New Faculty Building To Rise Soon

by Elwood Lawrence

The plans for a new faculty building on the CSUSB campus are on their way to becoming a reality by early 1987.

The project, proposed to alleviate the growing faculty office shortage, is now in the process of completing preliminary drawings after getting approval from the California State University Trustees in November. However, the project is still awaiting support from the legislative delegation, according to CSUSB president Anthony H. Evans. This support should come in the form of state funding, as a result of Governor George Deukmejian's proposed budget that includes the CSUSB project in its list of 25 physical projects. Of these, CSUSB is ranked in the 14th category, a position President Evans terms "sufficiently high." President Evans added that the project was already receiving "strong, united support" from the state.

The initial schematic was drawn by architect Raymond Kappe, of Pacific Palisades. After it was approved, Clelio Boccato, of Santa Monica, was assigned to prepare the full drawings.

When the preliminary drawings are completed late this week, it will be sent to the Department of Finances for approval. Once approved, working drawings will be made up, in turn to be reviewed by the Chancellor's Office in August. If all proceeds as planned, construction building should begin in late 1985.

The new faculty building is expected to cost approximately $1,950,000, according to James Ivan, Director of Administrative Affairs. It is planned to be a two-story building with the capabilities of housing 100 offices (as opposed to the current need for 81 offices). It will also feature exterior corridors and floor-to-ceiling glass walls, while having some rubblestone construction to tie in the bold, new image with the rest of the Cal State campus.

Its most noteworthy feature, however, is its three interior courtyards (with trees), and the positioning of the faculty offices to enable them to view one of the courtyards or of the surrounding mountains outside.

The building will have 12,000 assignable square feet (for offices) and about 20,000 gross square feet (for corridors, restrooms, etc.). Half of the building will go to the School of Education, with the other half going to the School of Social and Behavioral Sciences. The frontmost section of the building will house the Dean's Offices from each department.

The faculty shortage, the reason for the building project, was discovered through a series of extensive reviews done by President Evans in his first year at CSUSB. The demand for temporary offices for the faculty had grown in the last ten years, to the point where space had been provided in various areas such as the P.E. Building and the majority of the fifth floor of the library.

Gay Studies Class To Be Held Next Quarter

Dr. Craig Henderson will again be teaching a 5-unit Studies class, "Seminar: Gays and Lesbians," at Cal State. The class is open to students from sociology, anthropology, history, law, religion and literature will be covered. It is a small group seminar. More than just an academic class, it's also a growth experience.

The class will be held in the spring quarter, beginning April 1 through June 14, Monday and Wednesday evenings, 8-10 p.m. The course number is 375 for this 5 unit Psychology class. You may enroll for it as a degree-seeking student at the University, or you may enroll through Extended Education at a cost of $150. The class is also part of the Women's Studies Certificate.

Winterfest Blossoms At Cal State

by Kathe Morrell

Approximately seventy-five people gathered at one time at this year's Winterfest '85 sponsored by the Associated Students. Seven clubs participated in the event. The R.E. Association went with the Valentine's theme by selling kisses wrapped up in tissuest paper and balloons that said such things as "I Love You." Most of the balloons were bought by me for their girlfriends. The table was manned by two R.E.'s, Valerie Hammel and Betsy Stedaker.

A newly resurrected club, Saga, sold cookies. Saga stands for San Andreas Geographical Association and their purpose is to study the environment. The table was manned by Bob Wessman, who said that they participated in the event as a way to let students know more about their club and to attract new members.

The International Students Association was selling Baklava. It's a dessert made up of dried fruits and honey, rolled up in a pastry fashion. This dessert is a favorite in Middle Eastern countries and in Greece. Club members Zeba Quabri, Snyder Marks, Loy Roche, Richard Cabrera and Jaime Mesta participated.

