossed and pray the inter-faith center will be added soon!

Make the most out of your summer

Find new job opportunities through the career development center

Getting a summer internship is very important to many students. Internships are the opportunities that help construct a future. They teach me very much about the professional world and myself,” explained Reece Cote, a National Exchange Student. Cote is double majoring in Management and Marketing and is graduating with both degrees at the end of 2013 at the age of 21. He wants to work as a talent agent in LA to help build up his resume.

There are other students’ out there with no internship experience and do not know where to look or what to do it seems. Some students don’t even have a resume or even know how to write one.

The Chronicle has explored the matter in order to help students learn how to get a summer internship. I spoke to a past student who obtained an internship with some help from the Career Development Center.

“I would much rather be doing an internship than have an open summer. I have had my time of fun when I was younger but it’s now time to start focusing my future and what I can do to improve,” said Cote.

Cote already had his resume and career direction set up, but went to the Career Center for further guidelines and ideas.

The Career Center will help you with anything you need to know to get that internship this summer and will guide you in the right direction. It doesn’t matter how lost, confused or new you are to this.

If you are also looking for an internship, then you need to visit the Career Center, which is located on the third floor of University Hall and is open from 8:00 a.m. – 5:00 p.m. Monday through Friday.

The Career Center has various workshops that help you build up your resume, prepare for interviews and have different job opportunities for everyone.

To view job opportunities first one has to sign in through CoyoteLink. To access CoyoteLink, all you have to do is register an account with your student identification and create a password. This account can also connect with an existing LinkedIn or Facebook account so you can sync up your resume.

Once you upload your resume you can start sending them out to employers through CoyoteLink.

There are almost daily postings for jobs and internships. To minimize your search results by searching through sections by part time, full time, on campus.

Walk into summer looking your best

“During the summer I use Neutrogena face lotion with SPF 20. It doesn’t make my skin feel caked like sunscreen does. It’s lighter and prevents me from breaking out.”

Kacey DeMent

Student

With the summer heat quickly approaching it is extremely important to use the right facial and body cleansers and lotions.

Although sun block is the strongest avenue to protect your precious skin against the sun, it tends to leave the skin feeling oily, greasy and smelly!

Daily moisturizers tend to have SPF mixed in them, so applying moisturizers in the morning is a great way to be proactive against the sun!

Students are here to tell you that there are other options than staying in the shade.

“During the summer I use Neutrogena face lotion with SPF 20. It doesn’t make my skin feel caked like sunscreen does. It’s lighter and prevents me from breaking out.” With regular sunscreen on my face, I tend to break out easily,” said student Kacey DeMent.

However, if you prefer using a sun block, but don’t want the breakout, try Neutrogena Ultra-Sheer Dry-Touch Sunscreen.

From personal experience, I can say this sunscreen has saved my face from burning and looking like a lobster as well as preventing breakouts.

Our hair tends to wild and free during the summer, but just because heat products are not as present, does not mean the damage is not occurring.

“I love using Moroccan oil. It keeps my hair from drying out, and leaves it looking really shiny and silky. I don’t like having to style my hair during the summer, and Moroccan oils straighten my hair naturally. I also use a soy renewal, which strengthens my hair and boosts the moisture. It basically replenishes what the hot summer sun soaks up,” explained student Courtney Mata.

If you find yourself between University Hall and the Santos Manuel Student Union on Wednesdays or Thursdays, be sure to check out Marie’s Fruitiscents.

Marie DeGraw crafts a homemade body butter using organic products with Shea butter.

DeGraw sells a variety of items including a body scrub, body butter and lip butter.

“The scrubs and butters make you look tan and golden without having to lay out and risk burning. These products are great for sensitive skin and you instantly feel a difference on your skin. The body butter instantly heals dry or chapped skin,” said DeGraw.

Body butter is very different from ordinary body lotion. Body butterquenches your skin with just one application.

Body butters and scrubs are perfect for the summer. Not only do they bring a very tropical smell, but they keep your skin feeding moisturized and hydrated.

