Evans' letter stirs controversy

The following is a letter from Dr. Anthony Evans, President of CSUSB, addressed to the Chancellor of the CSU system. This letter has created some disturbance among minority students, who feel that Evans has, at least, written them off, if not having come to the situation with good intentions in the first place.

The Coyote Chronicle learned of the letter through a copy of it which has been distributed here on campus, and which had been published in The Black Voice News, a newsletter circulated locally. That publication interviewed Dr. Evans and he insists the letter shows only his concern, not biases. Evans shows no trace of this content. We welcome any learned of the letter through our campus. I will not discuss the details of that plan in this communication other than to say that it continues the ongoing process on our campus to improve significantly our service to underrepresented students. To be sure, it reflects a university-wide priority about which we feel very deeply.

I wish to share with you, as a matter of record, my concerns about the difficulty of the task before us. While the opportunities for service to underrepresented minorities are enormous, we must not minimize the practical difficulties in this area. My own appreciation of these difficulties grows almost daily. Despite growing legislative pressures for quick improvements, I fear that short-term gains will be minimal, at best. Just to prevent further erosion may be as much as we can expect initially. The prospects for long-term improvements are somewhat better, in my judgement, only because of the new standards for The Chronicle.

Permit me to explain briefly why I feel such increasing impotence in this area. Worsening social problems affecting Blacks and Hispanics, of which you are as well informed as I, are the primary basis for my concern. I am confident about improving instruction and educational support services at CSU institutions, but I am not about changing present social conditions in any significant way. Our own campus' early intervention efforts with underrepresented minorities, which I find impressive and encouraging, are dwarfed by the increasing social and economic problems of our region. I see no quick changes in these conditions—indeed, they will probably grow more serious...or effective antidote.

I make this point not because it is unknown to you, but only to urge caution against our promising too much too quickly. In the past, American higher education has sometimes promised too much in social areas and also has acquiesced to ever-increasing societal expectations. While I am a reformer at heart, I keep reminding myself that the business of education is education. We educators alone just cannot reform American society, or even California.

The second reason why I doubt that we will see in the near future a major turn-around in our educational equity efforts is that we educators can only facilitate learning and student educational advancement. I have concluded that one of the important reasons why our current educational equity programs have not achieved our expectations is that we have not succeeded in making underrepresented students more independent learners. To the contrary, I believe that we have actually nurtured student dependence. Our own experience at CSUSB is replete with examples of this particular problem. We have so much to do in retraining our staffs in this area, and even if we are successful, I am not sure just how many underrepresented students are ready, emotionally and intellectually, for a university experience. In short, there are natural impediments over which we educators have limited control.

I have commented in writing to Dr. Carter that one of the recommendations of the EEAC Report was our failure to address this issue. We educators must become more adept in providing motivation, instruction, and educational support services, but the primary responsibility for student persistence must reside with the student. We can influence student behavior, but we cannot control it. Our legislators must understand this.

A final reason why I am less optimistic about making any immediate gains among underrepresented minorities is the enormous proscription associated with our current educational equity programs. We cannot overcome the number of constraints under which we operate: separate target populations, separate program areas, separate budget allocations, separate program requests, separate program reports, separate tracking systems, separate reporting systems, and separate staff.

This long history of separateness works against efforts to achieve meaningful integration of funding and program areas.

You have heard all of this before, but I want to impress upon you how much worse it is in practice than what you might have been told. Only a modern day Gulliver could appreciate the number of strings that bind us in these program areas.

Moreover, far too many existing educational equity staff members are wedded to separateness and oppose, sometimes quite vehemently, programmatic integration. This is lamentable, especially when changes which the EEAC

Public Misinformation goads students

There are many contemporary intentional propagations of exaggerated fact and misinformation deceptively disguised as truth with the intended purpose of manipulating public opinion toward a desired direction. One example surfaced recently in a memo released by one of Reagan’s White House staff members in which it was ordered that the press be supplied with false information about Monroe Klaudt with the intent of further incensing an already aroused negative public opinion (probably for the purpose of further justifying this country’s bombing of Tripoli); rather than pouring gasoline on a raging fire to create a smokescreen for other activities.

Another recent instance of public misinformation was brought to light in a letter published in this paper (October 1). While the intent of preserving mental health may be as honourable as Reagan’s intent to protect us from terrorism, the perpetual labeling of illegal substances as necessarily harmful is a popularly endorsed untruth fabricated to support a particular perception of morality. In particular, the misleading reference to marijuana as “harshful” and “causing the birth of deformed babies” is a form of pure conjecture (as defined: the expression of an opinion without sufficient evidence for proof) in vogue among many publicly-marking figures whose opinions vastly outnumber their facts and who would also warn us of the dangers to society in certain forms of music, books, movies, and ideas. Such a diet of facts should not be unquestionably swallowed whole.

In March 1975, Consumer Reports magazine published a survey of marijuana studies that had been done up to that time. The most negative, fear-inducing and often ill-founded studies were sponsored and published by (and used to justify the policies of) the federal government. The Consumer Reports survey also noted a study carried out by the National Institute of Mental Health. This study centered in Jamaica where the daily use of ganja (marijuana) has been encouraged among certain groups for generations. This study of the effects of long term marijuana consumption found no substantial differences in health of body or mind, between users and non-users. Three years after its completion this study was still unpublished in this country (and may still be withheld from publication, I haven't had time to check).

There is a definite distinction between useful and abusive consumption of any consciousness altering substance. The epidemic abuse of drugs is a symptom of deep underlying disease in the American body politic. The attempt to eradicate drug abuse alone without dealing with the causes inherent in our culture is like burning out a chancore sore as a means of curing syphilis. There are many different motivations leading to substance abuse; from recreational to anesthetic to the drive for success. Fierce competition in certain groups induces the use of substances that would enhance one’s efficiency as a competitor. This is not only demonstrated by aspirate use among athletes, but also amphetamine and cocaine use among college students (especially medical students) where long hours of alert attentiveness may be chemically induced in order to put one out in the head of a busy and ambitious little group of competitors. Continued use of such substances cannot persist for very long before physical debilitation renders the opposites of the desired effect, but habits used to attain success may be even harder to break than patterns of failure.