M.E.C.H.A. was selling tamales and carnations. Secretary Kelly Grenard said that they had sold most of the flowers to faculty earlier in the day and that their sales were now coming from the tamales. Member Martin Vasquez was also on hand to help out.
Job Market Looks Good For Grads

by Greg Timpany

It may be only mid-February, however, it is not a moment too early to begin thinking about next year. Waiting until after graduation is not the thing to do. Getting the preliminary steps out of the way early will make the task much easier to do.

On the positive side, new college graduates should not find it too tough a time finding a job as last year's grads did. Many companies last year backed hiring programs last year. This year, according to a recent article in The Chronicle, the job market appears to be catching up with the general economy. The survey by Changing Times uncovered 119 business and government agencies who will be hiring new college graduates this year.

Job openings will be in a variety of fields, including copy writing, engineering, computers, and finance. The placement people look for in an interview and what happens in the interview with school districts, companies, or other private sectors will be the deciding factor for the new graduates.

Certificated Personnel for the San Bernardino City Unified School District, will sponsor a Teacher Interviewing Workshop in the Lower Commons (104) on Thursday, February 28, 1985. The speaker will be Dr. Dan King, Director of Personnel for the San Bernardino City Unified School District. He will also give two or three mock sessions. Don't miss this one.

Teacher Workshop

At long last student teachers will have an opportunity to find out what happens in the interview with school districts. The San Bernardino Community College Center is proud to announce that they will sponsor a Teacher Interviewing Workshop in the Lower Commons (104) on Thursday, February 28, 1985. The speaker will be Dr. Dan King, Director of Personnel for the San Bernardino City Unified School District. He will give two or three mock interviews and field a question and answer session.

This is a special chance for student teachers and those about to become student teachers to save up all their questions and come ask them anonymously. Don't miss this terrific opportunity to get ahead in the job market.

If you have any questions about the workshop, call Lynne Moss at 887-7551.

One hundred and fifty people attended the Gay-Lesbian Union's second annual Valentine Dance on Tuesday, Feb. 19, at CSUSB SUMP.

The Gay-Lesbian Union's (GLU) advisor, Craig Henderson who teaches psychology, education and communications at CSUSB, along with working as a student affairs administrator, said the GLU holds four dances annually. All revenues generated from these dances are used to support the campus GLU and the Professional Advisory Council (PAC), a profitable educational group serving gay persons throughout the Inland Empire.

"GLU tries to provide a cultural focal point on matters of concern for gay and lesbian community on campus or in the community," Henderson said. "It is like any other organization or club that plans events; GLU simply provides a forum for people who share a common interest together.

According to Henderson, PAC pays all the money for the dances. The GLU and other GLU-affiliated, such as the Gay-Lesbian community center, helps with preparation and overall support," Henderson said. Therefore PAC and GLU members incorporate their services into the dances.

The SUMP was decorated in red and white streamers, balloons and a three-foot-long hand crafted paper heart. Sacramento didn't participate in the dance. However, the GLU received a $100 worth of flowers by Dancin' Wheels Company, a mobile DJ unit owned and operated by Janet Hart. Hart received cheers and applause as songs from Prince, Tina Turner, Madonna and others echoed through the SUMP. Hart also performed a series of fifteen recordings which had more than half the crowd on their feet dancing.

"She is very professional in her presentation; she really has the crowd charged up," said one GLU member.

Later in the evening, the No-Name Square Dance Troupe, made up of PAC members, demonstrated three dance routines and taught the crowd how to line dance. The crowd responded with cheers, hoots, and applause along with handclapping in cadence with the music.

The GLU sold red, white, and flowers with all the proceeds going to aid the Gay-Lesbian community center, which is a division of PAC. Furthermore, GLU provided hors d'oeuvres and a cheese plate that was donated by people from the community as a special service.

"People are really having a good time and enjoying the food," John Tibbals, a CSUSB Librarian said. "There are not a lot of places, besides bars or private parties, where gay and lesbian people can go and have a good time. Everyone here seems to be having a great time. I believe this dance has been a total success."