It’s easy to forget about your lips, but they need protection too!

“I always change my chapstick based on the season. During the summer I use either Burts Bees or Carmex. Both of these chapsticks are extremely strong, and always keep my lips from the scorching sun. A bonus is they have SPF in them which prevent future cracking and dry lips,” said student Sarah Carcamo.

Hopefully now, with summer approaching, you feel ready to take on the heat.

You should have fresh, soft skin in no time!
Reincarnation is the spiritual concept that the soul or spirit begins a new life after their physical death. Born in Sweden in 1954, Karlen began having thoughts at age three that she may be somebody else trapped in a human body. “My name is not really Barbro,” Karlen recalled saying to her parents. “You may call me Barbro, but my name is Anne.” She is the daughter to Christian parents and they refused to believe that Karlen was anybody but herself. To them reincarnation was something that should not be talked about as fact.

Karlen strongly believed that she was truly Anne Frank then when her elementary teacher introduced Frank’s diary, she didn’t know what to think. “To me, I thought everybody remembered where they came from before they were born,” Karlen said. She was referring to Anne Frank living and then coming back to life being represented as herself, Barbro. Karlen turned those thoughts into writing, mostly writing late at night after her parents were asleep. She focused on writing for herself as a way to express her feelings that nobody else seemed to understand.

After a family friend happened to read one of Karlen’s writings they realized that they had a prodigy on their hands and she agreed to have some of her writings sent to a publisher. “I didn’t realize writing would change my life in any way,” said Karlen.

Karlen’s first book “Man on Earth” was published at age 12 and became a best selling poetry book in Swedish history. It wasn’t until Karlen took a trip to Amsterdam in the Netherlands when she received her first validation of being the reincarnated Anne Frank. At 10 years old, without ever having been to Amsterdam, Karlen was able to lead her parents to the house of Anne Frank where she hid during World War II to stay in hiding from the Nazis. After Karlen’s adolescence, she lost all recollection of being Anne Frank and to her relief she was finally able to lead a normal life.

According to Semkiw who studies reincarnation for a living, reincarnation explains child prodigies. Some children possess a geographic memory even though they have never been to that particular location. Such was the case with Karlen. Even though she had never been to Amsterdam she was able to lead her parents to the exact location of Anne Frank’s house.

Another sign of Barbro’s reincarnation, according to Semkiw, is as soon as a child can speak, they say they have a different name, parents and home. Though some may disagree that reincarnation even exists, there is strong evidence presented by Semkiw to support Karlen in her belief that she is the reincarnated Anne Frank.

Cote linked up his LinkedIn account with CoyoteLink and continuously started sending out resumes to employers of his choosing.

Finally he landed an unpaid summer internship for talent management at Venture, which is the career direction he was looking for. “In my opinion, the best way to get your resume out into the real world is based on how hard you work at it. I get my ideas and guidelines from the career center, but anybody can do that. Its my job to send them out,” explained Cote. No one is going to get a job for you or hand you one. Summer is right at our doorstep and spring is quickly making its exit, so it's about time we start thinking of those long hot days ahead.

While we should be celebrating the start of summer and stocking up on sunblock and tanning oils for that natural bronze glow, there's also those amazing summer trends we need to be keeping up on as well.

The good thing is that most of the trends from spring are staying and heading straight into the summer season, but with just a little twist. The powdered neon's and bright-vivid colors of spring are not budging, and with just a little creativity you can mix and match these electric colors with just about anything in your wardrobe, even those embarrassing overalls you wore as a kid.

That's right, overalls are in! Whether they are pant or short overalls, the relaxed style can be dressed up or down just by rolling up the pant leg and pairing them with hot colored pumps or just going casual with some sneakers will get everyone asking you to be their style consultant.

And if you're worried about the faux leather trend leaving, don't you worry because leather is here to stay. Ditch the leather jackets for summer and dig up your leather skirts and shorts, because these pieces will look great with those neon colors we so desperately loved in spring, even just adding a floral shirt to those leather pants you have no clue what to do with.

