Bella Abzug, noted feminist and New York politician, will talk about "Political Power for American Women" at 8 p.m., Tuesday, March 3 in the Upper Commons at CSUSB.

Ticket information is available through the Cal State Student Life Office at (714) 887-7407.

Bella Abzug, lawyer, peace activist, TV commentator and former three-term Congresswoman, has been voted in many polls as one of the most popular women in the United States, and, according to a Gallup Poll, "one of the twenty most influential women in the world."

She helped to organize the women's vote credited with providing the winning margin in New York governor Mario Cuomo's 1982 election. In 1982, she directed a six-state pilot project of WOMEN-USA to increase women's registration and voting turnout.

Bella Abzug is a founder of the National Women's Political Caucus and a member of NOW and other women's organizations. Currently, she is president of WOMEN-USA, a new national activist group designed to reach out to grass roots women who want to identify with the women's movement goals of equality and economic justice.

Bella Abzug was born in the Bronx in 1920 - the year American women won the right to vote. "Sometimes I am asked when I became a feminist," says Bella Abzug, "and I usually say, the day I was born."

The atmosphere in Bella Abzug's home was conducive to the forming of an independent spirit. Her father, Emanuel Savitsky, a Russian Jewish immigrant, called his butcher shop, "The Live and Let Live Meat Market," in keeping with his philosophy. A gentle man, he abhorred war, loved music and was an important influence in shaping Bella's values. He died when she was 13, in the midst of the Depression. Bella's mother, Ester Savitsky, then took over the support of her two daughters. She believed in education for women and encouraged her daughters to pursue any profession to which they aspired. No goal was unattainable, in her view. When Bella won the primary on first running for Congress, her mother said, "Well, Bella, congratulations. Let's hope next time it will be for President."

By the time Bella Abzug graduated from high school, she knew that she wanted to be a lawyer. She went on to Hunter College, ran for class president in her first year and later was elected president of the entire student body of 4000. After completing Hunter Law School, but was told that "we take no females." She then got a scholarship to Columbia University, where she became editor of the Law Review and obtained her LL.B. degree in 1947.

She specialized in labor law, and civil rights and civil liberties cases, and also became prominent in Democratic reform politics and the women's movement. An active opponent of McCarthyism, she defended people accused of subversive activities by the late Sen. Joseph McCarthy. Her first civil rights case was the defense of William McGee, a young Mississippi black man convicted of raping a white woman and sentenced to death - a case which drew world-wide attention.

In 1961, when the Soviet Union and the United States resumed nuclear testing, she helped to found Women Strike for Peace. As its national legislative representative throughout the 1960's, she led lobbies and mass demonstrations to Washington on behalf of the nuclear test ban, disarmament and an immediate end to the war in Vietnam.

Comedy Night
by Sharma Wilson

The laughs were non-stop when three L.A. comedians Steve Greenstein, Tim Jones, and Howie Gold, did stand-up routines Thursday night at Comedy Night in the upper commons. Greenstein, who performed first, acted as M.C. of the program and introduced the other performers. Originally from New York, he humorously highlighted the differences between his old home town and L.A., where he now performs. He also incorporated a violin and a harmonica into his act which showcased his talent all the more. Next was Tim Jones, whose routine made fun of everything from drugs and beer to lesbianism. The theme of drug and alcohol abuse was also recurrent in Howie Gold's routine, and while the inferences were hilarious; subtle messages of stay away from drugs and alcohol were there. A technique of all three comedians was audience participation. This showed their skill at improvisation.

The evening was both crazy and fun for all.

Letter to the Editor

Mr. Koch's commentary, "Alternative Employment" (Feb. 11) has provided fertile ground for presenting a brief treatise on career development and the role higher education plays in it.

Mr. Koch seems to believe his college education is his career path: either he goes to school or he becomes a journeyman. Would he have us assume those in the building trades who have a college education have wasted their time? Could a college education possibly enhance a carpenter's life and career? We in the Career Development Center and Office of Student Life believe so. Why not do both Mr. Koch?

An education will have a constructive impact on all areas of one's life—not only on one's job or income level. A career path incorporates all aspects of living—not simply the means of earning a wage.

Education provides skills for oral and written communication and the ability to distinguish fact from judgment (what about your comment that the real reason for an education is that it provides only job preparation...could this be a judgment stated as fact?). Education provides an appreciation for the arts, the humanities, and cultural differences (we won't touch the comment on women and husbands!), and a host of other qualities which make us unique and productive individuals.

In short, one's education will certainly enhance one's career, but that enhancement is only a side benefit for what it will do for you as a fulfilled and growing person.

Come on Mr. Koch. Talk to us. We're sold on the idea that your college education could make you a better construction journeyman. Are you?

Sincerely,
Jack Deter, Ed Schniederhan, and Lynn Moss, Career Development Center and Randy Harrell, Office of Student Life

Judicial Committee Returns

Dear Student Body of CSUSB,

This letter is to inform you that after three years of non-existence, the Judicial Review Committee of CSUSB is alive and well. The purpose of the Judicial Review Committee is much the same as the Supreme Court of the United States. If you feel that a decision or policy enacted by the Associated Students has wronged you in one way or another, visit the AS office and obtain the necessary forms to start the process. Here are the general guidelines to test to see if you have a case or not:

1. Does the plaintiff(s) have standing to sue? That is, is or was the plaintiff a party to an action or situation involving a point of law which the board can offer a decision on?