The use of consciousness altering drugs is like that of fire: it can enhance creativity and awareness if used productively, or it is a means of self-destructive actions when abused. This metaphor occurred to me nearly twenty years ago when I first began using marijuana and LSD. Though I still enjoy and respect the expanded perceptions attained through some experiences, I would so encourage a person to use drugs than I would recommend that they abandon. This choice is a matter of personal decision. I have known hundreds of marijuana smokers (staff included) who have become parents of perfectly healthy children. The spreading of misinformation about drugs with the intent of reducing their abuse only has the opposite effect. When I first realized I’d been lied to about marijuana I felt compelled to experience and uncover further dogmatic distortions and to seek the truth behind the rest of the fog of society’s indoctrination, it an ongoing, never-ending process. Lies are what is killing this country from the inside. It’s better to remain silent than to fabricate falseness from fact.

In light of the recently collapsed summit meeting, at which neither Reagan or Gorbachev was able to give a little in the name of world peace or humanity, we here at The Chronicle have put together a 'top ten' list of things to do in case of nuclear attack. We note cheerfully that this list was constructed after gruesomely interrogating a group of local ground squirrels.

TOP TEN
1. Pay off all those overdue debts.
2. Wear clean underwear (and try to keep it that way).
3. Have sex (sorry ladies, no time for foreplay).
4. Stick your head in a toilet so that your face doesn't melt off.
6. Learn to belch.
7. Try LSD.
8. Burrow two feet into the dirt and pretend you're a potato.
9. Request a blindfold, hang yourself with it.
10. Be glad you're not suffering a more gruesome or ridiculous death. (Say, being ground up in the jaws of a wheat harvester).

Reagan, Gorbachev stalemate at summit

*by Suzy Zidbeck
Special to the Chronicle*

President Reagan arrived early Sunday night from a summit meeting with Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev in Reykjavik, Iceland. He arrived home with a grim face and nothing to show.

The meetings concluded in a stalemate. Although at one point it seemed as though there might be some agreement on the issue of nuclear arms, it never quite came together.

The argument of whether or not to continue Star Wars was the main problem. While Reagan said that he wanted Star Wars to protect the U.S., Gorbachev insisted that research be confined to the ground. Gorbachev wanted 10-year ban on developing, testing and deploying Star Wars. He wanted an all or nothing agreement so Reagan chose nothing.

There were two days of very tough and hard meetings with an overtime meeting on Sunday. But according to Secretary of State George Schultz, the talks were very straightforward and civil.

Supposedly, this summit was to prepare for a full scale summit in the U.S. later on. The chances of that happening now are not very probable. In fact, Gorbachev stopped short of calling the summit a complete and total failure.

Operation Gold-coast headlines merger try

*by Suzy Zidbeck
Special to the Chronicle*

"Operation Gold-coast is underway. That is what First Interstate, the ninth-largest banking company in the U.S. is calling their strategy for merging with Bank of America. A four-page letter sent by First Interstate to Bank of America's board was a merger offer worth about 2.8 billion dollars. The letter stated that if the merger of the two companies would Bank of America's (the parent of Bank of America) retain its name and San Francisco headquarters, but also that the current boards of both banks would be combined. First Interstate also said they would put BankAmerica in the climb toward interstate banking.

First Interstate requested that Bank of America not disclose the information contained in the letter while negotiations were underway, yet the letter was released on October 6. Sources say that could be an indication of a refusal of the offer.

Officials met on October 5 in New York to discuss questions dealing with cost savings, BankAmerica assets, protection of BankAmerica shareholders and projected earnings for the two banks both separately and together.

Earthquake leaves 970 dead in El Salvador

El Salvador earthquake on Friday the 10th has left 970 people dead as of Monday night. The death toll is still expected to climb.

Over 10,000 people have been injured and two hundred thousand are homeless.

Relief efforts started almost immediately with medical supplies being shipped along with doctors and nurses.

Collection plates are being passed around in many churches here to help.

Monday morning a big aftershock occurred.

Young Democrats to meet

The "CSUSB Young Democrats Club" will hold its first meeting October 17, from 1 pm - 2 pm, in the Senate Chambers, in the Student Union. It's advisor is Professor of Political Science, Carol F. Goas. The "Y.D.S." function is to increase student awareness and participation in the political process, thus, all students, regardless of political affiliation, are encouraged to join.

Preparations are now being made, with cooperation from the San Bernardino Democratic Party Headquarters, at allowing club members to help man the H.Q. on Election Day, November 4. Car pooling for those needing transportation will be discussed at the October 17 meeting.

Officers for the 1986-87 school year will be chosen at the next meeting, time and place to be announced later. For more information, contact Patrick Lewis, at (714) 888-5946.

Gay and Lesbian Union to meet

The next meeting of the Gay and Lesbian Union will be held on Wednesday, October 22 from noon - 1:00 p.m. in Student Services 171. We will discuss program plans for the fall quarter. Students, faculty and staff are encouraged to attend.

For more information, contact faculty advisor Dr. Craig Henderson, Dean of Student Office, 887-7624.

Drop deadline set: Critical date is October 15th

*by Vida Mahmoom
Chronicle Staff Writer*

Who ever thought that changing a course was an easy job? I mean if you are new at Cal State or are a transfer student, you would probably not have any idea of how to go about adding or dropping a course, and those who have had the experience of adding or dropping would say that it is a long and tiring process. In order for those who wish to have a schedule change without going through the same task, here are some helpful tips on adding or dropping classes.

Students who are currently enrolled in a class which they wish to drop should do so as soon as possible. At Cal State any course that needs to be changed or dropped has to be taken care of by October 15th. If students miss the deadline they will receive a grade of U, an unauthorized withdrawal, which shows up on school records.

