Are You Afraid of Dying?

Religious Involvement Can Help

By Alvarado K.A., Temple D.l., Ph.D.

The Black Voice News, April 23, 2002

In a research summary released today by the National Institute for Healthcare Research, David B. Ake, Ph.D., professor of psychology at the University of California, Los Angeles, California, and his associates announced that people with religious involvement have less fear of death than those with no religious faith at all.

Says Larson, "Among researchers at the California School of Professional Psychology in Fresno, California, strong religious convictions and the belief in an afterlife are associated with significantly less anxiety and depression regarding the idea of dying."

In order to explore the relationship between individu­als' religious beliefs and their apprehensions about dying, the researchers surveyed a group of 200 individuals from various religious groups about their religious beliefs and their feelings about death. The researchers found that individu­als who had stronger religious convictions experienced less anxiety, depression, and dis­trust when thinking about dealing with death. Larson added, "We found that individuals who believe in an afterlife are significantly less likely to have fears about the idea of dying than those who did not believe in an afterlife."

Unexpectedly, however, researchers also found that the people who believed the most important aspect of religion was the possibility of an afterlife who had the highest death anxiety and depression and the belief that individu­als who did not believe that this was the most important idea of their religion. Thus, it seems almost paradoxical that those who value religious politician because of the power that they may have after death are the same individuals who experi­ence the most anxiety, which is often the issue of dying. This finding leads the researchers to conclude that "attempting to lower one's death anxiety and depression by developing a greater religious participation is a poor strategy." Larson suggested "perhaps faith, belief, and commit­ment must come before one experiences a lowering of death anxiety."

Laron explained, "In other words, a person's death anxiety is only lowered by a personal commitment and investment in religion, not by plying lip service to a certain religion in just one day, or one week, or one month."

The National Institute for Healthcare Research found that the highest death anxiety and depression was in people with strong religious beliefs, and the least anxiety was in people who did not believe in an afterlife.

Do suicide victims go to hell?

because it is an unpardonable sin. In this case, P.M., Riverside, CA.

ANSWER: First of all, realize that your friend’s suicide was not your fault. People who suffer from psychological disorders actually agree that a person who seriously plans to commit suicide usually cannot be stopped unless there is immediate legal intervention. Suicide is not an unpardonable sin. Those that teach that it is not as they say to be a suicide victim can never repent of the sin of suicide (because they are dead); they are therefore destined for eternal punishment. This teaching lacks understanding of the retributive justice of the redeemer work of Jesus Christ.

Dr. Reginald Woods

QUESTION: Dear Pastor Woods, I had a friend who recently committed suicide. The funny thing about it was that it was stopped in my house the day before saying “good bye” at an unusual way. Maybe I should have picked up on what he was signaling. I heard a close friend comment that people who commit suicide go to hell.

Walker: Out of thirteen kids, and I'm the youngest. I'm the one who was 8 years old when my 16-year-old brother left home. My mother is his personal chef, his personal maid - she did everything - and had to do everything. I had to take care of the kids, so I had to take advantage of them. I listened. My mother, along with my grandmother, had a lot of coming from back in the days of slavery.
The Isley Brothers

1996 Black Women of Achievement

MISSION TO PLEASE makes a 40-year legacy for the legendary Isley Brothers. Their new album is the right tool for any late night interlude. Strong production credits go to R. Kelly, Angela Winbush, and Ronald Isley. "Let's Lay Together" is the first single from the album steadily rising on the charts, written and produced by R. Kelly, whom credits Ronald as one of his prime musical influences. Look for Keith Swarts "Slow is the Way" and the romantic duet between Ronald and his wife and co-producer Angela Winbush. "Let's get Intimate", "Can Have A Kiss", and many other new hits by the Isley's add a musical celebration to their legendary Isley Brothers. Their new album is the right touch to your musical collection. This compilation with the southern flava to some beats, and grooves. Trigga Man round off the one-hour special airs Sunday, June 23 at 3:00 p.m. on NBC 4.
