Welcome back! No, these pictures aren't crooked. This is the way CSCSB looked last week, cold and desolate, as strong winds whipped across campus on their way out of the Cajon Pass.

Bookstore Ready For Winter Students

by Lori Osborne

Tired of the high cost of textbooks? Well, don't blame the Campus Bookstore.

The Bookstore makes no profits from the sale of textbooks, according to Carol Dunlap, Bookstore manager. "We get a twenty percent discount from publishers, then we mark that up three percent to cover freight. But the cost of freight often runs higher than the markup."

The Bookstore does a little better on the sale of used textbooks, but because the price of a used book rises correspondingly to its new counterpart, a book can get more expensive as it gets older.

Dunlap said that publishers determine the price of books, and can raise them anytime they want. Prices are normally raised every January, she said. "We've had publishers raise prices in the middle of the quarter," Dunlap added.

To try to combat high prices, all books are requested in paperback, if possible. "But sometimes the publisher is out. Now and then they will give us the clothbound books at paperback prices," Dunlap said.

In addition, the bookstore helps out the Associated Students' Book Co-Op, an exchange of textbooks by students, by giving the students a print-out of classes that will be offered the following quarter.

"But we don't run it," said Dunlap. "The Co-Op is competition."

The Bookstore is run by the California State College Foundation, and the people working there are not state employees. "The state is not allowed to run any profit-making organizations," said Dunlap. "The Foundation also handles such things as the food services on campus."

To cut down on losses, Dunlap said she must take several factors into consideration when determining how many books to order. She looks at how many cards have been cut for a class, roll sheets from the previous year, and cards showing how many books have been sold previously for the class. If a class is offered often and a book is used many times, students are likely to trade books among themselves and the Bookstore orders less. Factors such as the time slot a class is in and the popularity of the instructor are also taken into account.

Care must be taken not to overstock since some books cannot be returned to the publisher. For other books, only a portion of the order can be returned.

Another problem is when instructors order books for a class and then change their minds. What happens to those and other leftover books that cannot be returned to the publisher? "We try to sell them to other colleges or used book dealers," Dunlap answered, "and hope they don't go out of print."

Leftover books that can be returned to the publisher are sent back after about eight weeks, Dunlap said. So there is no great pressure on the student to buy all the required textbooks at the beginning of the quarter if they won't be used in class for awhile.

When the Bookstore does not order enough books, the student should notify the instructor. It is then the instructor's responsibility to find out how many more books are needed for the class, and let the Bookstore know. If several people request a book and the instructor never calls, then the Bookstore will call the instructor. "We usually send a flyer out to new faculty members explaining this," said Dunlap, "but there is no excuse for long-time faculty not knowing."

The Bookstore also offers clothing with the CSCSB logo on it, gift items such as beer mugs and the ever-popular Garfield, and some food items such as tea, vitamins, and candy bars. Besides being a convenience for students, "those are the only things we make money from," said Dunlap.

Bogged down? Try SAILing this quarter!

by Lori Osborne

The Student Assistance in Learning (SAIL) Basic Writing Labs are not just for people who have difficulties writing. "Usually the people who attend are the high-achievers," said Shea Rushing, who teaches the Lab.

Rushing said that the majority of the students who attend the Writing Lab do well in school and hope to improve themselves further. "The students are highly motivated and everybody participates," Rushing said. "And believe me, that makes a world of difference."

Rushing, who believes that anyone can benefit from the Writing Lab said, "I've had pretty good luck helping people to learn." She demonstrates shortcuts, such as ways to help memorize certain things. These shortcuts and tips can help even a good writer to improve. "I don't think anyone has ever come out saying they didn't learn anything," she said.

Lack of pressure is one reason for the Lab's success, Rushing said. "There are no grades and no homework. I think that helps a lot."

The Writing Labs are held three times a week: Tuesday from 10:00 to 11:00 a.m.; Wednesday from noon to 1:00 p.m.; and Thursday from 3:00 to 4:00 p.m. About fifteen people attend each one of the Labs which are all on the same topic. The subject of the Writing Labs changes weekly.

One Lab a week is videotaped for those who missed the Lab. This tape is available for viewing in the Learning Center.

Are you in need of help with college study skills? Then SAIL (Student Assistance in Learning) and the Learning Center have an Education 37 class for you!

This class is designed for students who find their concentration, study habits, listening, and notetaking skills needing improvement. We also offer labs to learn relaxation, assertiveness techniques, values clarification, and career development. The labs are a great place to learn more about yourself and make some new friends.

Many students have expressed an improvement in their study habits due to the Education 37 class. We would like to share this experience with you. There is still time to register for the class this Winter Quarter.

The Study Skills class will be held on Mondays and Wednesdays from 1:00 p.m. to 2:00 p.m. There will be two labs offered, one to be held on Tuesdays from 1:00 p.m. to 2:30 p.m. and the other on Thursday from 2:00 p.m. to 3:30 p.m. Choose the lab which is the most convenient time for you. Dianna Pelletier from the Learning Center will facilitate the class. The labs will be conducted by SAIL counselors, Linda Callahan and Olga Carranza.