2. Does the damaging action or situation involve a point of law which is in the jurisdiction of the Associated Students Board of Directors to render a decision and which the board can offer a remedy or Judicial relief?

If you can answer "yes" to these questions then the Judicial Review Committee would like to help you.

Minorities Question
Task Force Attitudes
To the Editor:
On February 17, a group of Black, Chicano and other Hispanic students attended an open meeting sponsored by the General Education Task Force. This committee is in the process of revising the General Education requirements. The students were opposing the required course on multi-ethnic studies. They felt that such a requirement would perpetuate racial and ethnic stereotypes and thereby insult minorities.

After we had registered our protest, Professor Elliot Barkan, the Task Force Chair, replied, "I don't understand why you people don't support this proposal since it is in your interest." We replied that "you people" is hardly an appropriate manner to address individuals, and that we obviously thought that all minorities think alike. We repeated that we wanted to be considered as individuals, not members of groups, racial or otherwise. Barkan's response was to treat us with utter contempt and condescension.

Furthermore, Barkan refused to accept a petition we had prepared opposing the required course. His response was that all minorities should support this requirement, and implied that it was not necessary to listen to us. We registered our complaint. We would like to know how the professors know what all minorities should or should not do or think? This is the very stereotyping we have come to expect from elitist professors, who only pretend to be interested in minorities, but have an entirely different ideological agenda.

We are disgusted that such a person should occupy such a position of prominence in the faculty at Cal State.

We encourage students to attend future Task Force meetings in protest of this authoritarian attempt on the part of the faculty to force students to take this worthless course on minorities. It may serve as an elective in General Education, but, like the Black and Chicano courses that have always been a part of the curriculum, it should not be required.

To the Editor:
In these times of heightened global tensions, the call for peace becomes more and more prevalent as each day passes. Here in the U.S., our concern is to cover a wide spectrum of issues: from oppression-torn South Africa to the U.S.-Soviet Arms Race. But for those who have to live through war on a daily basis, the goal of peace can become a lifetime's work. On Thursday, February 12, we were treated with one such person; Betty Williams, who, along with Mairead Corrigan, was the recipient of the Nobel Peace Prize in 1977 for her part in the Irish peace crusade; which is attempting to bring a semblance of civilization to an area of the world that has been ripping itself apart for some 800 years now.

Although her speech was both highly informative and passionate, Mrs. Williams lost track of her purpose as time progressed. She fell into a lengthy discussion of her present activities to bring help to the starving Third-World nations we read often about. Though highly commendable, it took considerable attention away from the main topic. She seemed almost to say, "...well things are moving right along in northern Ireland now, so let's go on to bigger and better things." Next came remarks by three unrelated and highly irrelevant panelists who were obviously chosen at the last minute in order to accommodate the requirements of a panel discussion group.

Though highly grateful for the opportunity to hear and meet such an extraordinary woman, the main conclusion drawn by myself and my colleagues was that Mrs. Williams should not have strayed from the topic of the presentation—that being the progress of the present peace movement in war-ravaged Ulster (Northern Ireland). And as a final note, a word to the organizers of the presentation: as students, we are reminded time and again of the importance of properly preparing ourselves when writing a paper, taking a test, or giving a speech. This could have been heeded by those who obviously threw together, at last minute, the presentation witnessed that evening.

The Moral Majority: An End of Freedom?
To the Editor:
Will the freedoms of speech, press and assembly ultimately be trampled under the boot of the minority who feel that their morals are sacrosanct? In the not too distant past, in the name of the preservation of freedom, numerous Asian Americans were incarcerated for the duration of a war. Many German Americans were queried and watched closely to ascertain if sympathies toward their "homeland" existed. Children in these bilingual families were often humiliated in front of their classmates by being made to demonstrate the Heil Hitler Salute. A little farther distant from our time, but just a second on the eternal clock, "witches" were burnt by sanctimonious moralizers.

Has the new "moral majority" crusade to save the nation touched you yet? Will this crusade ultimately end in loss of freedom for all? Reptitious echoes of, "When will they ever learn?" fill my mind as I reminisce on the afternoon of February 18. The Gay and Lesbian Committee in our class was seeing a film. It was poorly attended. The film poignantly shared the feelings and insights of several parents who learned that their children were homosexual. I gained empathy toward these parents. I learned about the stages which these parents go through on their road to acceptance; not unlike those faced by terminally ill patients and their significant others.

After the film, a brief impromptu discussion occurred. One person attending was a guest to this campus. In her attempt to find the conclusion of the presentation, she felt the onslaught of prejudice in the form of unfounded shock and chagrin at the fact that she was inquiring concerning the whereabouts of the advisor. The advisor asked how I came to know about the presentation. I stated that I had read one of the fliers on the bulletin board. I was appalled when the members indicated that numerous fliers had been removed recently and others defaced by sexual and lewd comments.