CSUSB PAC and GLU has had a strong duration since its inception, in January.

The next GLU dance has been tentatively scheduled for spring in early June. The Gay-Lesbian Union is open to all students, staff and faculty.

Graphic Designer Speaks To CSMA Members

by Greg Thompson

Every product that confronts us as consumers is the result of a designer. Every advertisement, no matter how complex, is the result of a simple message. Everyone that steps on the front page, comes from the desk of a graphic designer. With designs consisting of us everywhere, it becomes apparent that graphic designers play an important role in shaping the trends and fashions of the day.

This was exemplified in a presentation last Thursday by Mr. Larry Thompson, Mr. Thompson, a graduate of Memphis State University, is president of the Lambda Thompson Design. Mr. Thompson specializes in corporate identity, advertising, and promotion.

Three factors contributed to the University's decision to move all food sales away from the Library entrance to the lower steps area. First, there were safety hazards caused by the use of extension cords and the occasional use of barbecue charcoals. Second, food stains on the upper level were growing. Third, problem and frequent cleaning was required in that area. Last, many patrons were frequently took them into the Library in an effort to improve their understanding, was not encouraged by Library staff.

Since the location change has been in effect this quarter, they have had a strong duration since its inception. In speaking about his consulting firm and how the consumer is the result of a design. In speaking about his consulting firm, it is to exist for the public.

The Gay-Lesbian Union released all food sales away from the Library entrance. People are really having a good time and enjoying the food," John Tibbals, the public administration club advisor said.

Harrison Ford Shows "Gentle Charm"

by Ernud Lawrence

"Witness," a detective thriller starring Harrison Ford, is a welcome departure from his "Star Wars" and "Indiana Jones" exploits. It's a movie that lets Ford finally strut his acting stuff and the end result is a first-rate movie.

Set primarily in a small Amish community in Pennsylvania, the movie centers around an Amish boy's witnessing of a murder by some crooked policemen, and around the community in Pennsylvania, the murder a fellow officer in a tram. Whether it is the intense determination he displays in defending himself against his crooked superiors, or the disillusionment in getting used to the Amish way, he always shows a gentle charm about John Book, making him instantly a likeable and convincing character. Also, well done performances include Kelly McGillis' portrayal of Rachel who finds herself drawn to John, even though it's against her ways and Jan Rubes as Rachel's stern, but occasionally eccentric father. Rounding out the excellent supporting cast are Lukas Haas as Rachel's son, Joel Sommers as Ford's superior, and Alexander Godunov (a scene stealer in himself) as Rachel's self-assured Amish source.

"Witness" is neither fully a thriller or a drama, it does have a consistent charm throughout. Most noticeably in its more tender scenes (such as Ford's and McGills growing romance). And while its contrast between lifestyles may seem a bit too neat at times, "Witness" wins out, in its performances, and in its charm.

"Beginnings" Displays the Best of Photo I

"Beginnings," an exhibit of 25 black and white photographs, is now on display in Gallery II in the Visual Arts Building. This collection of photographs represents a selection of the best photographs produced by the Photography I students in the Art Department during this past fall and the current quarter. The images were created with different interpretations from the following subjects: landscapes, times past, water, texture, reflections, night, and portrait. The selection was based on those photographs that the beginning photography instructor, Miss Golobuch, felt contained a strong design and composition, good technical print quality.

The work will be on exhibit from February 19 through March 6.

ROTC Offers "Office Training"

by Stacie Lucas

Many opportunities and experiences are provided for students through the Reserve Officer Training Corps. The program on campus is administered by the military science department in the school of social and behavioral sciences.

ROTC offers two, three and four year programs depending on student class status. It also offers scholarships to students involved in the program who show consistent above-average performance in classes and courses required for the program. There are 50 students involved in the program who are required to enroll in one class every quarter. They also must commit one Saturday a month and the whole group meets every Wednesday morning for information and a work out.

