CSUSB
Departments asked to make cuts
New committee to decide where budget hits occur

by Steven Jennings
Chronicle staff writer

The unveiling of Gov. Pete Wilson's California budget for the upcoming year rang a familiar tune in the ears of California State University officials. Preliminary indications are that the tune being heard translates as a "blue ribbon" committee to identify budget priorities for CSUSB's academic programs.

The establishment of the committee comes on the heels of Hefner's request in early fall for faculty and administrators to examine their own departments for unnecessary programs that could be cut. Hefner advised the faculty and administrators of the possibility of another round of budget cuts back in September. At the same time he asked them to look at their own departments and carefully determine if all their programs, including degree and certificate programs, were necessary.

The question at hand is, "Do we have opportunities to consolidate or insert efficiencies into programs?" said Hefner. "Another possibility is the elimination of programs."

He said that after the CSU system finished its analysis of Wilson's budget, it was determined that the net cut to CSUSB's Academic Affairs division would be approximately seven percent. According to Hefner, the cut in Academic Affairs is generally representative of the entire campus because it comprises the largest segment of the university's programs. "We don't know if the seven percent figure will hold or not," he said. "We won't have a final figure until June."

But Hefner cautions against prematurely calculating the school's budget on the Governor's figures. "Historically, the Governor's budget is the best-case scenario," he said. "I don't know how much play there is in the figure, perhaps one to two points, but its hard to read the tea leaves at this point."

When looking at the Academic Affairs division's budget, Hefner notes that $28 million of their funding goes towards personnel, while only $1.4 million is spent on everything else, such as supplies, travel and student assistants. He said this indicates cuts will have to come in the larger segment of the division's budget.

"Clearly, we'll have to look at the personnel positions," he said. "The temporary positions may have to be eliminated, but we are going to try and keep the tenured and tenure-track positions."

"We know there's going to be a cut. If it's not that severe, we'll try to keep the personnel positions," he said. "But we won't have a final figure until June."

Hefner studies computerized campus ride-share plan

by Elizabeth Akins
Chronicle staff writer

A large-scale ride share program is being considered by the Board of Directors of the Cal State, San Bernardino Associated Students, Inc. (A.S.I.).

Unlike the current ride share service offered through A.S.I., the Computer Assisted Ride Share (C.A.R.S.) Program, proposed by Student-At-Large Board of Directors member Joseph Naus, is aimed at a mass number of students.

The existing program consists of a bulletin board in the Student Union, where students interested in car pooling can post their names and telephone numbers so that other interested students can contact them. To the left of the bulletin board, a sign warns students: "Post names at your own risk."

Naus felt the need for a more complex ride share program that would reach out to a larger population of students. "The fact that Cal State, San Bernardino is a commuter campus, coupled with the fact that many students face harsh economic realities, makes a large scale ride share program seem highly beneficial. It would save students money, reduce parking problems, and have positive environmental effects," Naus said.

Terry Szucsko, A.S.I. Board of Directors (B.O.D.) member, concurred that such a program would be timely considering the budget crunch and the state of the economy.

The C.A.R.S. Program proposed by Naus would basically be a computer match list service. The computer would match student applicants with other applicants living in the same area and having similar schedules.

A.S.I. President Sheri Major voiced concerns as to whether or not A.S.I. should take sole responsibility in providing ride share services to students. According to regulations of the Clean Air Act, any company with 100 or more employees must institute a ride share program.

CSUSB is legally required to equip its faculty with ride share services. It is possible that such regulations will apply to student populations in the future. Major felt that A.S.I. would be assuming responsibility for what should be the task of the University if A.S.I. agreed to independently operate a ride share program for the students.

The faculty representative to the B.O.D., Dr. Juan Gutierrez, suggested that A.S.I. establish a committee, composed of faculty, students, staff, administrators, and union representatives. Hefner agreed to independently operate a ride share program. The B.O.D. agreed that ride sharing services should be available to the students, but postponed implementing the C.A.R.S. Program to work out the specific means of operation.

Students who would like to see a ride share program made available to them should contact the A.S.I. office at 850-3932, room 108 of the Student Union.