Of course, there are exceptions in any case.

Students who have a doctor's excuse or any other official reason for not being able to drop by the 15th are allowed to drop after the deadline. The program change forms are available at Admissions and Records, and for students who attend night classes they are available at the Evening Office at the east side of the library.

Students should keep in mind the deadline for dropping because it is essential to have any changes made as soon as possible.

Unfortunately, the time for adding courses has already passed, but there is an alternative. Students who have the experience of the instructor and the approval of the dean can add new courses to their schedules.

If you are considering any kind of schedule change, do so immediately. Time is running out!
Debate: See-saw strikes elusive balance

G. Gordon Liddy debated Dr. Hassan Hussaini on Monday Oct. 6th by a standing room only crowd of over 600 students and community members. The debate, which was mediated by Dr. Bulgarella in the Commons, was centered on the topic of terrorism—how to define it and how to end it. The event was sponsored by the A.S. Special Events Committee and co-sponsored by the CSU Intellectual Life Committee.

Dr. Hussaini opened the debate by providing an historical perspective on the nature of terrorism, citing incidents from as far back as Roman persecution of the Jews to as recent as the massacre at My Lai. He defined terrorism as being, essentially, the killing of innocent civilians, adding that there is also psychological terrorism, as in cases where governments stifle opposition with the threat of torture and jail.

"I am sorry to say that throughout history every nation... has committed acts of terrorism," he said. Hussaini's position is that there is no justification for killing innocent civilians, that it is an act which originates in desperation and culminates in the loss of respect for human life. The solution, he contends, is to go out and bomb known terrorist bases—this, in itself, is an act of terrorism, he contended, and it can only lead to a cycle of vengeance and bloodshed where innocent people pay the price.

Dr. Hussaini outlined what he suggests is the best way to deal with terrorists: An increase in security at airports world-wide; a consistent policy which each nation adheres to; a policy which deals with the root of terrorism (which Hussaini insists is a "local" problem); strengthening of international law; a universally accepted educational program which would foster respect for human life; a process by which known terrorists can be brought to trial and, through due process, punished in accordance with the crime they have committed.

"Search them out... and kill them" Dr. Hussaini's primary assertion was that any act which results in the death of "innocent civilians" is an act of terrorism—be it an act of war, political insurrection, or even personal vengeance as when the man opened fire in the McDonald's in San Diego county a few years ago. G. Gordon Liddy disputed that assertion. He said that an act of terrorism occurs when (and only when) there is a "deliberate targeting of civilians in order to advance a political cause... that is terrorism. Yes, indeed, innocent persons die in war, but they are not the targets, Liddy said.

He went on to suggest that the causes of terrorism are irrelevant and should not be taken into consideration when we are dealing with terrorist activities.

"America is founded on respect for life" Terrorism is engaged in because it has proven to be effective... the minute we take into account what they want, the minute we sit down and start wringing our hands and worrying about what causes—and so on and so forth—they are being effective," Liddy declared.

Liddy added that terrorists seek media coverage, while Hussaini declared that no terrorist looks around for T.V. cameras when a strike is being made.

Throughout the debate, applause was divided equally among both Hussaini and Liddy.

"We trust the Special Events Committee to..." In a telephone interview, Hussaini said. In a telephone interview, Hussaini said. In a telephone interview, Hussaini said. In a telephone interview, Hussaini said. In a telephone interview, Hussaini said. In a telephone interview, Hussaini said.

Hussaini's primary position was that we should create a universal respect for human life, by saying that such a project is impossible because we can't change human nature. "Remember," he said, "that the Jews are still awaiting the coming of the Messiah, and that the Christians are still awaiting the second coming of Christ, it is then and only then that the millennium will be upon us. It is then, and only then, perhaps, that the nature of man will change."

The Liddy/Hussaini debate on terrorism was the source of much discussion on our campus. But, perhaps the most controversial question surrounding the debate was that of Liddy's character. Hussaini asked the question whether or not a man of Liddy's political background, a convicted murderer, a confessed murderer, he is also an ex-convicted felon. Certainly he exhibits values and behavior that undermine the spirit of the university's mission. Liddy's fame is based on his conviction in the Watergate affair and on his involvement in plots to subvert liberty and freedom of expression... (we) should cherish freedom of expression... Let Liddy come, let him speak. But need we contribute our precious resources?

The petition goes on to say that by paying Liddy to speak they have witnessed a cherished right—freedom of expression—be withheld against itself—and that we have financed that assault. It concludes, "We demand that the Special Events Committee seriously re-evaluate the philosophy that could lead to such an invidious choice..."

"America is founded on respect for life" Terrorism is engaged in because it has proven to be effective... the minute we take into account what they want, the minute we sit down and start wringing our hands and worrying about what causes—and so on and so forth—they are being effective," Liddy declared.

Much less sophisticated thanness of a terrorism which deals with the roots of terrorism (which Hussaini insists is a "local" problem); strengthening of international law; a universally accepted educational program which would foster respect for human life; a process by which known terrorists can be brought to trial and, through due process, punished in accordance with the crime they have committed.

Liddy added that terrorists seek media coverage, while Hussaini declared that no terrorist looks around for T.V. cameras when a strike is being made.

Throughout the debate, applause was divided equally among both Hussaini and Liddy, but Liddy came away, clearly, as being the most dynamic speaker of the two. Said one audience member, "Liddy is a fantastic speaker, but his ideas are just a tad bit frightening."
Soccer squad pushing to consistent goal

From a bye Monday to a “Super” Saturday, the Cal State Coyotes saw it all the week of the 4th. CSUSB saw a 4-0 loss to a dominant CSU, Dominguez Hills team, a tough 2-0 win over a stubborn Azusa Pacific squad, and a 7-0 blowout of the Poets from Whittier College.

The Coyotes Coach, Carlos Juarez, did not take the week’s sole matchup lightly. “Point Loma is tough, they were a very difficult team for us last year. We will have to earn a victory over them,” said Juarez. In anticipation of next week’s acid test, the Coyotes will have most of this week to work on the team’s offense.

