The administration will provide for the development of sewers and roads so the industrial park could become a desirable place for factories such as Sears to locate.

Q: Do I understand you to be saying that you are involved in efforts to put up funds in order to attract businesses by coming up with projects, sewers, and all that would benefit them?

A: That's right. What we are doing is through the redevelopment law, we are able to finance, on a very favorable basis, the types of roads and sewer systems that need to be in place before a factory can afford to locate in such an area. And that has really been blossoming in the last two years. And it is essential that this sort of local and state support in order to get businesses to locate in relatively underdeveloped areas such as the valley floor of San Bernardino County.

Q: OK. Your opponent, Tammy Wolfinbarger, the Republican challenger, has talked in terms of various incentives for businesses, large and small, to come to California, in terms of shaking loose some of the regulations and reducing some of the taxes, for instance, investor taxes, one of the things she spent a lot of time talking about. Is there any kind of taxes or regulations or whatever that you would be willing to reduce in order to invite (induce) businesses to come out here?

A: Well, I think that inventory taxes and other forms of so-called wealth taxes, taxes on property, whether it be personal property or real property, are the wrong way to raise taxes. What we ought to be taxing is income. And I have maintained that since I first began to run for office in 1972, that the way to fairly raise taxes is through the income tax. In fact I have sponsored legislation to shift the property tax burden in the area of social and welfare services and education from the property tax to the income tax. The property tax is just an unfair way to tax people. And unfortunately that legislation was defeated, but I intend to reintroduce it in the legislature and vigorously support it next year.

Q: Do you plan to introduce or support any kind of legislation aimed at reducing the overall tax burden regardless of whether it's property, income or whatever? What would of course call for a general reduction in spending?

A: Well, I think that's absolutely correct. What we've got to do is analyze where we're going to cut in spending before we decide to cut the revenue. You put the cart before the horse when you say you're going to cut the revenue without deciding what you're going to cut in terms of the services. I think there are some areas where there's obvious waste. I think that in particular the Department of Health and the program it administers now is wasting enormous sums of money.

ASB Elections tomorrow

The ASB Government Elections Committee announces that the ASB Fall Elections will be held Oct. 26 and 27 from 8 a.m. to 7:30 p.m. in front of the Library (South End). All students may cast ballots in the election upon presenting a valid student I.D. Card. The class officers for the freshman and graduate classes will be elected, plus four senators-at-large to the ASB Senate and the ASB Executive Cabinet Judicial Representative.

The only real contest is the one for the Freshman Class President.

Three candidates are running: Joe Baldino, Anthony Durace, and Mark Womack. There are four candidates for the Senator-At-Large positions: Douglas Cole, James Gallen, Jane C. Heisler, and Mike Messer, with four openings.

Running in uncontested races are April Urey, for freshman class senator, Clair Covington, for freshman class vice-president, Dennis Harper, for Class President; Deborah Curman, for Grad Class Vice-President, and Jeff Baker, for Judicial Representative. Write-in candidates may win elections to office, but none have come forward at this time.

A Run-off Election, if necessary, will be held on Nov. 3.

The class presidents are voting members of the ASB Executive Cabinet. The Class Vice-Presidents are members of the ASB Activities Committee.

Each candidate filed a petition two weeks ago with the Activities Office containing 25 supporting student signatures.

ASB to host rally

Dave Fowler and the ASB Activities Committee will host a car rally on Thursday, Nov. 4, starting in the Serrano Village Parking Lot at 1:30 p.m. The rally will be short, approximately one hour. An awards ceremony will begin, probably in a local tavern, about one and a half hours after the last car starts.

Entrance fee is one dollar per car.

The rally will be a seat of the pants, amateur contest. All times will be scored to the nearest second, not the usual one hundredth of a second. The distances will be set by a '66 Olds station wagon that is accurate to within a sloppy 3 per cent.

Given a set of instructions that include directions and speeds, each driver and navigator team (no observers allowed) will attempt to navigate a thirty to forty mile course that begins and ends at Cal Strait. The directions will be vague and misleading, the speeds will be well within the law. Bring your old clunker car, and a buck, and have a good time.

Unlike our graduate class president-to-be, Dennis Harper, at this time, if you have not yet read his "platform," I suggest you do so before reading further. I would only admit that I do not possess a glittering reputation of fame, i.e. his long-held title of pie-eating champion, yet, I am not totally devoid of worth. Since there exists no one running against me, I do not at this time feel the need to elaborate on that statement.

In any organization, it is of the utmost importance that the president and vice-president work together and stand united and strong on issues of importance. To do so is, indeed crucial that all differences be exposed and aired.

Candidates’ statements.

Dennis Harper

The office of Graduate Class President calls for someone who is energetic, forceful, honest and dedicated; someone who can agreeably represent the university to the community.

I would like to take this opportunity to thank those who have made all this possible, and whom you, the student body, can blame. Thanks to Patton State Hospital, which has given me the leadership qualities you see here; to Dave Kantonowitz, who has given me my seriousness and dedication; to Steve Cullen, who has given me guts; to Mom and Dad, who have given me me; and to Capt. Dong, whose pie-eating championship has certainly been the spring-board of my success.

Any objections to this statement will be immediately denounced as a masque or "taken out of context."