It is a program of training whereby a student in any academic discipline can become an army officer upon graduation, said Captain Steve Heyner. He explained the opportunities given to students involved in the ROTC. It is an accredited program on campus that allows students of all academic levels the opportunity to become army officers while pursuing any degree they choose.

"ROTC" is one of the finest experiences you can have," said Michael Antonio, a senior, liberal studies major. "I put about 20-30 hours a week into ROTC as a senior.

You get immediate responsibility that the private sector doesn't offer. It's a dream come true," it gives me something to shoot for. "I feel lucky this country has allowed me to see many different things and now...I can pay back to the country something was given to me."

Fifty percent of students involved go on to active service as officers. After graduating they choose a branch and continue training. They are then placed and begin service as a second lieutenant. "This gives leadership experience that helps in every point in life," explained Heyner.

Requirements include: U.S. citizenship, a respectable GPA and being of age 25 or under at the time of graduation. Major Stuart Lyon the Cal State San Bernardino ROTC program, which is the only campus-based program in Inland Empire. There are 500 programs across the country at various colleges.

The ROTC offers major responsibility early in life and provides for better opportunities to the individual for jobs of their choice in the future.

Cutting the Red Tape to Declare a Major

by Eluned Lawrence

So you say you haven't declared a major yet? Well, don‘t panic—it's not all that bad. Besides, you're not alone. About 20% of all freshmen who enter CSUSB come in with an undeclared major. However, if you’re approaching or are in your junior or senior year, you might want to begin to seriously consider some subject areas that could be potential majors.

First of all, there is nothing wrong with being undecided about a major. It can be a chance for you to explore new ideas and possibly majors. A good way to do this is through the General Education program. In consultation with a career counselor, you might want to begin to consider some subject areas that could be potential majors.

Another way is to consult with your advisor at least once per quarter. An advisor can be a valuable source of information about areas of study and academic rules and regulations, as well as provide many helpful hints. You can also talk to your professors during their office hours. They can provide information about particular careers, and can advise you on classes that can help you with deciding on a major.

One of the best ways to begin is to keep track of the decision-making process in your current University Bulletin. It provides a great deal of information about the university and about all of the majors offered at CSUSB. As you read through each of the descriptions of majors, make up a list of those that interest you the most. Then set upon an appointment with a professor from each of the areas you are considering, so you can get personal information about each of them.

In summary, it is safe to say that while it might be good to have an undeclared major in your early college years, you should work on choosing a major by the end of your junior year so you can be able to meet the major’s requirements for graduation. The possibilities may seem to go on forever, but don’t forget that your faculty and counselors are there to help. With their help, you can create a college experience that will give you a direction for your career, and even your life.

Results Of Computer Search Services

Claims by fee-charging computer search services that they are matching students with scholarships that fit the individual’s background characteristics and career objectives were questioned today by the California Student Aid Commission.

In a report issued to high school counselors and college financial aid officers, the Commission said that student experiences with computer search services, as reviewed by the Commission, showed a lack of effective matching of students with scholarships.

Moreover, says the study, few students reported any tangible results after following up on scholarships identified by the service.

Arthur S. Marmaduke, director of the California Student Aid Commission, said that the public is confused by statements that large amounts of aid go unclaimed each year.

The “unclaimed” aid apparently refers to unused employee tuition benefits, says Marmaduke. This financial assistance, not available to the general public, can be used only by employees of the companies offering the tuition assistance, and only under conditions set forth by the employer. The amount of unused employee tuition benefits has been estimated at close to $8 billion by the National Committee for Student Financial Assistance.

Marmaduke says that the results of the Student Aid Commission’s investigation are consistent with those reported by the University of Illinois, Urbana-Champaign, in a survey for the Illinois Commission of Student Financial Aid Administrators.

All but six of the 30 computer search services that responded to the California Commission’s survey use the same data base, which is maintained by a New Jersey firm. As part of the Commission’s study, 10 Los Angeles high school seniors, selected for the characteristics frequently cited on the questionnaires provided by the fee-charging computer search services, submitted completed questionnaire and required fees to two services.