Scoring goals for Cal State were: Jerry O’Hara (junior, Fontana, Lake Shore HS, NY) with two, Trevor Coleman (fresman, San Bernardino, San Gorgonio HS) and Chapman College.

Randy Green (Chico/Chico St). coach Juarez said, “Jerry O’Hara had been in a dry spell and it’s good to see him playing strongly again.” In looking ahead, “The team will have to push itself now to remain consistent,” said the Coyote Coach.

The CSUSB Women’s Cross Country team is undefeated and the Men’s team took great strides towards finding a solid replacement in the fifth running spot.

Saturday (4th) meet was the first head-to-head competition for the Coyotes and was run in a double-dual format, (each team runs only once but is scored separately against the other two teams in the order that the runners finish). The CSUSB Women were led by sophomore Rebecca Hodde (Riverside/Notre Dame HS) over the three mile course in a time of 18:45. Hodde captured a second place finish against Azusa Pacific University and lost but also picked up some outstanding experience,” said CSUSB’s Coach, Tom Burleson, in describing the remaining half of Saturday’s meet. The CSUSB Men scored 40 points to Azusa Pacific University’s 17, and CSUSB scored 18 versus Mount St. Mary’s 38. The lower score in Cross Country wins giving the CSUSB Men a current record of 1-1 in head-to-head competition.

Brad Phillips paced the Coyote runners with a lifetime best time of 28:36 over a five mile course. Just seven seconds after Phillips was Carlos Gallegos, and only 21 seconds behind was CSUSB’s strongest runner (slowed by a leg injury), freshman Robert Horvath.

Coach Burleson says his teams have the right attitude and the Men’s team is working hard to overcome their lack of experience. This weekend will test both for the Coyotes as they face NCAA Division II schools, Southern Utah State and Chapman College.

The CSUSB Lady Spikers jump to Top 5 in region

CSUSB’s Volleyball team is currently 11-3 and despite Saturday, the 4th, loss to Biola University, the Lady Coyotes should be ranked among the top five teams regionally in the week’s ratings.

Ruderman felt the week’s loss was a positive experience for CSUSB and that playing a tall, powerful team like Biola University enables the smaller Lady Coyotes to develop and progress within their style of play. CSUSB played the Biola to four games with the final scores: 10-15, 15-10, 9-15, 8-15.

“The team didn’t play consistently against a much taller Biola team that hit the ball much better than we did,” said CSUSB coach Naomi Ruderman. Earlier in the week the Cal State team was a model of consistency. The Lady Coyotes faced Pomona-Pitzer and the University of Redlands for the third time this season and defeating both teams for the third time. CSUSB vs. Pomona-Pitzer: 16-14, 15-11, 15-8 and CSUSB vs. The University of Redlands: 15-2, 15-4, 15-5.
Volleyballers, ranked fourth, defeat Masters

By Matt Pollack
Chronicle Staff Writer

Although it took them a full game to get warmed up, the lady Coyote volleyball team came back to defeat Master’s College in four games last Tuesday night, 8-15, 15-9, 15-3, 15-4.

Head coach Naomi Ruderman stated that her team began the match really slow and tentative. "We were not playing our game. In the second game, we started to put things together—playing more aggressive; playing our rhythm—and it showed," she added. Ruderman also stated that once the Coyotes built up speed, the Master’s team was unable to keep up. "It forced them to make errors.

Slow is exactly how the volleyball match started for the Lady Coyotes. The Mustangs from Master’s blew out to a 3-0 lead before CSUSB ever got on the board. The Mustangs built that lead to 11-3 when Bridget Austin put some life into her team with a spike, making the score 11-5. Ruderman stated that both teams were "very alert defensive games. Along with them, Laura Isbell had 12 kills and teammate McDonald had four good digs for the Coyotes, who are now 12-3.

Coyote kickers improved, inspired

By A. Christine Stanfield

Jerry O’Hara does not like to take all the credit for his success on the soccer field. Even though he leads the team in goals with 7, he credits his team members for each goal.

"For every goal that I score, there’s a good assist," said O’Hara recently. O’Hara, a 6-foot forward, is in his second year on the CSUSB soccer team. The team, only in its third year at CSUSB, has improved over last year’s team.

"We are playing better this year," O’Hara said. "We know each other better, and we are in a good position to make the playoffs.

The team, at mid-season, has already completed its toughest part of the season. According to O’Hara, the future looks positive.

O’Hara gives much of the credit for the team’s success to the team’s goalkeeper, Randy Green, in his first year at CSUSB. Green has shutout the opposition in four out of the five win teams.

Another factor in the team’s success is right back Trevor Coleman. O’Hara calls Coleman a hustler, especially since he plays both offense and defense. "He is a tough guy for the backhawks. They are the unsung heroes of the game," O’Hara said. Coleman’s hustling has paid off, he leads the team in assists.

The team’s inspiration comes from team captain, Mark Texter. Texter is playing his third season on the team. According to O’Hara he is the seasoned veteran. "He is the real hunter, especially for being a forward," added O’Hara. O’Hara considers himself a team player, though he still feels bad when he does not do his job. O’Hara’s success as a soccer player goes back to when he was a little kid.

“When I was just a little kid, about 6-years-old, I thought it would be fun to try soccer, I have loved the game ever since," he said with a smile.

O’Hara has played soccer every year since those eye-opening days. He began his career playing organized ball with the AYSO federation in Orange County. He then moved with his family to New York and continued to play soccer. O’Hara played his freshman year at the University of Fredonia, Fredonia NY.

After that first year, O’Hara returned to California with his family. He notes one difference between the two states and their relationship to the game of soccer.

“In New York soccer is a big sport on campus and there is a lot of patronage of the games. But in California soccer is taking a back seat to some other popular campus sports." During this time he practices drills in game-situations and conditioning. All the practice has played off for O’Hara. In the words of his coach Carlos Juarez, “We wouldn’t be the same team without him.”