Yes, floral prints and patterns are just about everywhere proving that they are staying strong, and with such a bold print this pattern can be toned down with a simple basic colored T-shirt.

Cosmopolitan agrees with this summer fashion trend sharing the best ways to wear florals with bottoms and tops.

"Ease into the printed look by pairing it with a solid top. If you're ready to be a bit more daring, branch out and go with a printed shirt instead. Just choose one that has similar colors that match your pants to keep the look cohesive."

For those beach bunnies out there, swimsuits are even brighter this season, with highlighter yellow, green and pink bikini bottoms and tops you are sure to look your darkest with your summer tan.

Fringe suits are all the craze and could be found in just about any fashion store you walk into, so get those bikini bodies ready! Rock the bikini with a pair of frayed high-waisted shorts and cute cropped top and this will top off your beach bombshell look.

“My personal style is very diverse. I like to call myself a shape-shifter, I wear what best expresses me, it varies from time to time but I always try to make sure each style always exudes timeless class with a splash of sex appeal. Eclectic is what I try to be. The trend for this summer that I’ll be wearing are definitely neon crops, mixing prints and chunky accessories with a pop of vintage retro,” said student Francesca Moreira.

Complete your look with some shades and grab the sunscreen because summer is well on its way.

By LUPE DURAN
Staff Writer

When people think about art they tend to immediately think about paint and a canvas, not realizing that art isn’t restricted to certain tools.

CSUSB student Betty Pineda spent her entire life knowing she wanted to be an artist.

Over the years she dabbled into painting and drawing, but her true passion was in graphic design.

“I love fashion and creating logos,” Pineda said, “those two things, and the number of messed up ads out there that I could do better, are what lead me to wanting to be a Graphic Design and Marketing major.”

Aside from fashion, Pineda finds inspiration in music and graffiti. Her talented graffiti is displayed in parking lots where the art is legal.

Although she’s unable to determine exactly how many pieces she’s created over the years let alone choose a favorite, Pineda greatly focuses on her graffiti work which features word art, specifically nicknames.

“While fashion and music do influence me, I think one of my biggest inspirations is life itself,” Pineda said, “I can hear a funny joke and somehow translate it into my design.”

Carrying her love for fashion into her plans for the future, Pineda hopes to start her own clothing company in which she will most likely implement her favorite type of urban fashion with a skater twist.

Eager to venture out into the clothing business, Pineda has already designed her clothing line’s logo, which reads “A.M.F.” (At Most Fear) and stands for “At Most Fear.”

“It usually takes about a week to finish a design,” Pineda said, “but I really took my time with my logo, really focused on the quality and ended up taking about three weeks to finish it.”

Pineda’s logo design is set to be featured in the 43rd Annual Student Art Exhibition on display from June 15 – July 31 at the Robert and Frances Fullerton Museum of Art.

Among Pineda’s inspirations and aspirations there are other artists that inspire her in one way or another.

“I would say my favorite artist is Andy Warhol,” Pineda said.

“He just went all out and even though his work was kind of weird he did his thing and eventually people loved it.”

Pineda also mentioned God as one of her favorite artists, stating that every pattern in the world, like that on wood and leaves, were all created by Him.

Already taking her talents to great heights, Pineda has designed various articles of clothing, including shirts and hats that are available online at www.atmostfear.bigcartel.com.

While her dreams of starting her own clothing line may be big on her mind as she prepares to graduate in the coming days, Pineda admits that she’s currently considering getting her Master’s and becoming a professor.

“Art is anything a human touches,” said Pineda, “if you can effectively communicate to someone what you feel on a canvas or a design, you’re an artist.”