Freshman Class Pres.
Joe Baldino

Boys Forum Senior Class Representative. After graduation, I worked with The Committee to Elect Terry Goggin for Assemblyman. Since I have been at Cal State, I have been elected Vice-President of the Serrano Village Council and I am also active in the Intramural Program.

You will find that many candidates will waste time in the refreshings of old problems already apparent to most freshmen. I believe that actions speak louder than words and I intend to be a doer, not a talker. I believe that it is essential that the Freshman Class be provided with effective leadership — NOW — in order for us to be prepared for the years ahead of us as students at Cal State, San Bernardino. I possess the qualities necessary to provide for this needed leadership.

In conclusion, it is my wish that all freshmen students will show an interest in the future of their class and I encourage all of you to vote — regardless of which candidate you should choose.

I would also like to organize some freshman oriented groups and activities that relate to the problems and situations of a freshman in particular.

In closing, I have refrained from any possible comparison to my competitors. I leave it up to your judgment. I stand on my own merits. My hope is that you let me represent our class on these merits. My name is Mark William Womack. Thank you.

As your candidate, I'm 19 years old and an English major who will go on to law school.

I was very actively involved in a high school which had a student population comparable in size to Cal State. I was most active in debate, journalism and athletics.

Of late, I'm a dorm student and the most active representative on the food committee to improve the food for the students. I'm involved in nearly all activities in Serrano Village.

I feel, however, that the past is irrelevant to what we as a class might accomplish in the future.

The best that I can do is communicate in straightforward language how I feel about the problems and situations of a freshman oriented group.

I won't send you through any changes like telling you what I can do the best job. Your vote will help to insure that this year will be the best yet.

Vote for JEFF BAKER for Judicial Representative!

Kurman

Thus wishing to start off on the right foot, I will now proceed to be honest and open in expressing my views and opinions, all the hopes of developing a warm, close bond of working efficiency.

First, I would like to mildly chastise Dennis in this statement of "dedication to open, honest B—."

By structuring his platform after "our two presidential candidates" he exhibits a marked lack of originality and creativity, and is, furthermore, I'm sorry to say, indirectly, "namingropping" — engaging in a primitive, simplistic form of egotism.

Secondly, his tendencies towards alcoholism appear to be interfering with his professional responsibilities. One's private life must remain separate from the job at hand. (A "no-go" Mr Harper!)

"Harper's special graduate "rest-stops" are blatantly elitist. Rocking chairs would loll our students into even greater apathy. Oxygen tents would enable our students to breathe easier amidst the smog; to be meaningful, life must be a struggle, Mr. Harper. Along with his proposed color TV's, popcorn and draft beer, our president-to-be seems to be engendering obesity and passivity among the populace.

Let us deal with the issue of corruption. Harper is obviously exhibiting his greedy, authoritarian, fascistic manner in wishing to davie me on the duties of my office! I strongly resent this. I am the vice president. Corruption is my job!

I feel much better now. I am quite confident that with such open, honest discussion of our differences, Mr. Harper and I will be a very warm, unified, and enlightening association, giving the school a Right-On Team!

One of the most important services offered to a member of the Business Management Club is introducing students to members of the business community, who are often prospective employers.

Reisenhofer hopes that the Business Management Club has approximately 20 members.

Presently the Business Club has for all types of majors," Reisenhofer commented, "and so provides for a wide range of interests."

By Cheryl Brown

Cal State's Business Management Club began its fifth year of service this year. The organization, according to its president, Mary Reisenhofer, is designed to offer students assistance in finding a job. The group, which cost a mere $2.00 per quarter or $5.00 per year to join, helps its members write resumes, offers an employer directory, and its introductory lunches and social events scheduled with prospective employers-business people in the community.

"The Business Management Club is open to all students who are preparing for a career in the job market," says Reisenhofer. "We want to emphasize that this club is not just for business majors, but for students in all majors who want assistance in job finding skills."

The last meeting of the business club featured Dr. Paul Esposti from the Job Placement Center speaking to the group about what to expect when entering the working world. Dr. Esposti discussed resumes, the Job News Bulletin that is sent out to students approximately twice a month, and the need to have a permanent resume on file at the center. Reisenhofer said there was a good turnout from all of the clubs.

Career Day is the next event that the business clubs will participate in. On Thursday, Oct. 28 from 8 a.m. until 12 noon, high school students will be visiting the campus and attending presentations. Dr. Chuck Christie, School of Administration co-ordinator for the event, has asked the business clubs to make a presentation on campus clubs and to help conduct tours.

The next joint meeting of the business clubs will be held on Nov. 1 at 1 p.m. in LC-600. Discussion of next month's activities is planned. All interested students are invited to attend.

do for you because of the fact that it would be doing just that, telling you what I can do and not what I will do.
I'll let my experience do the talking. In High School I served as sophomore, junior, and senior class V.P., I have been president of many campus clubs, and head of many committees. I am at the present time holding the office of president of my church Jr. Usher Board.
Now it's up to you as to what you want, a lot of talk or some action. I want your votes. Stay cool and I'll see you around.

