"SCIENCE AND CONSUMER PROTECTION" TOPIC OF TODAY'S LECTURE

"Science and Consumer Protection" is the title of today's lecture by Dr. Aaron Ihde. He will outline the role of the Food and Drug Administration in its attempt to protect the consumer. The introduction of new chemicals into agriculture, medicine and technology without adequate testing will also come under the scrutiny of Dr. Idhe.

Dr. Ihde is visiting the campus this week as consultant and lecturer. He spoke yesterday afternoon on the beginnings of a technology based on science. The chemist is professor of chemistry and history of science and integrated liberal studies at the University of Wisconsin. He has had a long interest in consumer problems and has served 12 years on the Wisconsin Food Standards Advisory Committee.

The lecture is scheduled for 10 a.m. today in B-101. All are invited.