Perhaps an artist such as Pineda will find great success as a professor. Considering her definition of what qualifies as art may spark something within people who never considered they may be artists.
VCR Monster performs at Riverside's Saturation Fest

Back to the Grind, in downtown Riverside gave previous festival hosts a run for their money by holding Saturation Fest the week of May 25 in their coffee shop. The annual three day event features local and up and coming bands. This year, Back to The Grind hosted the rock bands performances. The venue included two different stages, one down in the basement and the other on the main floor next to the entrance. One thing that stood out was the passion in the performers. Though space was limited, they did not let the minimal size of the venue restrict their dancing. Performing down stairs was VCR Monster, who were kind enough to be interviewed after their set. The band is composed of band members Jordan Matthew Kennedy, Andrew Serrato, and recently added Collin Deathrage.

Kennedy and Serrato became friends during grade school and bonded through music. Kennedy was inspired to pursue a career in music when a friend of his named Alex gave him guitar lessons back when he was in seventh grade. Deathrage played the drums for several bands as a hobby but then realized that he never wanted to stop. Serrato started playing the trumpet when he was nine at school and since then he has always had a love for music. Without music their life would have been completely different.

Aside from music, Kennedy found an interest in being a cop because the idea of busting bad guys excited him. Both Deathrage and Serrato had a passion for sports. Collin had a love for skateboarding, but he took many bumps which motivated him to step away from that and decided that music was the way to go. “Back in high school I was into sports so if it wasn’t for music I would probably be an athlete,” said Serrato.

VCR Monster consider the genre of their work to be a mixture of trip-pop, electronic, indie, and bropop. “I’ve definitely been influenced by Marshall Mathers because of his attitude towards music and the music industry,” said Deathrage.

Kennedy found himself being a great fan of Nirvana. They started digital and have gone to more organic state of music. Deathrage comes in with the bass to give it more of a live feel.

“Given the opportunity to go back to when I first became interested in pursuing a career in music I would go back and advise myself not to stress out so much, to enjoy it and not take it for granted because in the end it will all work out,” said Kennedy.

Though not currently signed they’re looking for a record label, there’s not a specific label they want. Any record label looking for a bunch of down to earth guys with great talent should definitely keep a lookout for VCR Monster.

Make sure to catch them Thursday, June 6 at the Sky Fox in Pomona.

Top five summer music festivals you won’t want to miss

By PRISCILLA ARVIZU

California has some of the biggest and best music festivals in the world and are most prominent in the summertime. There is a music event for every age and taste. Here are the top five best music festivals for CSUSB students to check out this year.

“With finals coming up and graduations around the corner students see summer music festivals as something to look forward to when pulling all-nighters studying,” said student Carolina Meza.

#1 EDC:
One of the largest electronic dance music festivals in the country, Electric Daisy Carnival (EDC), Las Vegas has something for music lovers of all genres. The iconic festival will fill the 1,500-acre speedway with ground breaking musical acts, artists and theatrical performers and features more than 500 dance music creators from around the world. Performances will include Avicii, Above & Beyond, Armin Van Buuren, Benny Benassi, Calvin Harris, Dada Life, Krewella, La Roux, Tiesto and many more.

“I went to EDC last year, it was amazing! I’d definitely go again this year if I wasn’t going to Japan for the summer,” said student Tasi Hogan.

#2 Outside Lands:
Starting Aug. 9 – 11 in America’s best city San Francisco, CA
Top of the line artists filling this year’s Outside Lands lineup will be EDM stars Kaskade and Pretty Lights, NYC-based indie favorites The National and Vampire Weekend, R&B crooner D’Angelo, bonafide country music icon Willie Nelson and, because no festival would be complete without them, Hall & Oates.

“San Fran is the place to be during summer. Especially after you need to recharge your batteries and have gone to more organic state of mind. This year, Back to The Grind hosted a traveling music festival, which makes it unique from the others. Any record label looking for a bunch of down to earth guys with great talent should definitely keep a lookout for VCR Monster.”

#3 FYF Fest:
Come August 24 and 25, music lovers will be penetrating DTLA to jam to the likes of My Bloody Valentine, Yeah Yeah Yeahs, Toro y Moi, Beach House, and Solange. The festival will be held at the Los Angeles State Historic Park ringing in at only $99 a ticket.