O’Hara had good things to say about his coach, too. “He has done some incredible things considering how young the team is. In three years he has built the team and has made it into a playoff contender.”

Despite the fact that soccer has a wide following in other parts of the world, it seems to be catching on slowly in the United States. O’Hara attributes this fact to too many people who do not find it as exciting as football.

O’Hara explains this is reflective of a certain amount of ignorance of the sport.

Intramural offerings

By Sharna Wilson

The intramural program at Cal State continually provides fun and recreation for students, faculty, and staff. The main objectives of the program are to promote social and physical recreation while providing relaxation from studies and other commitments. Intramurals cover a wide range of recreation from traditional team sports such as football, volleyball, and basketball, to unique one day events such as 5K runs and canoe races.

Under the supervision of Joe Long, the Recreational Sports Director, many events have been planned that are sensitive to the wants of students. Long explains that intramurals are "participation oriented" and encourages students to actively support the program. Although the more significant rewards are not material, intramural T-shirts may be awarded by winning or simply participating in an event. For example, Coyote T-shirts are awarded to those who participate at least thirty times in ten different events during the year, as well as to all champions.

This year’s canoe race was held Oct. 3 at Glen Helen. First place was awarded to Michelle M. Williams and Rick Boodt. Free hats and mineral water were provided for all participants and mugs were awarded to the top four teams.

Some upcoming events are the Pentathlon on Oct. 25, a 5K Turkey Trot on Nov. 19, and Super Sports Saturday starting Nov. 8.
Opening day for the CSUSB baseball team will be remembered as the first time the Coyotes have ever fielded a full team. For head coach Chuck Deagle that day will be against the team that he led while College World Series is a high point of his professional career. Deagle didn't see himself as a coach; he sees himself portraying the role of counselor. Deagle's University of Redlands background influenced his view on the coach-athlete relationship, but added that out on the field, Deagle stressed, "It's really fascinating. And with any slip of the knife, no one would ever know, so one could sue you. Besides, she said, "They'll always be close."

Deagle said he believes his team should be close to one another. The key, he says, is that closeness. College life, according to Deagle, is life in a bubble. Students have no worries except to do well in classes. For those students living in the dorms there are no dirty dishes to wash or other responsibilities to overburden someone.

During times like these, the player's coach becomes almost like a second father. No matter what anyone else says, coaches influence the young men. It was this type of influence that inspired Deagle to become a coach. One of Deagle's players, Ramee Richards, a transfer student from Redlands, said: "He has a good rapport with the players; it isn't a coach-athlete relationship, but rather, friend to friend."

"He expects 110 percent. He wants you to do the best you can for yourself. He wants the closeness to be able to relate to one another on the field," Richards added.

Deagle's University of Redlands background influenced his view on the role education plays for an athlete. "I still believe the main purpose for being here at college is to get an education," Deagle stressed, "as an athlete. Deagle stressed, but added that out on the baseball field, baseball is first. "I like players who play because they want to play. That's how I grew up. Players weren't paid money to play," he said.

Deagle did mention, however, that he missed out on some players during recruitment because they didn't have the grades to participate. Education was the primary reason that Deagle moved here from Redlands. "I felt it would be a better opportunity for a full-time teaching position," he said. Besides his work here, Deagle is a full-time teacher at Fontana High School.

A good look around Deagle's office reflects the small amount of time he spends there. There are no pictures on the walls. The only personal item is a desk calendar. "It is important that we do well this year, so we can attract other players. Though it is going to take a little time." "This team is going to be a history team. We are starting from scratch. It is going to be an interesting year. All I see are questions. Everything is brand new," he added.

"I am happy where my career is going. I am not complaining. That's just the way it is."

Not just another student...

By Matt Pollock

Lisa McDonald is quite different from any other student that you might meet on the Cal State campus. Besides being a team captain and a talented outside hitter for the lady Coyote volleyball team, the coarse-voiced, brown-haired, hazel-eyed junior is studying to become a mortician.

McDonald, who was born at Robbiss Air Force Base in Georgia, is a 1984 graduate of Redlands High School. She has one younger brother, Patrick, who is a freshman at Cal Poly Pomona.

Before moving to Redlands, McDonald's family lived in Kaiserstrasse, West Germany, where her father was stationed at the Air Force Base there. It was here that McDonald first became interested in volleyball.

As a high school freshman in Germany, McDonald said that the "just tried out to see what it was like." She soon realized that she was in love with the game of volleyball and continued to play when her family moved to Redlands in 1982.

AT Redlands, McDonald played both volleyball and was the centerfielder for the Terrier's softball team.

From her experiences in scientific laboratory classes in high school, McDonald said that she grew interested in becoming a mortician. She is a biology major at CSUSB and plans to get her degree in that field.

After attaining her degree she plans to go into mortuary science, which McDonald says is a two-year program.

When asked why she is interested in becoming a mortician, McDonald replied, "It's really fascinating. And with any slip of the knife, no one would ever know, so no one could sue you. Besides," she said, "They'll always be close."

McDonald said that after working as a mortician for a few years, she would like to become a coroner. "And," she added, "I want to own my own mortuary."

Besides spending many hours practicing and playing volleyball, McDonald is busy with classes and laboratory sessions in chemistry and biology. She is taking 13 units during the current quarter at CSUSB.

McDonald said that she lives near the campus and her parents have moved to Palmdale, California. Her father works for Rockwell International and her mother is employed as a secretary by the Army Corps of Engineers at Edwards Air Force Base.

During the summer months, McDonald works as a lifeguard and is a certified swimming instructor. She said, "I love little kids." Along with swimming, McDonald likes to snow ski and play the game of Wallyball.

The 17" volleyball star also takes a special interest in reading and likes to go dancing when she has some free time. She likes to dance and listen to Top 40 Rock music. McDonald also serves as a recording secretary for the Alpha Phi women's fraternity, which she says is her major interest.