Senator at Large

Doug Cole

My name is Doug Cole and I'm a candidate for the office of ASB Senator-at-Large. I'm running because I enjoy being involved in a political process that affects an environment of which I am a part. As a student I am aware of problems here at the College; as a member of the Senate I can serve as a voice in bringing these problems to light, and act to rectify them.

I want to emphasize that I enjoy being in the political realm. I feel that if you enjoy doing something, you tend not only to work harder at it, but also help to create an atmosphere where progress is made for its own sake. Or, to put it bluntly, if you like doing something, you seem to get a hell of a lot more done.

I've had experience in student politics as President of the Veterans Club and member of the Student Forum while a student at Riverside City College. Each, I am familiar with the "rules of the game," and feel confident of my abilities to work within those parameters and still get things done.

I'll work hard for you in any way that I can. No false promises, no political games, no pie-in-the-sky. I'll just do what I can to make things a little better for all of us. I'd appreciate your vote.

Thank you.

Mike Massor

I am running for senator at large. I stand for more booze and more activities on campus. Vote for me and let it be.

The Eagles have landed

By Kerry Kugelman

Move over, Mick Jagger and Elton John — the Eagles have landed! The high-flying band from Los Angeles took the Inglewood Forum by storm last Wednesday night, the second performance of a sellout four-night stand there. Ever since their first hit, "Witchy Woman," made the Top Ten way back in 1972, the Eagles, hard rockers with a distinctive Western flair, have been riding high on a wave of chart-busting albums and singles. In addition, they can boast of an appearance at the California Jam (1974), and capacity crowds wherever they perform.

Opening the set Wednesday night with "Hotel California," the Eagles initially gave the impression that theirs was to be a passive concert. That notion was quickly dispelled, though, as lead guitarist Joe Walsh poured out riff after incredible riff as the night went on. About the only disappointment was the stage choreography, which, at its more frenetic moments, gave one the impression that the whole band desperately needed to go to the bathroom. As silly as it was, however, it was soon forgotten as the music began to smooth things over.

Not too much can really be said about the rest of their act (admittedly, at times it became boring because of flawless, note-for-note rendition of certain numbers), except that for all the patness, the Eagles still demonstrated that they could grab the audience by the ears and not let go, as evidenced by their stunning harmonies on "Lynx Eyes," "Already Gone," and "One of These Nights," Joe Walsh's smooth voice bag solo on "Rocky Mountain Way," and the use of a string ensemble to fill out some songs.

Surprisingly, for their final encore number, the Eagles played "Tequila Sunrise," a slow, mellow tune, which was greeted by tumultuous applause, nonetheless. With all the hoopla made about 'theatre rock,' and 'stage presence,' the Eagles came across as a supergroup just by playing good rock'n'roll — and isn't that what it's all about?

Goggins Interview ...

For example, the fee for service system is not fair to any person and see a doctor, and the doctor can charge what he deems is appropriate. The person going to the doctor does not pay the bill, and is happy to go to the doctor because they aren’t personally liable for the expense that they’re running up. They can go to the doctor for a single visit. The doctor can prescribe medicine, call it an upper-respiratory infection and charge $21 or 44 dollars for the office call. The state picks up that cost.

That is wrong. The system, which was devised under the Reagan administration I might add, it’s a Republican administration, is totally wasteful. It doesn’t provide appropriate medical services where needed, and it provides inappropriate medical services where it’s not needed.

Q: Wasn’t that due to a federal court ruling saying that if there’s too much profits in one state, it has to be a broad and general cut rather than — (The phone rang and the question was forgotten by both parties)

The tape is now on. You’re talking about deregulation of oil and gas (during the interrupting phone conversation). Is this concerning state regulations or federal or both?

A: No. It would refer to the Federal regulation of the natural gas prices. And the problem we’re having in regard to natural gas is this: There are people already selling the interstate market, the sale of gas between states. Then there’s a second market called the in-state market which is the sale of gas within a state.

The interstate market is regulated at a price of roughly $2 cents per thousand cubic feet. The interstate market is not regulated, and the current market price is $2 cents per thousand cubic feet. Nearly four times the interstate market. As California opened up and allowed the interstate market, natural gas was being shipped off from California to the interstate market in Texas, Oklahoma and Louisiana, and we can’t buy it at 32 cents per thousand cubic feet enough gas to supply us with our needs. And in 1979, we’re in fact a curtail of industrial customers and eventually, if the situation continues, or residential customers.

Q: Let me get this clear. Are you talking about smuggling gas across state lines? Or are you talking about the state at the higher allowed prices?

A: No. It’s perfectly legal. They’re just selling the gas within Texas, at two dollars rather than, selling to California at 50 cents. They’re just selling the gas within state at the higher allowed prices?

A: One of two things must occur in order for California to have adequate gas supplies: we must either regulate the interstate market as well as the interstate market or we must deregulate the interstate market. You cannot have one market regulated at a lower price than another market.

Q: Which do you prefer?

A: Well, I would favor giving the natural gas and gas industry today regulation of both markets. But short of that, I would favor anything which would get us adequate gas at a reasonable price so that we don’t have to import liquified natural gas at five dollars per cubic foot which is five times, more than five times the current price that we’re paying.