How can we, members of this edifice of higher education, react in this manner? As John Stuart Mill, the great 19th century philosopher, once stated, "...whatever crushes individuality is despotism...whether it professes to be enforcing the will of God or the injunctions of men." Are we in the 20th century technologically and yet, in the dark ages socially? Do we still fear that which is different from us? Will our fear bind us so tightly that social tyranny will choke out our individual liberties?

Black History Month:
Larry Carroll Speaks
by Sharna Wilson
In celebration of Black History Month, chief 7 newscaster Larry Carroll spoke on "Black Present, Black Future" February 14 at 8 p.m. in the Recital Hall here at Cal State.

The evening opened with Natalie Arterberry, accompanied by Greg Thoam, singing the Black National Anthem followed by an introduction by Dr. Michael Pounds, new Associate Professor of Ethnic Studies.

In his opening statements, Carroll expressed his views about the 50-year celebration of blackness. "Trying to put 6000 years of African history into one month, February, the shortest month of the year, is ludicrous." Although Carroll sees "racism—A Barrier To World Peace" as the topic for an open discussion Tuesday, March 3 at 7 p.m. in the Student Union Room B. The public is invited.

The discussion, sponsored by the CSUSB Black Students Union, will focus on the obvious oppression of the black people and he suggested that Black Americans can help their distant kinsmen overcome the racism of South Africa and other countries. How? Economically. Carrol says his diamonds and Niger has more Uranium than South Africa could ever have. They have the resources and we Black Americans have the management. Doesn't that sound like the basis of a partnership to you?"

Carroll, a writer and reporter for some 15 years, was clad in the traditional dress of an Ethiopian while giving his speech. This was to reiterate his admonishment of Black Americans to familiarize themselves with Africa and its history, which is, in essence, the history of the Black American.

Cal-Staters Talk Tennis

It's warming up outside once again and that means tennis season is starting. This year CSUSB men's tennis team has four returning players from last year. Three of these players are Rich Blackey, Tim Streck and Mike Catalano. The fourth remaining players who were on the team the first year CSUSB began the tennis team, you guess, are holding back.

Rich Blackey is a graduate of Eisenhower High School. He has been playing tennis for nine years. Two of those years he's played in a league. He has also done some tournament play. During high school he was ranked number one on his tennis team and third in the Citrus Belt League. He won the captain's award, most valuable player award, and various other awards in high school.

Blackey is a Junior here. His major is Business Administration with a concentration in information management. He also minors in economics. After graduation Blackey plans on going back east to get his masters.

While playing for CSUSB Rich has received the most valuable player award and most improved player. Last year he had the best singles record on the team, 14 wins and 6 losses.

Blackey was born in New York. He is a tennis player and has been playing with his friends. Rich also enjoys music and likes to dance. And of course, he loves tennis.

Tim Streck is also a junior at CSUSB. His major is physical education. He used to teach tennis after college. Besides playing tennis, Streck likes to fish and go camping. "I like, like stringing racquets," Streck said.

Streck was born in Azusa, California. He went to Gladstone High School in Covina. He was a runner-up in league finals during high school. He was also a three-year finalist in league. In high school he won the most valuable player award three times.

During his three years here he has won the coach award, most valuable player, and co-captain award. His freshman year he was ranked 5th in the nation in doubles. In singles he was ranked 50th. Streck has been playing tennis for 10 years.

Mike Catalano hasn't been playing tennis as long as Blackey or Streck. The first time Mike ever hit a tennis ball was his freshman year here when he decided he liked CSUSB and was going to continue school here. Catalano played baseball and basketball in high school at Damien Prep school in La Verne. At the time he entered college, CSUSB didn't have a baseball team and basketball practice didn't fit his schedule.

Being his first year playing tennis, Catalano claims he had a good year. Blackey seemed to agree with him saying, "ya, he wasn't bad, he only hit me a few times during the season."

Catalano attributes his success to his first coach, Mike Muscare, who is now at Cal State Fullerton.

Catalano was born in Upland where his family still lives. One of Mike's favorite hobbies is collecting sneakers. He's a Junior here and majors in business administration. After graduation he plans on going back east with Blackey to get his masters in hospital administration.

The three teammates have been good friends since their first year on the team. Catalano and Streck share a room in the Morongo dorm, while Blackey has a room to himself across the hall. The three of them feel like the three musketeers in a sort; being the only players left from the original team that started in 1985. There is one returning player from last year also.

Tennis isn't the only sport these three play together. They also play in intramurals on campus; softball and football. Last year they won superpower '85. This is when four team members participate in 10 different events.

The tennis team began practice in January and their first match was February 11th. They've one win and one loss.

The team's season continues through April. The big match against the Pomona Pitzers is on Saturday, February 28th at Cal Poly. "This is a tough team because they're a Division III school. We're a Division III school but our league is independent," Streck said.

All three feel the team has good potential. Their coach, Jim Ducey, also coaches the women's tennis team and men's basketball. He has a busy schedule along with the fact that he is entering his second year coaching. "The season is off to a good start and we have a chance to be the best," Blackey said.