Admission and records changes

Because of the severe cutbacks in staffing in Admissions and Records, the office will be closed on Fridays, change of major re-evaluations will be completed only when the student declares a major for the first time and when a grad check is filed, copies of transcripts to the department's only when the student provides a second copy, and the information counter will be open from 8 a.m. to 6 p.m. Monday through Thursday and from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. on Friday. During add/drop, it will stay open longer.

Is Division II basketball worth the price? Maybe...

by William Lundquist
Chronicle editor in chief

Now that the Coyotes men's basketball season is winding down, it's time for reflection on winning, losing, learning, and the relative costs of each.

Last year, the Coyotes entered Division II and proved that they could beat any team in the California Collegiate Athletic Association (CCAA), on any given night. This year, with the addition of several talented players, they appeared poised to contend for the championship. President Evans could not have hoped for a better scenario when he originally began athletics department closed down as tight as a clam on any information pertaining to the issue.

In the past, players have been declared ineligible for infractions as minor as participating in an intramural game. Perhaps it was just coincidence that these players were declared ineligible as soon as grades were released from fall quarter.

Whatever the real reason, the remaining players displayed plenty of 'heart.' Game after game, the Coyotes are winning big time. This year, with the addition of several talented players, they could not have hoped for a better scenario when he originally began athletics department closed down as tight as a clam on any information pertaining to the issue.

In the past, players have been declared ineligible for infractions as minor as participating in an intramural game. Perhaps it was just coincidence that these players were declared ineligible as soon as grades were released from fall quarter. Whatever the real reason, the remaining players displayed plenty of 'heart.' Game after game, the Coyotes are winning big time.

First, participating in Division II athletics has turned out to be as divisive as opponents to the idea feared it would be.

Among The Chronicle staff, some felt that the Athletics department was getting what it deserved for importing players who weren't really college material.

But what is a 'real' college student? We know of a club president well on his way to becoming a lawyer, that started life as a migrant worker. At least one Chronicle editor started his education in a plywood mill. Who's to say which Coyote basketball player may become a congressman or a brain surgeon?

Besides, even some of us 'academically gifted' Chronicle staff have watched our grades plummet while we put in 40-60 hours a week putting out a newspaper. It's fair to assume the Coyote basketball players have to put in even more time on the court to play at the championship level.

If academics actually were responsible for the suspensions, and that is entirely hypothetical, what is to be done to prevent a repeat in the future?

We could do nothing, let the players go, and endure another losing season, but winning is always more fun. We could put incredible pressure on the faculty to pass athletes without regard to their academic performance, but that would make a mockery of the educational standards of our school, wouldn't it?

Whatever the occurrence, we will continue to support our basketball players, and never mistake winning for losing.

Letters to The Chronicle

To Arms, to arms
Edirot, The Chronicle:
Who's my master? I'm afraid the State of the Union message was really a con job. There are many things that frighten me about the president's new economic 'stimulus' package, but one element concerns me the most. I'm firmly against making the so-called "wealthy" Americans pay a higher tax rate than the rest of us. Before you accuse me of being one of 'them,' let me explain that I'm a poor student, just like the rest of you. But it's clear to me that this is a harmful scheme, one that's destined to hurt all of us. Here's why:

The only real way to reduce the deficit is to cut spending. Liberals counter with "raise taxes." I oppose singling out the "rich" to pay a higher rate because for one, just who are they? For a full year, Clinton told us that $200,000 was the "rich" line. It only took one speech to lower this line to $100,000. The next time it drops, it might be on you and me. And, what does "their fair share" mean? The "rich" already pay more, both in real dollars and percentage-wise. It's also illogical. How is transferring money from the efficient private sector to the inefficient and parasitic public sector going to stimulate the economy? Penalizing incentive and wealth creation costs jobs, folks! But maybe we can, after all tax ourselves into prosperity.

It's immoral and illegitimate. If you had two cars, and three of your neighbors owned none, could the neighborhood get together and vote themselves your second car? How many of you would remain silent while your Marxist professor quietly redistributed the "A" you earned on your research paper, to a "needier" student who could only muster a "C"—so you both could have a "B"?

If the state can't notice race or sex in providing equal protection of the laws, then by what authority can it discriminate according to wallet thickness? The same reasoning that allows taxing the rich more allows taxing the poor more. Once one's property becomes less protected than another's, equal protection has failed. Unless everybody is taxed at one fixed percentage, the standard necessarily becomes subjective, and anybody—including the rich—can play that game.