Q: You’ve indicated a general favoring of over all regulation inter- as well as intrastate. Hasn’t every time any regulation had been attempted, there resulted in various shortages in whatever it is that they were regulating prices for, whatever. Whether it’s in a competitive field or a so-called monopolistic field or whatever, hasn’t maximum prices below the market rate invariably resulted in shortages of that item?

A: No. That’s not a true statement. Natural gas has been regulated for 25 years. And it is only since the Republican administration came into office in 1968 with a change in the members of the federal power commission that we’ve had the type of run-away prices permitted in the intrastate market and siphoning off gas from the regulated market and it’s just basically had management.

The reason for the regulation is very good. If you do not have a free enterprise system, if you have instead of monopoly structure, then you either have government regulate that monopoly or break that monopoly up or permit the monopoly to set the prices. Monopoly is obviously not going to be responsive to the citizens. So if you’re going to keep the monopoly, you might as well regulate it. And that’s the theory behind it so you don’t have the shareholders who’re interested in profits setting the price, but rather have the representatives of the people setting the price.

I suppose the optimum solution would be to restore free enterprise and competition to the oil industry. Of course the Republicans have not been prepared to prosecute and use the antitrust laws against the oil industry, and that’s why we have the mess in the energy industry that we’ve got today. We go to the energy industries making enormous profits. We’ve got consumers paying outrageous prices. We’ve got the energy industry prepared to blackmail the state of California in natural gas. And the Republican administration sits back in Washington and doesn’t resist this but in fact helps themselves to this type of black mail. And it’s outrageous. And I for one intend to do everything I can as chairman of the Energy Sub-committee in the Assembly to fight that type of thing, and I’m very hopeful that a Democratic administration is going to change some of these polices around.

Q: Do you believe that various businesses would continue to operate and produce the goods, oil, other things that are necessary in a free enterprise system as exempted from your statements would be hostile to their interests? For instance, you’re talking about regulating, bring prices down, calling them before your committee and forced it down the throats of the American consumer. There’s no competition there. I mean that’s an obvious fact.

And you have a situation in Washington where the Democratic Congress has produced this evidence, and the Republican administration and the Republican attorney general have refused to take that evidence and properly prosecute the companies with the obvious anti-trust violations that have occurred.

Q: Throughout the years of investigations on the anti-trust problems in the oil industry, and there are voluminous congressional reports which have concluded that the oil industry is the only monopolistic industry, and that they do not compete against each other. We know for a fact that the oil industry, producing the petroleum have established a cartel and established a market price. There’s no competition there, and the American companies simply take the international cartel price.

A: Absolutely. Congress has done eight years of investigation on the anti-trust problems in the petroleum industry and there are voluminous congressional reports which have concluded that the oil industry is not a competitive field and that they do not compete against each other.

Q: Has there been any proof of collusion?

A: Of course the oil companies have made enormous (not at the cost of the oil business as other matters. And I wouldn’t mind that so much if the oil industry was plowing those profits back into exploring for oil. But of course we’ve had this experience of Mobil taking its profits and not plowing it back in for exploring for oil but instead going out and buying Montgomery Wards and diversifying into non-energy fields, which is fine so far as the shareholder of Mobil is concerned, but what you’re doing is taking tremendous profits which the oil companies have been permitted to take because we have a monopoly structure and allowing those companies to in effect give their partners in those joint ventures tremendous amounts of profits for the oil industry.

And I wouldn’t mind that so much if the oil industry was plowing those profits back into exploring for oil. But of course we’ve had this experience of Mobil taking its profits and not plowing it back in for exploring for oil but instead going out and buying Montgomery Wards and diversifying into non-energy fields, which is fine so far as the shareholder of Mobil is concerned, but what you’re doing is taking tremendous profits which the oil companies have been permitted to take because we have a monopoly structure and allowing those companies to in effect give their partners in those joint ventures tremendous amounts of profits for the oil industry.

Q: Now my understanding is that if there is to be an new oil found it’s going to be in the government held lands, lands which they are holding for future and or emergency use, and not going to be offshore. And if either the federal government continues to hedge in allowing the oil to be used or if offshore oil continues to be banned.

A: Absolutely. The evidence is, as I said before, voluminous. For example the Senate Anti-Trust Subcommittee headed by Senator Philip Hart of Michigan has produced an extensive analysis of the petroleum industry showing that in the oil industry you have oil companies entering into so-called joint ventures where eight or ten companies will invest in a particular field or in a particular venture, when you have it common in the oil industry for all production to be a product of a single venture, you have only really a monopoly structure which has competitors who are not related to each other, competing against each other, but instead you have partners who are intimately involved with each other in terms of the profits that they are entered into these joint ventures with each other. They can’t afford to compete with each other because what is good for themselves is to have their partners be good for themselves.

If you have the partners intimately involved with each other at the production end, they can’t afford to compete with each other because it’s the profits involved. If they can’t afford to compete with their business partner they’re hurting themselves, because if their business partners are hurt by cutting prices, that business partner is not going to be able to hold up his end of the bargain in the partnership that they’re in, and therefore the incentives are completely reversed.

There is no incentive to compete. In fact the market structure in this business relationship with each other is so tight that they have every incentive not to compete with each other and to go along with the so-called posted price structure, before there is the international cartel price by the international cartel which just so happens to average tremendous amounts of profits for the oil industry.