"We're looking forward to a good season this year. Up till now we've been average, but we're ready to break out of our shell," Catalano said, adding "After all we're not flamboyant, we're just regular guys.

Hiking Club Takes Action

At 8:15 AM sharp we took off from the Ranger Station where we had met and headed towards the Santa Ana river bed and Vivian Creek. We packed the cars. It was Sunday, February 15, 1987, and this was our Hiking Club's first official outing. The air felt nippy and we dived into additional jackets and sweaters.

Matthew (13), Elena's brother, decided to take the lead. He carried the compass and the magnifying glass. Natasha, John and Elena followed him closely. Next came Wes and David. (David Neighbors is the New Hiking Club's Advisor). Bob and I took the tail end of the expedition.

Although, someone had mentioned "McDonald's" (up in the mountains?), I had packed a few snacks like granola bars, some chips and string cheese. Other than that our backpacks were light. Bob had recovered from a Triple Bypass Surgery about a year ago. As we walked leisurely and stopped to admire the forest we sought shelter in the hollowed trunk of a tree. Rain turned to light snow.

"How frequently are you hiking? I've just been all over that mountain." - it was obvious, we had real hikers in our group. We followed the tracks in the snow.

"How much farther to "midpoint?""

"Just about 1000 more feet up" came the answer.

"What is it going to be like?"

"Just like here, snow, trees and rocks."

It was here where I buried my hopes for "McDonalds."

Then, suddenly, there it was! The brightest and blustest sky, I ever saw. Golden sun rays were shining a few feet over candy tuft clouds, and the mountain peaks were in full view. We had arrived!

The down hill walk was more like a skid. It was fun to recognize former landmarks, rocky bridges across the creek, broken trees on the trail and a waterfall. Far below, the world was embedded in clouds. It was great! (Although, we never found "McDonalds."

Thank Goodness.)

Are you interested in joining the Hiking Club? Meetings are held regularly every Thursday at PL 54 from 12:00 noon to 1:00 PM.

P.S. No age limit is required. Also, bulletins will be posted for future and additional events. For more information call Chris Bush at 714-359-8715.

Wrestling Comes to Cal State

O.K., it was tacky to promote a legitimate wrestling event by using pictures and the names of "professional" wrestlers. We are sorry if we offended anyone. The fact is, we want to conduct a real legitimate wrestling event by using "professional" wrestlers. We are pictures and the names of Ernesto Guzman and the guy from Mark Seymour, Dave Malone, and the mountain peaks were in full view. We had arrived!

Injury Sidelines Athlete

by Kim Schnepf

The newest sport on campus this year is baseball. The team is off to a good start with two wins and two losses. Tom Lescher, outfielder for the team, hasn't been as lucky however. Four days before the season started he tore ligaments in his ankle diving for a ball in practice.

Lescher has been playing baseball "since I was old enough to hold a bat," he said. He started in little league when he was eight. A graduate from Redlands High School, Lescher had a successful baseball season after this, which is important to me," Lescher said. He then transferred to CSUSB his sophomore year.

"I basically just concentrated on school after this, which is important to me," Lescher said. He then transferred to CSUSB his sophomore year.

After a two and a half year absence, during which time he didn't even pick up a baseball, Lescher's back in the game again.

"I hadn't planned on playing baseball here, as a matter of fact I missed the first couple of days of practice," he said.

Ski Slalom on March 3rd

Participants must purchase their own lift tickets and register for the race on "The Deck," between 11:00 a.m. and 1:00 p.m. For those who buy a full day ($23.00) lift ticket, a "premium" prize will be included. Each skier gets two starts, with the best single time determining the winner. T-shirts will be awarded for Men's Open, Men's Novice, Women's Open and Women's Novice, providing there are at least five entries in each category. All participants are eligible to win a door prize, donated by San Bernardino Ski & Sport. For more information, call the Recreational Sports Office, 887-7416.

Leverenz an Asset to Women's Tennis

by Eric J. Grunewald

The CSUSB women's tennis season has started, and for Kelly Leverenz that means a second collegiate tennis season. Leverenz comes to CSUSB from Molalla, Oregon. She chose to come to school here because of the friendly people and the Southern California weather. When Leverenz first came here, she was not planning to play tennis. "I started playing the ball around with some of my friends, they suggested I try out for the tennis team," she said. Leverenz played one year of tennis on the junior varsity team in high school, and three years on the varsity team.

The CSUSB women's tennis team plays in the NCAA Division three league, but this year, they will play some Division two teams. The current team record is 2-1, while Leverenz's record for both doubles and singles is 3-1.

When in a tennis match, Leverenz concentrates most on her serve. "You can't win if you don't have a good serve, it affects all your other shots," she said. "My strongest stroke is the volley, while my weakest is my forehand," Leverenz stated.

After graduating from college, Leverenz Wants to work in the Los Angeles area in advertising. One of her favorite things about playing tennis for CSUSB is the team members. "I really enjoy all the people on the team," she said.
CALLING ALL STUDENTS!