“FYF is amazing! I will be going this summer with my close friends and cousins. We try and go every year,” said student Raven Taylor.

#4 Hard Summer:
Hard Summer, Los Angeles’ biggest summertime music event, returns this year as a two-day festival Saturday, August 3 and Sunday, August 4 at Los Angeles State Historic Park. Performances from leading artists in the electronic and hip-hop worlds, including Justice (DJ Set), Duck Sauce, Dog Blood, Bassnectar, Empire of the Sun, 2 Chainz, Zedd, Crystal Castles, Baauer, Dillon Francis, and many more.

“The Hard Summer music festival brings it to an over the top excitement in LA,” said student Jose Quintero.

#5 Warped Tour:
The Vans Warped Tour is essentially a traveling music festival, which makes it unique from the others.

“Back in high school I was into sports so if it wasn’t for music I would probably be an athlete,” said Serrato.

VCR Monster consider the genre of their work to be a mixture of trip-pop, electronic, indie, and bropop. “I’ve definitely been influenced by Marshall Mathers because of his attitude towards music and the music industry,” said Deathrage.

Renee Jimenez women’s basketball coach for the Monterey Bay Otters has an impressive record with three NCAA tournament appearances in the past three years. The Otters finished first place in the NCAA regional semifinals during the 2011 season, second place in the NCAA Regionals during the 2012 season and third during the NCAA regional semi-finals this past season.

During her five seasons with the Otters, Jimenez has obtained an overall record of 97-46. This has made her the most successful coach (by winning percentage) in Otter history.

Prior to Jimenez’s responsibilities as head coach at CSU Monterey Bay, the Otters were only able to come away with three wins during the season. During her first season as head coach, Jimenez led the Otters to their best record of 18-9 and completely turned the program around.

Now Jimenez has been hired to coach the women’s Coyote basketball team and help turn them around.

CSUSB athletics director Kevin Hatcher explains the hiring process for the new head coach.

“We had about 40 actual resumes and about 100 inquiries,” said Hatcher. With all of these applicants coming in, CSU Monterey Bay’s head coach Renee Jimenez seemed to be the perfect fit for the program.

“Coach Jimenez was chosen because of her commitment to academics, she has a 100% graduation rate in five years at Monterey Bay,” said Hatcher.

According to Hatcher, Jimenez has the ability to provide CSUSB student athletes quality experiences both on and off the court.

Prior to her time with the Otters, Jimenez was assistant coach for Beth Burns at San Diego State.

While coaching for the Aztecs, Jimenez helped turn around their program which had only won three games during the 2005-2006 season. With the help of Jimenez the Aztecs improved to an impressive 18-13 record the following season.

The Coyotes are looking forward to what Jimenez has in store when she comes on board. It is sure to be a great season with Jimenez on our side.

Coyotes show off their athletic skills and competitiveness competing in this quarter’s intramural volleyball events who have a new champion.

The team Kiss my Ace, took the A league finals against team Take Notes this past Tuesday May 28, with a score of 15-11 the first game, 9-15 in the second and 25-20 in the third, winning best two out of three.

Along with winning the A league playoffs, Kiss my Ace went through the intramural season going undefeated with a record of 6-0.

“I signed up because I love playing volleyball and my friend Krystal saw that I was okay at volleyball and she asked me to join her team,” said player Aguilar.

Not every intramural player is the best volleyball player, but they make sure they put their best effort forward and that’s all that counts.

“I was a loner, I would always hang out with two of my friends and now that I play volleyball I have more friends to hang out with,” said Aguilar.

Intramural sports feeds into the competitive nature of students and helps them make new friends and stay active while having fun.

Along with making new friends, students are able to keep up with their studies and develop better time management skills.

“If you really take it seriously it helps because your like okay I really need to get this done before I go and play,” said Aguilar. Students are allowed to com-