One of the services was a franchise of the New Jersey firm and the other an independent concern. The students received 22 computer print outs from the same data base.

None of the students in this particular survey received scholarship awards as a result of the information provided by the computer search services.

Many of the scholarship sources given to the Los Angeles students by the computer search services were inappropriate for the following reasons: they did not apply to the student’s education level, college major, ethnic group, or income level; the applicant had to be a graduate of a certain high school or a resident of another city or state; the applicant had to belong to a certain organization or be selected for the award by a school, the source listed was a loan, job or volunteer position, not a scholarship.

The Los Angeles students in the Commission’s survey received no reply for the majority of the scholarship sources to which they applied for awards. Others received a reply that the scholarship was no longer available, or had require­ments which made the student ineligible.

Student Aid Commission’s study was undertaken in cooperation with an advisory group of college financial aid officers and high school counselors.

High Blood Pressure is a Serious National Problem

High blood pressure is one of the most serious diseases in the United States. It contributes directly or indirectly to about one million deaths a year. It affects over thirty-five million people, approximately one out of every 4 or 5 American adults. High blood pressure is treatable. Many deaths can be prevented if hypertension (high blood pressure) is detected early and managed properly.

One problem is that, unlike a toothache or backache, high blood pressure doesn‘t usually produce any symptoms. People may not know they have high blood pressure until it begins to cause trouble with the heart, brain, or kidney.

In order to make it easy to have your blood pressure checked, the Student Health Center and the Nursing Department will set up four stations to check blood pressures on February 20 from 11-4 p.m. Those locations are the south end of the Library, the main lobby of Student Services, the lobby of the Student Union and the West lobby of the Commons.

Bein a Archaeology Student

Archaeology, The very word ranks with romance—stone temples looming out of the jungle, million-year-old human artifacts pulled from an eroded bank, caches of gold and jewels. All these are part of archaeology, but there also are long days of hard work and minimal pay. Many, says Dr. Russell Barber, archaeologist with the Department of Anthropology, have found their calling here.

"You're not just mining for attractive artifacts to put in a museum some place," he says. "You're trying to reconstruct and understand the way of life of the people who left those artifacts, and that's a much more complex job."

This is the theme of an anthropology course offered by Barber this spring. Most archaeology courses focus on the results of archaeology, the way it's done; not the archaeologists who live this or that prehistoric people lived. This course focuses on how the archaeologist figures it all out," Barber says.

If the course is a little unusual, the way it is taught is even more unusual. Students will be issued a booklet ("the artifacts of our own society are just as interesting as those of ancient peoples and sometimes more enlightening"); they will visit an archaeological site and see excavation in progress. They may also combine it with an archaeological experiment designed to test some idea about prehistory.

One of the focal points of the course is a series of computer projects written by Barber especially for the course. "Most of the projects that take place in archaeology take a long time, but the computer lets you compress time to see the pattern," he says. A program to show how archaeological sites form, another to show different patterns of traded items, a game that lets you make the decisions faced by a prehistoric hunter and gatherer... and the list is still growing. The programs are all very easy to run and require no computer skills to use.

If a course like this looks interesting to you, look into Anthropology 38, "Archaeology. You will learn things you never dreamed of, and you will make Indy proud."
Tying Flies In A Pinch

by John Horton

Suppose someone says yes to a fishing buddy who invites you to go fly fishing tomorrow. Like many fastidious fly tiers, you probably think that you have a ready arsenal of deadly lures, ready for action. Royal Coachmen, California Mosquitoes, and Professors already tied and trimmed. What if, to your horror, you find that you have only a few moth-eaten specimens left from your last fishing trip. Since it's obvious that you forgot to tie or buy needed materials, and it's late night, what do you do? The answer is obvious. Panic! You could count to 10 very slowly. And, while you do, think of alternative materials that could be used. Now remember, this is not the time to get your hackles up and start fighting for the best flies. It's time to get your hackles in an alternative mood. The decoration of their table went from page 1...