McDonald said that the 1986 volleyball season has been an enjoyable one. She added, "We really work well as a unit this year. It didn't take us long to get in synch--play as a unit." McDonald felt the most important aspect of the 1986 squad was that they "get along real well off the court and..."
Billy Joel's The Bridge:
A return to a piano-man sound

By John Purcell
The Chronicle October 15, 1986

Billy Joel's new album, The Bridge, is a return swing back toward the piano man sound that made him famous.

The Bridge is the long-awaited follow-up to Joel's An Innocent Man album. Fans were left wondering about the direction Joel's music would take with the release of the 50's style music of An Innocent Man. While the record was a tremendous success, it left fans wondering if the new sound was a permanent change. The release of Joel's greatest hits album earlier this year made for a fans' album that has Jod once again beating the piano keys into submission.

One of the songs, 'Baby Grand', is a duet with Ray Charles. Joel and Charles have vocal styles on this blues number, but each play separate piano. While Cyndi Lauper gets credit for sharing the vocals on 'Code of Silence' she unfortunately—does little more than sing background on what is a fine tune.

While the lyrics on this album don't quite match the standards of the guts-wrenching, 'Piano Man' or the drug-abuse commentary of 'Captain Jack'. Joel shows that he can still turn a phrase in 'Getting Closer', which features a Hammond B-3 synthesizer solo by Steve Winwood.

Joel reflects on his road to stardom, "What was ripped off by professionals is not all that it seems/ While I must live up to contracts I did not give up my dreams."

If you've been waiting for the old Billy Joel to return, this is probably as close as you are going to get. It seems that all artists evolve as their careers go on. Yet not many stand up to the test of time as well as Joel does. While his music has changed and been experimented with, he has never put out an album that did not contain quality music.

She's gotta have it is a smaller release which title sounds misleadingly sleazy, is an interesting and funny film about a black woman and her three lovers which has just left the high rent district in Hollywood, and found its way to our local screens.

Cleverly done, the movie twists the traditional sex roles in a way that gives Nola, the swinging bachelorette with current college ID, a squadron of B-3 synthesizer solo by Steve Winwood.

Student Counseling available

Feeling depressed? Having difficulty in a relationship? Worried about work?
Free help is available through the Community Counseling Center at California State University, San Bernardino. Staffed by quality counselors with diverse backgrounds, the center provides counseling services for emotional problems caused by divorce, death in the family, loss of a job, change of careers, lack of motivation, relationship problems.
Counseling is available for sexual problems, child rearing, premarital information and the elderly. The center is operated during the university's academic year, October through June.
"This is an ideal public service because few people can afford private counseling," remarked Dr. Edward Teyber, associate professor of psychology and director of the center. In an era when the Reagan administration is reducing funding for social services, there are few government-supported mental health resources left.
Free counseling is offered primarily for individuals and couples, rather than children and families, Teyber stated. "Anything that is troublesome, conflicting, or problematic is appropriate for someone to seek counseling. Many clients who use the services are normally able to cope with life's ups and downs but may suddenly face a crisis which has disrupted their lives."
The counseling is conducted by graduate-level psychology students ranging in age from 22 to 45, who work under the supervision of clinical psychologists on the Cal State San Bernardino faculty. Each counselor undergoes a rigorous acceptance procedure and is evaluated on the basis of grades, background and experience, letters of recommendation, and interview performances as well as several other factors.
Potential clients may call a 24-hour message phone, (714) 887-7272, to request a call back. Dr. Teyber will return all calls and schedule an initial interview to answer further questions and introduce clients to the clinic. He then will appoint a counselor whom he feels will best meet the needs of the client.
Although the Community Counseling Center does not provide services for persons who are suicidal, psychotic, alcoholic, addicted to drugs, or who may need medical help, the director will refer the client to someone who may be of assistance.
Clients meet with counselors for 50-minute sessions once a week. The length of the counseling is not limited; clients may continue through June when the center closes for the summer. Many return in September to continue with the same counselor or be reappointed to a new one, Teyber said. All counseling sessions are kept strictly confidential.

New chair promotes "philosophy of growth"

by T.C. Hamann

More students. More faculty. More buildings. These are but the obvious signs of expansion on our campus—the physical result of what can aptly be termed a Philosophy of Growth. This philosophy is at the heart of a well coordinated effort to maintain a high quality of education here at CSUSB, while at the same time increasing campus visibility throughout the community, the state, and eventually, the nation. With this in mind, we are pleased to welcome to our campus a man who takes these goals seriously—the new Department Chair of the schools of Accounting and Finance, Dr. Mohamed Vaziri.

Dr. Vaziri comes to Cal State with an array of impressive credentials and experiences. He received his M.S. in Engineering from the University of Oklahoma, where he also earned his Doctorate in International Finance. He went on to do Post Graduate work in Investment Analysis at George Washington University. His experience in financial management ranges from his work as an accountant for such firms as Lylands Motors, England, and Town and Country, Inc., in Oklahoma, to his work as a financial analyst for Cleveland Electric Illuminating Co. Dr. Vaziri has also done pioneer work on quality control for the Washington Metro Transit Authority, the results of which were published nationwide. In addition, Dr. Vaziri has worked for the Department of Energy as well as the Small Business Administration.

Presently, Dr. Vaziri is merging these experiences with this University's expansionist philosophy. He has outlined a three-part plan which he hopes will insure a profitable future, not only for the school of financing and accounting, but, ideally, for the whole University. While he emphasizes that his primary goal is "to provide the highest quality of education through a flexible curriculum and a dedicated faculty," Dr. Vaziri also says that he intends to work consistently at making his department highly visible in the local business community. This visibility will be established through the involvement of local businesses in the curriculum of the Finance and Accounting Department. Dr. Vaziri refers to this as the "external" phase of his plan. It involves creating an Industry Review Board comprised of local CPA firms and financial institutions which would review curriculum, provide internships and job opportunities, as well as providing funding for the establishment of new institutions here on campus. Another item on this "external" agenda will be to visit with the local high schools and junior colleges in order to create an enrollment base, as well as to assure that incoming students are prepared for the University experience.

