Back in march I believed it would only take those few weeks of stay at home order and then we would be back to normal. I didn't think much of it that we would be where we are at right now. I remember thinking nothing out of it. It was scary especially since I work at a grocery store how everybody was freaking out and clearing off the shelves.

Months passing by until I realized that it was becoming "normal" to see this and not doing regular activities. It felt weird being home 24/7 besides work because I was always out and about with my friends. At first it was hard just being home with nothing to do. Especially with the last quarter transitioning to online was difficult!

Time passed by and seems like its the same day over and over for me at least. I wake up have my zoom lectures, get ready for work and on my way to work. My life has consisted of this for the entire year. However, I recently got a second job which made it harder on my end. So, now my day is wake up, do homework, meet up on zoom, go to work and back home to do homework or to sleep and do the exact same thing the next morning.