Taxing the rich higher is also impossible. They will simply sink their money into tax shelters, just as they've done in the past. Wouldn't you? Real revenues will go down, not up. It's also impossible to close a deficit with higher taxation when Congress spends $1.59 for every dollar taxed.

Clinton's scheme is divisive and destructive to republic government. It's like the crab theory. Put several small crabs into a paper cup, and they pile up, forming a sort of step ladder. And just as soon as one crab shows some signs of success—just as he nears the top and almost escapes, the other crabs pull him down.

Public Safety seeks funding for student escorts

by Tasha Swift
Chronicle staff writer

The Office of Public Safety is waiting for Associated Students Inc. approval to hire two additional student escorts. The need for student escorts has increased. Since the Feb. 2 incident when the University Parking Control agent was forced off campus at gunpoint, the volunteer escort, Thomas Hamilton, a retired 65 year old, resigned because he was concerned for his own safety. Presently, there is only one student escort, John Lawrence, a senior at Cal State, San Bernardino. He is available to escort students Monday through Thursday from 6 p.m. until 11 p.m. Lawrence says people should not be afraid to call for an escort.

"I would like to see more of the buddy systems, of people walking in pairs or groups to cars," Quentin Moses, Public Safety administrative escort says. He hopes people will be responsible for their own personal safety. "If you're going to walk alone, call the escort service."

If a student escort (Lawrence) is not available, a Public Safety officer will respond to the call. However, "response time may be 20 to 25 minutes because of pending or other public assists," says Moses.

The escort service does cost. Associated Students Inc. gives $1,000 a year to pay for equipment. The campus contributes $3,500 a year to pay for one student escort's salary. Public Safety pays $1,500 a year in gas, vehicle maintenance, etc.

Even though the money adds up, $3,500 is needed to pay for one more student escort. Moses is hoping for two.

Students can take action to encourage the funding of student escorts. Moses suggests, 1) lobby your student representatives; 2) voice your concern in The Chronicle by writing to your editor; and 3) solicit campus administrators.

"The city has moved to our front door and brought its elements to our campus," Moses continues. "We are no longer an isolated campus." Moses attributes this to the increase in crime.

To be escorted, call extension 5165 from a courtesy phone. If no courtesy phone is available, pick up the emergency phones which ring directly into dispatch. Dispatch will then send for the student escort.

Career Connections

by Patricia Rodgers Gordon, acting director, career center

There is no single correct way to design your resume. However, research on what employers seek in a resume offers some guidelines for resume writers:

1. How important is the appearance of a resume? Sixty percent of employers in one study said they formed an opinion of a resume based on its appearance alone. Crowding information on a page elicited a negative reaction, while ample margins and headings that are flushed left evoked a mildly positive response. In addition, another study found that investing in typesetting, good paper stock, and a quality printing job is well worth it in the end.

2. What kind of paper should a resume be printed on? Many people believe that 20 lb. off-white, textured bond is the best choice for a resume. Others recommend the traditional plain white bond. While the research doesn't clarify this matter, an off-white, good quality paper just might catch the eye of an employer leafing through a stack of plain white resumes. At any rate, it is probably best to stick with some shade of white; in one study, employers reacted somewhat negatively to colored paper.

3. How long should a resume be? The research is unanimous that job applicants should limit their resumes to one page, adding a second only if absolutely necessary. Cover letters also should be one page.

4. Should certain items be underlined or italicized to make them stand out in a resume? While one study shows that the effect is slight, the consensus is that underlining or italics draw the reader's eye to areas of significance and add to the resume's overall appearance.

5. How important are spelling, grammar, and neatness in a resume? Very! Research shows that spelling or grammatical errors in a resume can be fatal to employment chances. Neatness is a projection of a job candidate's personality on paper. A sloppy, careless resume may indicate a sloppy, careless employee.

probably lead the California Faculty Association to file suit.

We could decide that all we want from the players is good basketball performance, and come up with some sort of degree in basketball itself, but again, what would the players do with such a degree if they didn't make the cut in the NBA?

We could supply personal tutors, who could do everything to get a player through a class except write the papers. Okay, maybe write the papers on the fly. Again: it's the players who would be cheated in the long run, and legitimate tutors are already available at the Learning Center.