The Student Health Advisory Committee (SHAC) needs you. This organization is directly involved with you, the CSUSB student, and your Student Health Center. That is one way to represent students on our campus by voicing your concerns, suggestions, opinions concerning Health Center policy. The committee not only promotes health education and student awareness of Health Center programs, but it represents student opinion. It is our mission to receive input from students that will lead to improvements and changes in the Health Center.

Think about what you are or are not receiving from the Health Center. Evaluate the benefits that you do receive and see what could be better about them. If you're not yet using the services, think about why that is. What is keeping you away? (It can't be financial considerations, since most services are free to students.) Jot down your ideas and join the SHAC members. The next meeting is scheduled for March 10th at 1:00 p.m. in the Health Center Conference Room. The staff at the Student Health Center really want our services to be helpful and effective for you. We need you to help accomplish this goal.

Any student who gets actively involved with this committee may also be eligible for 1 unit of credit in Health Services 399. Talk to Dr. Cindy Paxton in PS-113 or ext. 7393 for details. So, circle March 10th on your calendar, and get involved!

Have you ever wondered what people mean when they say that a city or a country has been 'westernized'? Webster's Dictionary says that to 'westernize' means to make something "western" in its characteristics, habits, ideas, etc. If that's the case, then what is western? Webster's states that 'western' is somewhere in the western hemisphere of the globe, with the United States being the focus of the west.

If Webster's definition of westernization is fact, then I have seen the city/country that they based their definition on: Hong Kong. I was lucky enough to visit this city over New Year's with a small tour group from CSUSB. This large city, located in the southern portion of China and on the South China Sea, is the perfect model for other cities or countries around the world which want to appear like an American city. Hong Kong has all of the characteristics of a 'western' city. It is commercialized and has modern architecture, clothing, education, entertainment, foods and transportation. However, Hong Kong still contains remnants of its past, people living on boats.

Hong Kong, the city which England is leasing from the People's Republic of China until 1997, has one major difference from many other western cities: its streets are emaculate. In this small city which houses over 5.7 million residents, the streets are free of litter. Because of the small area, however, the skies are filled with pollution.

The first two things I noticed when flying into Hong Kong were its many tall buildings and the smog. "No different than a Los Angeles or a New York City," I thought. When I looked closer, however, things were much different.

To begin with, the tall buildings (mostly apartment complexes) looked alike. They were the same height and had the same appearance. It was as if these buildings were built at the same time, a skyscraper version of tract housing.

The majority of Hong Kong's residents live in these buildings. On average, a family of three to seven people occupy an apartment of 300 to 500 square feet in size. It brought a few thoughts to my mind when thinking of so many people living in so many buildings that look alike...
We ate at Jumbo, a multi-flowed construction valued at over $10 million. The high value of this restaurant is probably due to the layers of gold that highlight the dining room ceilings. At Jumbo, which contains identical dining rooms on each side, we ate Chinese specialties such as Peking Duck.
Our seven person group also took a group photograph on a royal throne that was located at the end of the dining room for tourists photographs.
To reach Jumbo, we took a ferry boat across from Hong Kong Island. Ferry boats are just one of the many forms of transportation that exist in Hong Kong. People may also travel on the water by means of speedboats, hydrofoils, jetfoils and steamships to name a few. You can also travel by airplane, train, bus and of course, avtomobile. However, Hong Kong roads are on the British driving system-they drive on the 'wrong' side of the road.
When we were traveling on the road, we saw a few different things.
We saw a lot of British buses carrying people. The majority of the automobiles we saw were Japanese-made and there were a few Mercedes and Rolls Royces.

The registration of these automobiles is a very expensive task. Prospective drivers must go to driver's school for 15 to 20 hours training. However, some people will pay up to $500,000 to obtain a certain lucky license plate number for their cars. These numbers are owned for the remainder of the car owner's life.

Obtaining a driver's license in Hong Kong is also a troublesome task. Prospective drivers must go to driver's school for 15 to 20 hours (at $10 per hour) before taking the test. Many people fail the test a couple of times before they become licensed drivers and when they do, they pay $3 (United States) for a gallon of gas to keep their vehicles going.

Another important facet of Hong Kong is its educational system. The government pays for the first nine years of a child's education-through the first part of secondary school. If parents want to send their children to a college preparatory school (high school) and then to a university, they must pay the expenses. There are two universities in Hong Kong-Hong Kong University and China University.

There is also a great deal of bars and nightlife entertainment for students and tourists to hang out in.
The majority of the people I met in desks and discotheques were students from Hong Kong's high schools and universities. These students stay out until 7 a.m., or 3 a.m. on weekends and after the students go home, the city remains lifelike until 7 a.m.

Besides disco and bars, people can go watch a movie (current with what's in the U.S.) or listen to their
'hi-tech' stereo or watch their 'hi-tech' telecommunications and VCR's. All of the brand names such as Sony, Panasonic, Sanyo and Hitachi are available in Hong Kong's electronics shops, though the prices vary greatly from shop to shop. In addition, Hong Kong has the new models on the shelves months before the U.S. does.