On his "internal" agenda, Dr. Vaziri hopes to establish a "master departmental syllabus" which will offer more core classes per quarter in order to assure a more consistent quality of education. He notes that "based upon the percentage of people passing the CPA exam, CSUSB currently ranks number one in the state and number eleven in the nation." In order to maintain those high ratings, Dr. Vaziri wishes to add more flexibility to the curriculum, and an Accounting Lab has already been established where students can work for fifty hours per quarter (in addition to class instruction) on a computer, to enhance their general problem solving skills.

Another item on the "internal" agenda is to change the composition of the faculty by hiring new PhD's and by converting lecture positions to tenure track positions. This is to help integrate the professors into the new curricular changes.

Dr. Vaziri also hopes to establish this academic year, a center to promote international business— an idea, he says, which came from Dean Porter. The idea is to get local businesses and students working in international business skills in matching products with an international market through appropriate lines of information and consulting.

Students wishing to receive a Certificate in Financial Planning may not have very long to wait. Dr. Vaziri is currently writing a proposal to solicit funds for the establishment of an insurance and banking center. This will provide students with a better working knowledge of financial services, and a certificate license which Gov. Deukmejian may sign any day now, will provide a Certificate in Financial Planning.

Most important is that the changes in curriculum will attempt to improve the quality of education on a national level. Dr. Vaziri also hopes to attract more internships, and students will be prepared to participate in national proficiency examinations such as the Certified Financial Planner exam and the Chartered Financial Consultant exam.

Dr. Vaziri is also planning to institute interdisciplinary programs which will help students in all schools market their skills effectively upon graduation.

Students who have even the smallest interest in any of the changes which Dr. Vaziri outlined here should see him in A.D. 160. He is especially interested in fostering student involvement in the department, and would also like to help undecided majors find a field where they can develop to their full potential.
Certificate in Spanish now offered

By Deborah Carter
Special to The Chronicle

The Bureau of the Census has predicted that Hispanics will constitute the largest minority group in the United States by the end of the 1980's.

The enormous increase in the Hispanic sector of North American society will bring about a proportionate increase in consumers of all kinds of goods and services. However, only those trained in the Hispanic language and culture will be able to successfully communicate within the vast economic marketplace of the Hispanic North American.

According to Dr. Rafael E. Correa, professor in the Department of Foreign Languages and Literatures, Cal State University is offering a certificate in Spanish for Public Services. "In this program we will offer practical application of the language. We seem to be having people training more and more as interpreters and translators, especially for the court system."

The program includes upper division Spanish courses, as well as courses being offered through extended education. Announcement of this certificate program has been sent to high schools and junior colleges in this area, as well as to the Chamber of Commerce for distribution.

Next quarter, Dr. Tatiana Galvan, a Fulbright scholar, will be teaching one of the required courses, Spanish 316: Spanish in Communication Media. Galvan is from the Universidad National Autonoma De Mexico (UNAM). Correa said, "this is a unique opportunity for students to be exposed to someone who is a bilingual expert in communications."

In order to qualify for the certificate, a student must be enrolled at CSUSB, as well as taking the required courses in sequence. After the requirements have been met, the student is then eligible to apply for the certificate.

For the student wishing to practice the Spanish language, Correa suggests that, "students go to the Commons between 12 p.m. and 1 p.m. on Wednesdays and make use of the Spanish table. "

The Spanish table is for students, staff, and faculty who wish to practice their Spanish language, make friends, talk to professors, and practice, practice, practice.

Area Satanism on the Rise?

by Jim Long

The Devil has gained more attention in the Inland Empire. At least that's what police officers and religious leaders in the Fontana area would like people to believe. If there is not only evidence of Devil worship in this area - Satanism - but more of it has appeared in the Spring of 1986, and that has them worried.

One of the most prominent people who say that Fontana area residents are over-reacting to various incidents of alleged Satanic practices. They say the worry is misinformed or are being led astray by bias.

Within the last few months, there has more supporters in the Inland Empire. The Inland Empire is a really a matter of opinion. Depending on who's opinion it is, people - teenagers, especially - are either taking their cues from Hell or they're just doing something they're not supposed to. Law enforcement officials say one thing, authorities in religious groups another.

"I try to keep my ear to the ground," said Gillett Doggett, pastor of Calvary Chapel in Rancho Cucamonga. "But these reports are accurate, some aren't."

According to reports in the Fontana Herald and the San Bernardino County Sun, Fontana Sheriff and S.B. County Sheriff's Department officials have found graffiti encompassing violence and Satanic symbols. Law enforcement officials have also found what they claim are remains of Satanic rituals and animal sacrifices in different parts of the county.

Attention is also being paid to alleged Satanic rituals in heavy metal and punk rock lyrics. Those who say Satanism is on a rise both locally and nationally believe that these reports are signs that Satanic practices such as sexual perversion, drug abuse and violence and that would often be "being made between rock music, anti-social behavior and some say is the ultimate in rebellion.

Satanism is becoming the banner for the rebellious teenager, said DeWey Nelson of Warner Ministry in Danville, Kent.

Nelson's organization is none of many religious groups changing.

The individual critical skills model (ICSM), a relatively new program, is being implemented at the school. The emphasis is greater vocational training for placement in the business world.

The school of hope, according to Frank Plummer, School of Hope Program Director, no retarded citizens attend the school to learn functional vocational skills for the first time.

The School of Hope, also referred to as the Association for Retarded Citizens, operates under a dual license that includes a Work Activity Program (WAP) and a Day Training Activity Program (DTAC). It is run with the promise that retarded citizens can become partially self-reliant and functional in society.

WAP clients are those deemed most functional. Under this program, retarded citizens are trained in areas such as lawn maintenance, janitorial cleaning, work training center (includes recycling program), and woodshop. Also included are basic studies in language stimulation, independent living skills and assertiveness training.

