Does Kaiser Redline Medical Services to Blacks?

Kathy Velasco

The Black Voice News

The current Black doctor population in this country is only about 6.5% of the population. This percentage is actually down from the 1980s, when it was closer to 7%. The number of Black medical students has steadily declined since the late 1980s, and the number of Black physicians has decreased as well. This decline can be attributed to a number of factors, including economic and social barriers, lack of access to medical education, and discrimination in the medical field.

The lack of Black doctors has serious implications for the health of the Black community. Studies have shown that Black patients are less likely to receive timely and appropriate care, and are more likely to experience discrimination and mistreatment. At the same time, Black doctors are an important factor in the health of the Black community. They are more likely to have the cultural competency to understand and address the unique health needs of Black patients.

The Black American Medical Association (BAMA) has been working to address the issue of the shortage of Black doctors. They have developed initiatives to increase the number of Black medical students and physicians, and to improve the diversity of the medical workforce. These efforts have had some success, but much more needs to be done.

Saluting Laborers on Labor Day

We want to take this time to salute people who contribute so much time to improve the quality of our living standards here in America. These stalwart workers who toil endlessly, who put food on our tables, who factory workers who provide machinery and equipment to the farms, who medical workers who care for us when we become ill, who are the medical care workers and their supporting staff who do so much to keep us alive, who construction workers who build our homes, who office workers who keep those homes running smoothly, who technical service workers who clean up after us, who clerical workers who purify written communication, greet our customers and receive phone calls, who delivery workers who transport our products for easy access, the gardeners who manicure our landscapes and countless others who toil day in and day out to improve our lives.

We can never forget the struggles of our forefathers who labored under conditions that we would not tolerate. We stand on their shoulders of sacrifice. We reap the benefits of their struggles to obtain employee benefits that some employees are now taking away. We must not fail at the altar and allow this to happen. We urge our President to banish the Air Traffic Controllers big business has placed organized labor under attack. They have rolled back wages, taken away paid holidays, reduced the sick leave hours and in some cases refuse to hire full-time employees so they will not have to give employees benefits. Union members must resist this assault and Take Care Of Business.

One of the first and greatest African American union organizers was the late W. E. Burghardt Du Bois. He made Presidents change their minds by bringing huge numbers of African Americans to Washington D.C. to organize and get them to act. His organization was the militant March on Washington D.C. when King gave his famous "I Have A Dream" speech. Let us take this Labor Day and thank the many who gave much, instead of viewing this day as just another day to enjoy the beach.

Laborers of America, we salute you!

Rhapsodies in Black: The Harlem Renaissance at LA Museum

The Harlem Renaissance refers to a cultural movement centered in New York's African American community during the early 1900s. This exhibition will feature not only paintings, graphics from this period, but also photographs, diaries, and videos. It also examines Harlem based on the paintings done in the 1920s and 1930s. For example, Whistler was one of the most famous Harlem Renaissance artists. This exhibition will feature African American art and the facility in Walnut Creek, as well as in the San Francisco area.

Does Kaiser Redline Medical Services to Blacks?

Contrast from front page of this issue, one man who had said he was at the hospital said, "They see this as their hospital," she said. Campbell said the issue has racial overtones because "If you look at the death rate of African American children under age 18. The Kaiser hospital in Richmond is located in a Black community. In Richmond, 11 percent of all households earn under $10,000 a year and 26 percent of related children under age 18 are poor. According to Kaiser's 1995 Patient Discharge report, the state of California reports showed that in 1995, the number of patient discharges were African American and 49 percent were women. What are the statistics for women, in the Richmond. Black, on the other hand, had a discharge percentage share 6 percent less than their proportional representation in the community. According to the California Nurses Association, Richmond Blacks and the city officials are upset because the city gave Kaiser tax dollars to make site improvements, including a new land clean up and the remitting of streets. Kaiser promised to maintain its Richmond facility with more local officials who are reportedly considering a lawsuit against Kaiser.

Campbell said, "We have delivered babies in this 'standing room only' situation. We are only allowed to take care of every mother with a baby in a room with a group. We can't always be here when the boys in the hood have a rumble." Meanwhile, many of the employees at Kaiser in Richmond are Black. The clinic is forced to turn patients who are not of the Los Angeles County and other areas, the hospital will be closed in October 19, 1998. There will be an extended period of time for Kaiser in Richmond to close. On Saturday, September 12th and Sunday, September 13th, the Richmond staff will get answers to the questions as: What was the Harlem Renaissance and filmmakers of various ethnic backgrounds focus on modern African American life in their work? How did artists, writers, and filmmakers working in the United States, Europe, and Latin America explore the Black experience? Does Kaiser Redline Medical Services to Blacks?

Our Bodies

Gotta Have Heart

Dear Dr. Levister: I am 12 years old. My class is studying the heart. What can you tell me about the heart? P.K.

Dear P.K.: How many times have you stopped to think how important your heart really is? Most of us just take the heart for granted. We think of this muscle to work 24 hours a day for seven days a week for about 70 years. Some of our parents and we often get tired and have little time to rest or take a break. The heart is a very complex organ. It is a muscle that keeps our body alive. The heart is responsible for pumping blood throughout the body. The heart rate is approximately 60 to 100 beats per minute. The heart is a very important organ.