Q: In your opinion, what is the best way to tackle this problem?

A: Well, I believe in the free enterprise system and in people making a fair profit.
A van for all seasons

By Ray Beers

A new status symbol has come to man. A machine that makes an old man feel young, a young man feel important and both feel wanted. For as soon as a man acquires one, all the unfortunate "have nots" want the owner as a friend. When the machine hurtles down the street, the variegation and chrome make a splash of color and flash of light against the background.

When it comes to a stop, it also insistently vanishing, a half-pur, half-cumbersome coming from its entrails, like a big cat as people stroke its shiny coat. This is the Modal A of the '70's, the California Van.

The California Van acquired its name, like the Jersey Cow, from its place of origin. In its infancy in the 1950's, the orange, old panel truck used to haul groceries, nursery plants, or buckets of paint during the weekdays. During the weekends, it was borrowed by the younger generation for trips to the beach. The informal ideal vehicle for beach trips because the wide doors in the rear would allow the surf boards to be placed inside without bending them, and they fit entirely within the van. It wasn't like using an automobile, where the end of the board would stick out a window and pick up battle scars from passing trucks.

It came to the attention of those riding in the rear of the van, along with some bruises, that the surf boards were comfortable to sit on for long periods of time. So the boards were placed on top of the van, generally on cushioned racks built for this purpose. Then blankets or pads of sort were placed on the floor of the van to cushion tender rear ends from the pounding punishment of ocean waves, surfboard springs or broken shock absorbers.

In the 1960's, the term "van" took on some bad connotations. This was at the time when the reach was to establish society, the Hippies, came into prominence and were using Volkswagen buses and vans to travel around the country. They painted these vehicles in multi-colored schemes and signs, in the decor they added anti-establishment mottos and peace signs on the sides. A lot of people. Because the hippies were generally dirty, their clothing ragged and filthy, their vehicles in the same general condition, most people began to think of anyone who was not immaculately dressed and who traveled in a dirty van as a hippie.

In the 1970's, when the Vietnam War ended, the hippie syndrome seemed to dissipate, but vans did not. The young citizen soldier was now being discharged and returned to his peacetime occupation of riding around in a van and trying to pick up girls, and he took the hippies' place.

He saw the vans with the weird paint jobs and decided that this was exactly what he needed to show that he was different from other people. Besides, he could put more girls in a van and do more than he could in a Honda Civic. So he invested his mustering out pay, in a van that would show his personality.

Personality depiction took some rather extreme paths for some van owners. The van exteriors were painted in some very strange, unearthly patterns and colors and artificial flames swimming down the sides. Instead of a slogan that mutely mattered "Peace Now" or "Love thy Neighbor," be it a crudely drawn peace sign, the vans began carrying outdoor scenes by artists in names and slogans in vivid colors that cried "The Draggin' Wagon," "The Chicken Coop," "The Bird Cage, "Muff Diver Special," or "Don't laugh, your daughter may be in the back."

At one time, just about every van in the city carried the slogan, "Keep Truckin'." The reason for this has been lost in antiquity. It is believed to have been a sop, by the van owners, to the drivers of the eighteen-wheeler-highway-monsters who the van owners were afraid might be jealous of their jazzy transportation and try to run them off the road. This slogan is now becoming passe' and is slowly disappearing from sight as vans receive new paint jobs.

The ownership of vans is gradually shifting from the young and imaginative to middle age and middle class, who are changing the appearance of the vehicle to a more traditional look. The van exteriors have taken on a more traditional look. They are being painted in one solid color, generally in a metallic paint with a name painted on the side or the rear — depending on whether the owner is a side or rear man — that fits the owner's psyche, such as "Wallie's Wagon," "Jerry's Party Van," or "Pappy & Betty's Penthouse."

The structure of the van has changed from the low silhouette of the 1950's delivery wagon, to a tall, box-like structure with an enormous windshield, blister windows on the sides, and a screened ventiulator on the top. The sides have been carpeted, even the walls and ceiling. The pads on the floor have been replaced by padded benches and then individual chairs. Some hot-blooded innovative owners pulled out the benches and chairs and replaced them with a couch that could be unfolded to make a bed. Other owners, who lacked the necessary self-control, dispensed with the couch and simply installed a bed.

The California Van today is a large mobile hotel, with a refrigerator, a portable stove, stereo tape deck, CB radio, whip antennas, a television set. The van rolls along the highway on super wide balloon tires, which proudly proclaim to the world in large, raised, white letters, "POS-A-TRACTION."

What started out as a vehicle to carry surf boards to the beach has in approximately ten years grown into not only a status symbol, but a miniature home away from home, which can take you almost anywhere; to the beach, the desert, or over the river and through the woods to grandma's house.

Military people

Unite!

By George L. Prats

In the last year, the 96th Congress has been on the attack at benefits applicable to military retirees such as the Suck Pay Exclusion, Unemployment Insurance Coverage, the one percent Consumer Price Index lag period increment (Kicker), and has seriously considered discontinuing the support of the comparability criterion (due to intense grocery industry lobbying), and to permit the individual states to tax the compensatories and Post Exchange sales at the counters, something unprecedented in the entire history of military life.