We could recruit only academically superior players. Right. We might as well move back to Division III, or lower.

Coyotes fight to third in CCAA

by Jeremy D. Sporrong
Chronicle sports editor

The Coyote men’s basketball team came out of this week’s games with a triumph over Cal Poly San Luis Obispo, and a defeat against UC Riverside this Saturday, and if, and when we take the victory we will also be 7-5 in the CCAA. This would leave the Coyotes, and the Toros at a tie.

Thursday night against Dominguez Hills, and the Coyotes fell into half time with a 72-72 tie. In overtime, the Toros’ came ahead by six points with two minutes left on the clock. The last few minutes of the game proved disappointing for the Coyotes who shot 3-of-6 free throws, and ending the game with a victory for the Toros.

Lynn Sherman (8), and Chery’ll Few (13) both made attempts to tie the game with a three pointer, but efforts failed.

The Coyotes were led by Kim Young’s amazing 39 points, and seven rebounds.

Saturday night at the home gym against Cal State Los Angeles the Coyotes gave LA the lead in the first half, and took them over in the second half.

In the first half LA and San Bernardino ran with a tie three times. After a tie of 10-10 LA never trailed again in the first half.

The Coyotes only fell behind as much as seven points before starting their road to defeat.

Junior guard Pamela Ross for LA played the team nucleus with sixteen points, and four rebounds. About half way through the second half Pamela slammed Kelly O’Brien almost on purpose forcing Kelly in to a rage of injustice.

The game tied to 48-48 and the Coyotes started to take away the game. Junior Forward Chery’ll Few scored a turn around jump shot putting the game into a seven point lead, and two minutes left. Kim Young scored the final two points of the game with 2-of-2 free throws.

Kim Hansen, and Kelly O’Brien played their last home game against LA. Kelly made eight points, and four rebounds, Kim also scored eight points, and two rebounds.

Women Coyotes come from behind to win last home game

by Jeremy D. Sporrong
Chronicle sports editor

The Cal State Women’s Basketball team fell to Dominguez Hills by only three points at Dominguez Hills on Feb. 18, and overtook the game against Cal State Los Angeles, at the home gym last Saturday, Feb. 20.

The Women fell to Dominguez Hills with a final score of 80-77. A deadly overtime left Dominguez 7-5 in the CCAA. This leaves the Coyotes, and the Toros at a tie.

Depending on how well Dominguez Hills does against San Luis Obispo, and Cal Poly Pomona is whether or not we are handed a ticket to the CCAA conference. Dominguez should win against SLO, and should lose against Cal Poly Pomona. These games should leave Dominguez 7-5 in the CCAA.

The Women play against UC Riverside this Saturday, and if, and when we take the victory we will also be 7-5 in the CCAA. This would leave the Coyotes, and the Toros at a tie.

Thursday night Dominguez Hills, and the Coyotes fell into half time with a 72-72 tie. In overtime, the Toro’s came ahead by six points with two minutes left on the clock. The last few minutes of the game proved disappointing for the Coyotes who shot 3-of-6 free throws, and ending the game with a victory for the Toros.

Lynn Sherman (8), and Chery’ll Few (13) both made attempts to tie the game with a three pointer, but efforts failed.

The Coyotes were led by Kim Young’s amazing 39 points, and seven rebounds.

Saturday night at the home gym against Cal State Los Angeles the Coyotes gave LA the lead in the first half, and took them over in the second half.

In the first half LA and San Bernardino ran with a tie three times. After a tie of 10-10 LA never trailed again in the first half.

The Coyotes only fell behind as much as seven points before starting their road to defeat.

Junior guard Pamela Ross for LA played the team nucleus with sixteen points, and four rebounds. About half way through the second half Pamela slammed Kelly O’Brien almost on purpose forcing Kelly in to a rage of injustice.

The game tied to 48-48 and the Coyotes started to take away the game. Junior Forward Chery’ll Few scored a turn around jump shot putting the game into a seven point lead, and two minutes left. Kim Young scored the final two points of the game with 2-of-2 free throws.

Kim Hansen, and Kelly O’Brien played their last home game against LA. Kelly made eight points, and four rebounds, Kim also scored eight points, and two rebounds.