Though the prices of electronics in Hong Kong is comparable to that of the U.S., the price of clothing is exuberant. In one case, we saw an acrylic sweater selling for $150 U.S. which costs $40 here. The latest fashions are available, however, the best bet in Hong Kong is to look for sales or go to a tailor shop.

The best bargains in Hong Kong are found on the streets.
People set tables on the sidewalks filled with silk ties and other articles of clothing and toys to sell to the hordes of people passing by.
Another low priced commodity is food. In Hong Kong you can find any type of food-American, Italian, French, Mexican, Thai, etc.-and it tastes good too! You can also find the world's most popular restaurants in Hong Kong--McDonald's. We saw a few large McDonald's outlets in the city and they were constantly busy.

All of this and more only goes to prove that Hong Kong is one of the world's most modernized cities and is a big money-maker. The People's Republic of China has recognized this fact too and has stated that they are not going to change Hong Kong when they assume jurisdiction in 1997.
Dr. Easton: A New Twist To A Diophantine Approximation

By Sharna WIlson

"It's hard to teach somebody something you think is really neat and have them have the attitude that it's a bunch of crap," he said. "On the personal side, Easton is more like he appears on the field. He is coolly at ease and at Waterloo, where he received his bachelor's, master's and a doctorate in mathematics he was ready for a change. So why here, out of all places in the United States? Mainly because of the weather. Using a publication issued by the American Math Society that lists all jobs available in North America, Easton found there were far too many openings, so to narrow down his choices he decided to apply only to places where it was warm. "I don't like the snow, but I love it when it's sunny and clear," he said. "It's great."

Now that he's here, Easton is settling into life at Cal State and is busy teaching mathematics courses. Involved in mathematics? Although he is not married, he does have a girlfriend, Ulrike, who is still in Canada, finishing a master's degree in electrical engineering. She is the motivation behind a German course he is taking, since she and her parents both speak the language. He likes to read, mainly history and detective stories, and is meeting new stories, and is meeting new associates and new friends. Easton, 29, is tall, slender, blond-haired and blue-eyed. He is coolly at ease and at home in his new surroundings. Arriving in mid-August from his native Canada, Easton had no expectations of what it would be like in Southern California. He was looking for a job, and after 11 years at the same university (the University of Waterloo, where he received his bachelor's, master's and a doctorate in mathematics) he was ready for a change. Why here, out of all places in the United States? Mainly because of the weather. Using a publication issued by the American Math Society that lists all jobs available in North America, Easton found there were far too many openings, so to narrow down his choices he decided to apply only to places where it was warm. "I don't like the snow, but I love it when it's sunny and clear," he said. "It's great."

Now that he's here, Easton is settling into life at Cal State, and is busy teaching mathematics courses.

Scheduling: 'A Little Shop of Horrors'

By Sue Barcus

Even with computerization changes, scheduling has always been the thorn in the side of college students throughout California. Many times a student will need two different classes that have the same schedule.

Often with classes being offered infrequently, because of low demand or unavailability of instructors, the student can face a wait of up to a year before it is offered again. It is difficult for the student and frustrating for the college. Lack of department funds preclude offering a class during the day and at night.

The problem is funding and available space. Looking for options that ease overcrowding, within the time constraints given, and student scheduling dilemmas should always be first in priorities.

Students must be more willing and flexible in their demands. The fact that most people want classes from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. and at 6 p.m., according to Dr. Jerrold Pritchard, associate vice-president for academic affairs, is understandable but unrealistic.

Commentary

Students can help by checking with their particular departments to keep abreast of what will be offered, when, and to plan as far ahead as possible.

Schools will never come up with unlimited finances. These problems will remain, and only by planning and diligence by both students and staff will any progress be made.

The schools must offer comprehensive information and the students must act on that information.

Kaleidoscope is published weekly by the Department of Communication to augment classroom instruction. Entertainment

Speaking His Peace
by John Cloud

As 1986 came to its bitter end, we see the music/radio scene become seemingly better and better. This may possibly provide a ray of hope in the future for those of us who appreciate good music. As 1987 arrived, most wise and "self righteous" radio station managers and music critics raked their memories and febrilely assembled their synopsis of what was considered the best and worst of the 1986 music year. Since I am no exception to this tradition, I will without further ado present my considerations for the top best albums, and singles of 1986; the worst of 1986; and the artist that I will (and everyone else should) look forward to hearing more of in 1987.

The photographs were selected from assignments based on the themes of Water, Texture, Reflections, Times-Past and Motion.

Serrano Corner

Family Feud, Etc.

by Eric T. Grunewald

Serrano Corner is a new column devoted to the events and activities in Serrano Village. Each week, this column will feature Serrano Village people, events, and activities.

On Wednesday, February 11, in the Commons, dorm residents could be found watching "Dorm Feud". Similar to "Family Feud", "Dorm Feud" used two volunteers from each dorm. The dorms were divided into the East side and the West side. On the West side were Badger, Morongo, Shandin, and Waterman. Making up the East side were Arrowhead, Joshua, Mojave, and Today.

To win points, either side would have to guess the correct answer to a survey question. The survey questions were asked of 700 dorm residents. One player from each side had to answer the opening question to enable their side to play the round.