Much objection has been raised by military and veteran associations to stop Congress from using the military segment as "punching bag" in order to satisfy other interest groups. Regrettably, these associations have not been very effective because their intermediation is centralized in the Capital, and therefore they lack the local government contacts at the local Congressional district level to make themselves heard.

In the last year, Congress has adjourned for the forthcoming elections and made little good time for the military retiree (or active duty man) to check the voting record of the incumbent congressman, before going to the ballot box. Should the voting record be less than satisfactory, a congressman's position may be obtained by calling him personally at his district office. Remember, three-and-a-half million votes carry a lot of clout if used wisely, and most of all, used locally. Use it.

Franking

A privilege or right?

By Mary Martin

Does the franking privilege that our congressmen possess give them the right to use it for their own glorification and benefit? One would think that the privilege has enough junk mail to process without the additional burden from Congressional correspondents. Someone might ask: Why doesn't the member of Congress do what a great representative has done for us in the past? Why doesn't he use his influence to make himself heard.

Our distinguished members of the House and Senate receive along with their numerous other fringe benefits, unlimited free mailing privileges on "office business." Does the member of Congress wish to have a couch and simply install a bed.

Does the member of Congress wish to reformulate the re-election of his congressman. Then it would be easier to give him our opinion, whether requested or not, or whether he is up for re-election or not.

Franking is a privilege, not a right, and when it is abused, the privilege should be taken away.

By George L. Prats

In the last year, the 96th Congress has been on the attack at benefits applicable to military retirees such as the Suck Pay Exclusion, Unemployment Insurance Coverage, the one percent Consumer Price Index lag period increment (Kicker), and has seriously considered discontinuing the support of the comparability criterion (due to intense grocery industry lobbying), and to permit the individual states to tax the compensatories and Post Exchange sales at the counters, something unprecedented in the entire history of military life.

Much objection has been raised by military and veteran associations to stop Congress from using the military segment as "punching bag" in order to satisfy other interest groups. Regrettably, these associations have not been very effective because their intermediation is centralized in the Capital, and therefore they lack the local government contacts at the local Congressional district level to make themselves heard.

In the last year, Congress has adjourned for the forthcoming elections and made little good time for the military retiree (or active duty man) to check the voting record of the incumbent congressman, before going to the ballot box. Should the voting record be less than satisfactory, a congressman's position may be obtained by calling him personally at his district office. Remember, three-and-a-half million votes carry a lot of clout if used wisely, and most of all, used locally. Use it.

Franking

A privilege or right?

By Mary Martin

Does the franking privilege that our congressmen possess give them the right to use it for their own glorification and benefit? One would think that the privilege has enough junk mail to process without the additional burden from Congressional correspondents. Someone might ask: Why doesn't the member of Congress do what a great representative has done for us in the past? Why doesn't he use his influence to make himself heard.

PANTIWAIST

There were a couple of tight ones (beep-beep) in the Pantiwaist division this week, but let's get the bad news out of the way first:

There was a tragic side note to this week's play. The Cougars picked up the contract of Dwayne (beep-beep) in the Pantiwaist misties by the aging Goods

The conversion was made by Roger "Butt Plug" Odle. Maria Myers. The conversion was this week's play. The Cougars "Korny" defense led to the questionable outcome of this contest.

Reliable sources tell me that the actual score might very well have been 21 to 20 in favor of the M M Goods.

But Korn, Cap'n Dong and the lovely vivacious Mike "Drive Ya' Home a Deal!" Stacker threatened to "cut off" Maria. When confronted with this prospect, she quickly agreed to the dubious outcome.

The second game provided Cal State with its second Pantiwaist folk hero, Dianne Bloecker. This delectable little dormie, this football phenom is the leader of the dorms own answer to the Green Bay Packers of the mid-sixties, the Grabbers.

She led her team to a startling come-from-behind (another beep-beep) 20 to 18 victory over the Try-ers.

Early in the first half the game looked like the Try-ers vs. residents of Forest Lawn. A balanced tryers offense led by the great passing combination of Dennis Mendonca to Dennis Mendonca, and the brilliant running of Dennis Mendonca led the Try-ers to an 18 to 9 lead late in the first half.

A late first half touchdown run by Richard Tram kept the game from becoming an apparent first half runaway for the Try-ers.

In the second half, however, the story changed. The Grabbers grabbed Dennis Mendonca and the Try-ers didn't try hard enough to stop the dazzling offense led by that scrumptious sweetheart, Dianne Bloecker.

So, as the clock ran out and the dust cleared, the Grabbers had completed the great comeback, a 20 to 18 victory.

CHALLENGE:

If you've got it, prove it. If you want it, work for it. If you think you're a leader show us. That's what we ask and expect of every college student who applies for our Officer Candidate Class program.

With ground, air, and law options, twelve weeks of hard but rewarding training at Quantico, Virginia earns the graduate a commission as a Marine Officer. Responsibility for the lives of men you'll lead, or for the multi-million dollar aircraft you'll fly.

It takes a special kind of man to seek and accept responsibility like that. If you're that special kind.

WE DON'T SETTLE FOR FIELD GOALS.

BLACK AND BLUE

The big Black and Blue Division news this week is that the Geeks and the Headhunters were bad sports, while the Mickey Mouse Club and the Raiders were good boys.