Has Reagan Fulfilled His Promises?

Dear Editor,

When Ronald Reagan was campaigning for president in 1980 he made several pledges to the American people. He pledged to restore the American military to strength, which in his opinion had gone downhill due to years of neglect. He pledged to reduce the size and scope of the federal government. Somewhere along the line he also pledged to reduce the federal government's budget deficit. Has he succeeded in fulfilling these promises? Some could argue yes, but their arguments would leave many questions unanswered. Further examination of what President Reagan has accomplished in necessary before any conclusions can be made.

Have President Reagan and Casper Weinberger restored strength to the American military? This is and probably always will be a debatable question. One thing is for certain, military spending is soaring high. Military spending in the fiscal 1986 budget is planned to be in the $85 billion plus range. This includes increased spending on nuclear weapons and on research for "Star Wars" type anti-ballistic missile systems. Has spending like this really increased America's military preparedness?

Reports are issued periodically, in a variety of media, which question the ability of U.S. armed forces to fight a sustained battle in remote corners of the world. How can these reports even be considered when the Pentagon is spending such incredible sums of money? When observed closely the Pentagon habit of making such a habit sometimes lack intelligent judgement. Only the Pentagon would allow civilian refugees to cover. They are also known for making money and keeping it money that are plagued by cost overruns. The Department of Defense organization may have a few administration problems, but it vital to the survival of all of us that these costs are curbed. The economy since many new jobs are created for small businesses, the time will tell whether or not his other critics will prove beneficial to the economy.

Has Reagan succeeded in reducing the federal deficit? This is a truly admirable task since the federal government has become extended in many areas. However, have the cuts that Reagan and company made been for the better? The federal deficit was debated, but his current round of cuts do leave something to be desired. The Small Business Administration has suffered a 50% cut in its budget, but that organization may have a few administration problems, but it vital to the survival of all of us that these costs are curbed. Lastly, there are the Red, Green, and Blue dots all over the music department, and rumors of a dead Bruce Redowsky. No wonder the music department is so strange. Thought of another thing that I "needed" your approval and permission. You are吸收ed to trim the gossip so they were put on. This is my fourth year at Cal State, and I have been plagued by cost overruns. Small Business Administration is so strange. Thought of another thing that I "needed" your approval and permission. Today, I was working that night. I did not bother to gamble and enjoy you. You have the misquote of my poor transfer student from Valley or RCC. Those days are gone, and if they come they will come in fritz. They lose their enthusiasm for these the Krushna Clan puts on a religious campaign under the guise of India. And it had nothing to do with India, As Doctor Saylor.

Another thing I'm taught is that nothing is absolute. Do they mean this absolutely, nothing is absolute, than something is absolute. Think about it.

Guilty Pleasures

Debating the merits of depravity programs on the airwaves has been a controversy for many years. I recently had the chance to be a part of a discussion on this very topic. The program was a radio broadcast of a live debate between two opposing speakers, a pro-depravity advocate and a pro-censorship advocate. The debate was moderated by a neutral third party and was taped for later broadcast.

The pro-depravity advocate argued that depravity programs were necessary to keep up with the changing times and that they provided a safe outlet for people's desires. He also claimed that depravity programs helped to reduce the overall level of depravity in society by providing a way for people to express themselves.

The pro-censorship advocate, on the other hand, argued that depravity programs were harmful and that they encouraged people to engage in immoral behavior. She also claimed that depravity programs were responsible for many social problems, such as crime and drug abuse.

The debate was a fascinating look into the world of depravity programs and the issues surrounding them. It was also a great opportunity to hear two very different viewpoints on this controversial topic. I would highly recommend listening to the broadcast if you are interested in the topic of depravity programs and the issues surrounding them.