The West side dominated the first half of the game by answering such questions as: "What is the most popular soap among college students?" The number one answer was "Days of Our Lives". At half-time, the West had 535 points, and the East had 360.

The East made a comeback during the second half of the game. They answered such questions as: "What is the most popular drinking game on campus?" The number one answer was "Quarters".

The East side comeback was not enough to stop the West. The final score was West 615, East 555.

Until next time, see you in "The Village".

CSUSB Presidents Discuss Issues At Recent Forum

by Linda Whitney

University President Anthony Evans and Associated Students President, Penni Overstreet, made comments and fielded audience questions during the Presidential Forum held in the Student Union on February 11th.

After an introduction by Associated Students Vice-President, Steve Helman, Dr. Evans opened the forum with his comments on the university. Evans said he has "never felt more positive about the university and what is happening here." He classified his attitude as "upbeat" and predicted "small incremental progress" would occur for the next academic year. Evans stated that the University preferred "small incremental increases over large increases.

As the question and answer portion of the forum began, the relatively small audience shared concerns about such things as classroom space, academic curriculum changes, and activities. Evans admitted that more classroom space is going to be needed soon and added that plans are in progress for a new classroom building. When asked why the new faculty office was given priority over new classrooms, Evans replied, "We ran out of required faculty space before classroom space and unfortunately we must exhaust our potential before something can be done." Concerning academic curriculum changes, Evans said that in general when changes are made "students follow the guidelines that were in effect when they entered the university."

In response to questions about more activities, Overstreet announced that she has appointed two new chairmen over the activities committee and is confident they will do a good job.

When asked about her accomplishments during her presidency, Overstreet replied, "I feel I have increased student representation and I hope to maintain that student representation." She would also like to increase activities and make students more aware of the services available to them. She would like to see more non-traditional types of activities.

To conclude the meeting, Evans asked the audience what problems they have a CSUSB. The responses included needing more computers and business machines, expanding the number of hours a student can work on campus, providing more support services to students, and making students more aware of what services are available.

Overstreet closed by saying the Associated Student officers "always welcome student input." She also announced upcoming A.S. officer elections in April. More information on elections will be forthcoming. The A.S. officers are hoping for a good voter turnout this year.

Evans feels that the biggest problem on campus is student activities. He feels they need "more vitality" and he is confident that the new directors "will provide outstanding leadership." Evans hopes to make concentrated efforts in this area in the next two to three years.

"I like it. It's the first office I've ever had that's had windows. I have a computer terminal. It's great. I'm a somebody."

Impressed by his resume and letters of recommendation, the math department, chaired by Bob Stein, decided to talk to Easton about the job. They sent J. Paul Vicknair, associate professor of mathematics, to the winter meetings of the American Math Society which met in New Orleans. Easton was brought back to Cal State where he gave a one-hour seminar on his thesis work. The department, as a whole, decided they liked Easton, and hired him.

"He has an energetic, upbeat attitude and he really seems to enjoy life," says Stein.

Although it had some importance, Easton's specialization was not a prerequisite for employment.

"When we see a good person," says Stein, "we find a way to fit them in."

Survival Skills

George Gibbs, CSUSB SAIL counselor, has found that study skills rarely help if a student has major difficulty in reading comprehension. Reading comprehension, he feels is a basic necessity in college and without that skill, a student won't get very far.

Those skills can be learned, he stressed. "If a student is really motivated and has average ability, he can survive in college. Motivation is the key factor," said Gibbs.

Although most college settings tend to encourage the student to strive for the top—the "4.0-grade point average"—Gibbs believes that students should also learn to be realistic, a trait that he feels is important for all of their life.

"A student needs to know the range of their abilities—their highest and their lowest," said Gibbs. "It's an individual issue. A student can't compare their best with someone else's best. If you set your goals too high, you set yourself up to fail," he added.

Gibbs advises to students to learn something extra in college. "If you haven't learned your limitations in college you've probably missed half of what you should have learned," he said.

Black Enrollment Drops

by Linda Whitney

The United States of America has been called a "melting pot." It is a country in which people of many different races, cultures, and beliefs came to live to enjoy freedom in one form or another. However, not everyone was given their right to this new freedom on an equal level. Over the years this has caused words such as discrimination, segregation, and prejudice to become commonplace in our society. Minorities of many forms must struggle for equality. This struggle exists everywhere, including here at Cal State San Bernadino.

It was reported recently that the black student enrollment percentage at CSUSB has been dropping steadily over the past year. After recent investigation it was discovered that this claim was true. The statistics provided by the school research department show a definite decline in the percentage of black students on campus. Beginning with Fall quarter of 1985, the total enrollment was 6,312 with 7% black students. Winter quarter of 1986 showed total enrollment at 6,344 with 6.8% black students. Spring quarter of 1986 showed 6,315 versus 6.6% black students. The fall of 1986 showed 7,423 versus 6.2% black students. Finally, the predicted enrollment for winter of 1987 is 7,434 with 5.8% black students.