Well, Geeks and Headhunters stick out your hands. Slap!!

In the "Yell at the Refugees" Bowl, the Geeks beat the Headhunters in a clean, hard-fought 25 to 13 victory.

A new Black and Blue Division and overall scoring leader emerged in this game. He is Ivan Glasco, who scored 18 points Friday, to bring his total to 23. Ivan, your stereotyped football player, 5'8" and a burly 125 pounds worth, who teamed up with quarterback Al Diaz and backs Mike Sawyer and Dennis Mendonca to an 18 to 9 lead late in the first half.

A late first half touchdown run by Richard Tram kept the game from becoming an apparent first half runaway for the Try-ers.

In the second half, however, the story changed. The Grabbers grabbed Dennis Mendonca and the Try-ers didn't try hard enough to stop the dazzling offense led by that scrumptious sweetheart, Dianne Bloecker.

So, as the clock ran out and the dust cleared, the Grabbers had completed the great comeback, a 20 to 18 victory.

COMMISSIONER'S NOTE

As the game progressed last Friday, I noticed something necessary to comment on. In the Try-ers vs. the Grabbers there was a lot of grunting and other assorted sounds which essentially are the sounds which essentially are the product of hard-hitting. The Pantiwaist Division was set up as a totally competition "low key" fun league. If you wanted to really hit hard then you should have signed up to play Black and Blue Football, but, as it is too late to change leagues, and the Pantiwaist league will not change to accommodate you, maybe you should tone it down.

That's the way the game went. A tough Headhunter defense led by Richard Tram kept the game from becoming an apparent first half runaway for the Try-ers.

Do liberals want prosperity?

By Jim Austin

It has been generally believed that liberals and left-wingers are motivated by a desire to raise the standards of living of the people, particularly those on the bottom of the economic scale.

Are they?

"What America really needs is more shortages."

No, that isn't some corporate executive conspiring to create shortages to raise prices. That's James Reston (Good liberal!!!)

He continues: "It's not our caricatures but our surpluses that are hurting us. Americans have always been able to handle austerity and even adversity; prosperity's what's doing us in."

(Reader's Digest "Press Section," Feb. 1974, p. 18-19.)

Here is a liberal gloating over the projected decline in the economic conditions of the American people.

Conservatives, particularly the libertarian types, have taken for granted that liberals and, in a perverse way, left-wingers wanted to improve the lot of the people and have argued accordingly. Over the years, pro-capitalist economists have laboriously sought to prove that most of the problems liberals complain of is the result of their own policies: that inflation, booms and busts, coercive monopolies, chronic unemployment, shortages and other economic dislocations result from governmental actions.

They have demonstrated their case beyond anyone's power to refute. The problem is that their reasoning is long and involved and often taxes the patience of skeptical listeners. It is at best difficult to persevere in making those points against rhetoric, evasion, superficial reasoning, irrelevancies, emotional appeals and other such devices.

In the past there was some justification in ignoring the works of laissez faire economists. From W. J. War II to the 1960's, increased governmental activity in the economy was accompanied by increased affluence of middle and lower income Americans. Superficially one could conclude that liberal economic policies work.

Now that we are in state of economic decline, a reevaluation of current Keynesian economics would appear to be in order. (The fact that we're under a Republican administration should not obscure the fact that virtually no significant change in policies has taken place as Nixon himself affirmed being a "Keynesian" shortly after taking office.) According to the current doctrine, it is impossible to have inflation and recession at the same time. All that extra money the government keeps pumping into the economy via deficit spending is supposed to represent extra purchasing power to create demand for production from otherwise unused industrial capacity and unemployed workers. It hasn't been working out that way.

Under the circumstances one would expect to see an increasing interest in the one economic theory which is consistent with the facts by those interested in the people's economic wellbeing. What we see instead is a search for scapegoats: Those corporations are trying to increase profits by screwing the public. All those laws and regulatory agencies created to protect the public are a mere facade since those in the "ruling classes" can get their way on all issues affecting them.

Now before, when I advocated a free economy, I would be confronted with the specter of 19th century conditions with sweatshops, long hours, low wages and other such horrors, a situation which would still exist under the intervention of the government with the National Labor Relations Act, minimum wage laws, regulatory agencies, etc.

However, if all those governmental actions were at best superfluous as is currently believed, how does one explain the increasing affluence enjoyed by Americans since the 19th century? One could, of course, explain it in terms of the benevolence and generosity of the "power elite," but then we are usually portrayed as ruthless, vicious, stopping at nothing in their insatiable lust for profits.

In addition to all this, these same voices are hailing the projected decline in affluence. Books and magazine articles declare that all this prosperity is bad for us, is depleting our resources, polluting the environment, is at the expense of the rest of the world, etc. Now, they say, we are going to have to get used to a more modest state of existence.

Shirley Pettis speaks to the issues:

SENIOR CITIZENS — "Our senior citizens worked hard to make this the best country on earth and I am not prepared to say 'thank you' and forget them. I want to see increased social security benefits, health and nutritional services, and greater opportunities for housing for our senior citizens. They deserve our gratitude — not indifference."