A behavior modification program plays an important role in reducing inappropriate behavior.

The Day Training Activity Center is designed for severely retarded citizens who require close supervision and additional training.

While vocational training is taught, emphasis is placed on communication, cognitive development, self-help skills and physical adaptation. These basic skills are vital to helping retarded citizens become functional and independent in society," said Plummer.

"The Individual Critical Skills Model (ICSM), a relatively new program, is being implemented at the school. The emphasis is greater vocational training for placement in the business world. While many school attempts to place severely retarded citizens, the School of Hope places more functional clients first to ensure a good success rate. In the months, 10 clients have been placed in the business community.

Clients must be referred to the School of Hope through the Inland County Regional Center. The retarded clients come from board and care facilities, private homes, and convalescent homes. The clients at the School of Hope range in age from 18-72 years. Prior to entrance into the School of Hope, clients may have attended special schools, mainstream schools or other institutions of learning. While academic skills are encouraged, it is not a requirement for admittance.

The School of Hope is obtained through a number of channels. While the Department of Rehabilitation provides the bulk of the money, the Inland County Regional Center also provides funds. At the School of Hope, clients may have attended special schools, mainstream schools or other institutions of learning. While academic skills are encouraged, it is a requirement for admission.

With approximately 205 clients on staff, future goals include an emphasis on contract work that will include business and private organizations.

Despite what some may regard as a hectic, suburban existence, or simply an emotional reaction to things that seem Satanic, Inland Empire law enforcement officials still think the public should know Satanism may exist in the area.

This only complicates what's become a legal, moral and emotional issue in the Inland Empire.

"The philosophy (of Satanism) is secrecy," said Jim Pomereny, an Upland teenager who is a student of widely labeled Satanist Aleister Crowley. Pomereny does not claim he is a Satanist. He does say, though, that a true Satanist does not reveal himself or herself.

"That leaves people concerned with the alleged rise of Satanism with only fragments of evidence or contacts with a Satanist," says Warner. "There's a real danger here if someone is seen being associated with a Satanist, because it's hard to keep secret.

There's no list of supposed Satanic groups in the Inland Empire, however, including Fontana and San Bernardino. According to Robert Warnke, a born-again Christian who was available for interviews, there's been an increase in the number of Satanists in the Inland Empire, sex, drugs and rock and roll. His building was used again.

"It's hard to keep a lid on that," said Doggett, who added that Warnke cancelled a recently scheduled speaking engagement in Fontana because "there's been threats on his life." Sexual Assault: Exploring the Myths

by Sunnie Bell
Health Center Intern

The timing of Sexual Assault Awareness Week, October 13-17, fits well with the start of college. As never before, young women and men must face pressures - and possibly even threats - with which they must cope. Ideas that contrast with previous learning will be explored both formally and in those "classrooms" of alternatives is good, but it can also be confusing and upsetting. Consequences can be lasting. If you choose to become sexually active, do consult professionals in the Student Health Center. No stigma is attached to seeking advice about birth control and physical and emotional needs. But the loss of self-esteem due to submitting unwillingly to others' direction is a certain problem.

Next week, Admissions will discuss Alcoholism, Alcohol abuse along with sexual harassment and unwanted submission. Have some things in common one of which is that both are self-esteem. Ponder this: Do behaviors that result from diminished inhibitions (e.g. after alcohol ingestion) represent the "real" you? Or is the "real" you a composite of many things including those inhibitions? Think about it.

There's a small correction to make from last week's Health Corner. The Student Health Center hours are Monday through Thursdays from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. and Fridays and Quarter Breaks from 8 a.m. to 4 p.m. Do come in and use this service. It's here for you! Call 887-7641 or stop in.

If you have article suggestions, questions, or any communication at all in regard to the Health Corner, please address mail to Sunnie Bell, Student Health Center. Thanks.

I heard a Preacher Say
by J Russell Horton

I heard a preacher of the gospel say "Noah's days weren't like our own." He's right, of course, for so discerning a clergyman. A bombshell Noah never knew, neither did a volume of Allen Ginsberg; both enough to wrench your guts with flesh-rotting stench. Noah never heard the whisper of 1.4 million-a-year babies jerked like so many slimy stocked fish from a pay-per-pound derby pond, two pounds on the hook. Old Noah never inhaled the deep brown cancer mist of faggot nicotine; the corrupted gasoline vapors that erupt the eyes on a hot day; never toked on the mind numbing agent orange, mustard gas, or napalm, the gold, frankincense, and myrrh offered by the wise doctors who disciple the religion of Universal Hate: humanism. No, Noah never saw hate torch red flames to a spectacle haunting ghost of the primal evil. If I choose he must have known about child molestation and abuse; rape of somebody's thirteen-year-old fair haired daughter; sodomy of your ancestor. That's news? And he didn't even have a Tribune to read about AIDS; organized oven-stuffing of his progeny; to read of brother-muggers, wife-beaters, omnipotence-haters. And what of Noah and atheists? Was he neighbor to a dozen? Did the better of his sister's brothers, sons and daughters of men, unlament God in unhallowed halls, where dark robes are donned to celebrate the cloning of lecturn thumping mythology exorcists. I guess Noah never watched satellite pornography, except in his 25 inch diagonal black and white window frame. No, Noah's days weren't like ours. Jesus Christ come quickly, I don't mean of it quite that way. Yes. That preacher must be right. Noah's days weren't quite like ours. Jesus Christ come quickly, I don't have the minister's discernment.

Tour of art studios planned for public

The public is invited to join the Friends of the Gallery at Cal State for a tour of art studios in Venice and Los Angeles Oct. 18. Membership in the Friends of the Gallery is not a requirement and interested individuals are welcome to attend the tour. The tour is sponsored by a group of local art dealers and collectors who have generously donated time to this event.

The tour will begin in the afternoon with a visit to the Garth Clark studio, located at 2200 1/2 Abbot Kinney in Venice. Clark's studio is open to the public and is associated with the gallery of the same name in Los Angeles.