Why are fewer black students attending CSUSB? According to Cita Jones, President of the Black Faculty and staff organization on campus, the administration, faculty, and staff need to work together and become sensitive to the needs of black students and all students. Jones feels changes need to be made in enrollment. "The university is not working effectively to recruit black students," said Jones. Ms. Jones' organization meets regularly once a month, more often if necessary to plan events and fundraisers for scholarships. Besides herself, there are eight other black faculty members and approximately 62 staff members.

A big part of Ms. Jones' job is advising students. Of the minority students she talked with she says she was heard "more complaints of discrimination" in the past year than she has in the past six years that she has worked on this campus. While the exact complaints are confidential, there are some general similarities. Some students feel they are not being treated fairly by teachers. They feel they are not represented by the administration. Some also feel that their problems are overlooked.

It has been speculated that the decline of black student enrollment in the past quarter might be attributed in part to the controversy generated by a letter about the recruiting of black students. "It is important to note the letter on recruitment. The university is not working effectively to recruit black students," said Jones. Ms. Jones' organization meets regularly once a month, more often if necessary to plan events and fundraisers for scholarships. Besides herself, there are eight other black faculty members and approximately 62 staff members.

While the exact complaints are confidential, there are some general similarities. Some students feel they are not being treated fairly by teachers. They feel they are not represented by the administration. Some also feel that their problems are overlooked.

When asked his opinion on the reason behind the decline, Dr. Evans stated that he believes the decline goes along with the national decline. "In the past 7-8 years the percentage of blacks in higher education has steadily declined throughout the nation." He feels this is because the dropout rate of blacks in high school has increased and the availability of financial aid has declined. He also stated that he is "cognizant of these trends" and that the staff is making an effort to reverse the trend.

What then can be done about this problem? Ms. Jones reasserts that "more must be done about recruiting black students." Jones also stated that he is "cognizant of these trends" and that the staff is making an effort to reverse the trend.

In 1970, Bella Abzug decided to seek office for the first time and challenged an incumbent Manhattan Congressman who had been in office nine years and was considered unbeatable. By running on a platform advocating equal rights for women, aid to the cities and an end to the Vietnam war, she attracted national attention and won a startling upset victory. Her slogan was "This Woman's Place is in the House - the House of Representatives." She was re-elected to Congress in 1972 and 1974.

On her very first day in the House, Bella Abzug offered a resolution to end the war, and before long had become the first Congresswoman to introduce a bill to impeach President Richard Nixon. Earning a reputation as a shrewd politician and a good worker, she fought for increased funding for mass transit, seeking - and for the first time winning - the support of rural Congressmen for urban transportation aid. She worked for environmental legislation, harbor clean-up measures, and aid to the elderly and handicapped. She helped expose and hold hearings on the anti-Israel Arab economic boycott and authored the first resolution ever passed by the House recognizing New York's demonstrations of support for Soviet Jewry. In her last year in Washington, she produced bills that brought $600 million to New York City.

As chair of the House Subcommittee on Government Information and Individual Rights, she conducted important inquiries into the covert and illegal activities of the CIA, FBI, and the Internal Revenue Service and other government agencies. She helped to write and pass the Freedom of Information and Privacy Acts and the milestone "Government in the Sunshine" law, which for the first time opened up government agencies to public scrutiny.

While in Congress, Bella Abzug wrote the first law banning discrimination against women in obtaining credit, loans and mortgages, fought for Title IX Equal Opportunity in Education Laws and introduced many other bills to improve the status of women.

In 1976, Bella Abzug became the first woman to run for the United States Senate from New York, finishing less than 1% behind the winner. In 1977, she ran with Mayor Ed Koch for the mayoralty of New York. About Ed Koch she comments: "If there were only women political leader Koch attacked it could be put down as a simple case of mutual dislike, but he has also made it a point of stepping on other women political leaders, whom he regards as competitors." In 1977, President Carter named Bella Abzug president of the National Commission for the Observance of International Women's Year, which sponsored the first federally-funded National Women's Conference in Houston, Texas. The conference, authorized under legislation introduced by Abzug, was called by Time in its 1983 anniversary issue, "a coming of age for American women" and "a watershed in their history and that of the nation."

Bella Abzug was appointed by President Carter co-chair of the National Advisory Committee for Women, but was dismissed on January 12, 1979, after the Committee criticized his decision to cut funds for women's programs and increase military spending. Her firing was followed by the resignation of a majority of Committee members, including heads of many women's organizations making the event known as "The Friday Night Massacre."

She lives with her husband of more than thirty years, Martin Abzug, in Manhattan. Martin Abzug is a stockbroker and novelist. They have two daughters, Eve, a sculptor, and Liz, a lawyer.

The presentation of Bella Abzug is cosponsored by the Intellectual Life and Visiting Scholars Committee, the Associated Students' Special Events Committee and Committee for Clubs. Her appearance was arranged by the Cal State Organization for College Women.

Newman Club:
More Than Just A Religious Club

There are numerous clubs and organizations here at CSUSB. There are career-oriented clubs, foreign language clubs, sororities, fraternities, religious organizations, and the Newman Club. The Newman Club is a Catholic organization, but it is also much more. It combines spiritual growth with Mayor Ed Koch for the mayoralty of New York.