SERVICE — "One of my important duties as your Member of Congress is to serve the needs of my constituents; I feel that the Federal bureaucracy should do no less. I want less bureaucracy and more help from the bureaucracy for the people it is supposed to serve — the American people."

ECONOMY — "The Federal budget has increased 40% in the last two years and that's too much. Our goal must be a balanced budget. This is possible only with rational management in the Congress."

Jimmy The Freak's Fearless Forecast

PAN Thwaist
1. MM Goods vs. Eba's
A game that pits sister, Connie of the Eba's vs. Maria the Goods.
The Goods like the other teams in the league get an extra bye they hadn't counted on. They play the Eba's.

2. Try-ers vs Cougars
The Cuaggars might be better, but the Try-ers might just be too gung-ho. The Try-ers may outscore the Cuaggars. But the Cuaggars will enjoy the game more. Try-ers by 6.

BLACK AND BLUE
1. Raiders vs. Headhunters
Steve Bucie's boys are an improving club, and are new good enough to win. But there is no love lost between these clubs, and the team who doesn't lose their temper will be the probably winner. Headhunters by 8.

2. Geeks vs. M.M.C.
A game almost too close to call. But if the MMC controls Ron Miller and Ivan Glacoo they will win. I don't think the Geeks can stop the versatile MMC offense. MMC by 7.

3-Person Basketball
Here we are again, ready for another season of 3-person basketball. This year, however, there is one big change.

We will play basketball instead of arguements amongst ourselves as was the case last year.

J. C. Wright, the commissioner, has let us have no room for error in preparing one of the best run intramural events this campus has seen. Thanks, J.C.

8-League Game of the Week
In the first week of action, the Misfits, the team everyone expects to win the league basketball crown with 3 straight wins over the league. Mannonal Midgets, the "I Don't Care".

All that can be said of this content is, it was close until the "I don't Care" showed up.

The Misfits picked the right name because Al Diaz and Olsen, Rich Harris and Steve Hernandez, don't belong in the "B" League. Enjoy your Tailgarts guys.

Next week's game of the week pits the Mental Midgets against the L.D.C. The L.D.C., an unlikely combination of strength, Jim Roesler, good looks, Jim Given, and basketball ability in Connie Myers. This game could end up scoreless.

4-League Game of the Week
The big game in the "big boys" league last week was a contest of educators with the Intramurals meeting the Hot Flashs.

The Hot Flashs led by Dave "Squirlly" Deckler, Bob "All Lixed" Stein and their fearless leader, Bob "Teach" Blackey could not stop the Intramurals, led by the voliplanet Walt Hawkins and Chris "Turkey" Grenfell.

The games were all very close and hard fought, but when the hot air cleared, the Intramurals had won 3 straight.

For next week's game of the week we will look at Ivan Glacoo's Manko vs. the Freshmen.

If you smell something funny in the air, or see golf balls flying. Then you know the Doover boys are back in town. Yes, Roy Sievers, Monty Pearson, Jack B. Hoffer and Col. Efrem Honeywell, USAF, Ret. are planning to compete in the intramural 3 par golf classic, which will take place in November.

Like the famous Cartwright Brothers, the infamous Doover boys also have a father named Ben.

Liberals want prosperity?

The point isn't over whether it's all true or not (It isn't), but the fact that they are happy about it. Thus all that ranting and raving about conspiracies is not over those who are being depraved, but over those who aren't.

In short, liberals and leftists are basically indifferent to poverty and deprivation. It is the contemplation of those who are not in poverty, those enjoying material possessions, that drive them up the wall in outrage and anger (or in case of themselves, guilt).

Those on the left want a decrease in people's standard of living. The evidence has always been around us. The term "affluence" has always been a dirty word. As far back as I can remember, people have always reproached each other for their materialism, "chasing the almighty dollar," "keeping up with the Joneses," selfishness, platitude, greed, ad nauseam. Such reproaches reeked of hypocrisy and moral duplicity since one did not usually find the speakers divesting themselves of their possessions to live in voluntary poverty. Even less inpiring were those whose actions were consistent with their words. (Remember the hippie movement?)

Yes! But what about all those feelings they like to display for the poor and underprivileged? Yes indeed! They do like to make those mushy, slytish, misty-eyed, thoroughly nauseating speeches about the plight of the poverty stricken. They relish every opportunity to demonstrate their concern. And if reality doesn't supply enough appropriate situations for their concern, they will invent them.

In 1969, liberals were talking about 17 million people going to bed hungry. In 1964, the number swelled to 33 million. In 1966 the number dropped to 18 million. In 1969, CBS presented a documentary on "Hunger in America" displaying an infel which allegedly had died of starvation; only it died of premature birth. One can only begin to imagine their happiness as the real situation begins to approximate the dreamworld they have created.

Since their sympathy for the poor is exceeded only by the hostility towards those not poor, it's about time their motives are examined. One could very well discover that issues between capitalism, socialism, or maybe none of these issues. That those decisions ultimately depend upon the resolution of a more fundamental issue: is the desire for material benefit right? Or is it wrong, like morally condemned or at best cynically tolerated?

If the latter is the case, then is perfectly right to destroy the wealth that has resulted from evil motives (the only way things exist) which is what you happen all around us today.
