COMPUTER-ASSISTED INSTRUCTION TO BE
WORKSHOP FEATURE

The College's first faculty workshop will be held Wednesday, January 22. The newest educational devices will be demonstrated. Computer-assisted instruction will be exhibited by IBM which will establish a telephone connection between a terminal on campus and its computer headquarters in New York City.

Dr. James Freeman, Director of Institutional Studies, urges that all faculty and persons who are interested in teaching attend the workshop, which will be of special interest to all educators and intern teachers.

A nationally recognized authority in the field of computer-assisted instruction, Dr. James Finn, head of the Department of Instructional Technology at the University of Southern California, will be principal speaker for the event. His speech is scheduled for 2:30 p.m. in PS-10.

Lucas Lawrence, Director of Audio-Visual Services, will demonstrate many kinds of equipment already available on campus, including closed circuit TV.

The workshop will begin at 9:00 a.m. in PS-121, featuring vendors' exhibits and demonstrations and continue until 5:00 p.m.