Students receiving Financial Aid can use the 2 units toward the 36 units required per year. These units are not applicable to the baccalaureate degree.

We hope you will come and join our class. If you have any questions regarding the class or the SAIL Program, please call us or drop by. Our telephone number is (714) 887-7673. The SAIL office is located in Trailer 1B behind the Student Services Building.

Student Housing Bill Intro'd In Assembly

Assemblywoman Teresa P. Hughes (D. - Los Angeles) introduced Assembly Bill 133 last Dec. 1 which would establish an Affordable Student Housing Revolving Fund. The goal of this bill is to provide loans to the California State University campuses for the purpose of building low cost student housing. The loans would be repaid to the Fund over a 40-year period from user fees, with interest at a rate not to exceed 6% per annum.

AB 133 would also require that the California State University system develop a five-year plan of housing needs at each CSU campus. Those campuses with no student housing would have the greatest priority. As the Affordable Student Housing Revolving Fund is replenished, new loans would be awarded until adequate housing is provided on all CSU campuses.

Assemblywoman Hughes stated that by building affordable housing, "we will assist not only our constituents who are students, but the communities that surround the campuses, by eliminating some of the competition for low-cost residential units."

Hughes contends that with the current state of the economy, "this is extremely important in areas where senior citizens or other families on fixed incomes must compete with students."

A "Bit" Of Information: Computer Science Program Open

Beginning this Winter Quarter, Cal State, San Bernardino is offering a Bachelor of Science degree in Computer Science.

The new major is the result of a two-year study which included input from area business and industry, research into the needs of the job market, and a look at computer science programs at other institutions.

"Our main emphasis will be the graduate who is well-trained in the theory and practice of computer science as a discipline, as well as having a good command of the major programming languages of the field," said Dr. James Drum, dean of the School of Natural Sciences.

Students will have the opportunity to learn computing languages including PASCAL, COBOL, ASSEMBLY, FORTRAN, and BASIC. A total of 82.5 units of credit are required for the major. Most classes at Cal State carry five units.

"Our program is for individuals who want to work out there where most of the jobs are - in the applications of computer science, with a strong emphasis on programming," Dr. Crum said.

"Computer science is a rapidly emerging field, and we encourage individuals going into it to be prepared to constantly keep up with new developments," he added.

The degree has been started to meet a growing demand from area residents looking toward careers in computer science. As the major becomes impacted at other colleges and universities, new programs are needed. At CSCSB, a program that began with 12 students in 1972 is expected to draw 700 this year, Dr. Crum said.

"We started the program when computer science began to develop as an emerging field with a series of add-on courses for standard majors," he said. "We found employers increasingly were asking our students if they knew anything about computers. As computers became more and more important, we had to recognize the need for putting together a package of courses, so we started the certificate in computers and programming in 1975."

Computer facilities continued to grow along with the course offerings until, during the summer of 1981, a $1.2 million computer, micro-computer laboratory, and other equipment were added, at a total cost of about $1.5 million.

Cal State began offering its first classes in the major last quarter. Now, faculty are gearing up for the first sequence in PASCAL, which begins this quarter.

A major addition to the new program, Dr. Crum said, is the arrival of Dr. Richard Botting, an English computer expert who helped develop training programs for British civil service managers. As coordinator of the Cal State program, he will be instrumental in further development of the curriculum. Dr. Botting has a strong undergraduate background in pure mathematics and physics, and holds a Ph.D. in Computer Science from Brunel University in Great Britain.

Jung Liu also joined the college last September as one of the first full-time faculty members in the program. She holds a B.A. in educational media science from Tamkang University in Taiwan and and M.S. in Computer Science from Southern Methodist University.

Faculty members with doctorates in other areas, such as chemistry, physics, and mathematics also teach in the program. Dr. Fook Liu, professor of physics, who taught the first computer science classes, is currently on leave of absence while undertaking additional graduate work in Computer Science at the University of Illinois. The college is in the process of recruiting two additional faculty members.

"We're trying to meet the needs of students just as rapidly as we possibly can. We expect the program to continue to grow at an increasingly rapid rate," Dr. Crum said.

To accomodate working people, many of the classes will meet in the evening. Dr. Crum hopes that soon it will be possible to earn the degree entirely through night classes.

Students interested in obtaining more information may call Dr. Crum at (714) 887-7341.

Desert extension classes available thru CSCSB

Cal State, San Bernardino will bring 21 extension courses in education, liberal studies, paralegal studies, and a broad range of general interest topics to Palm Desert and Palm Springs beginning January 6.

Courses of general interest will include photography, income tax preparation, use of tear gas for self-defense, speed reading, succeeding in small business, plus a course for singles on meeting people.

Two classes, "The Entrepreneurial Woman" and "Women and Friendship," are designed specifically for women.

Also offered will be three classes applicable toward the Bachelor's Degree in Liberal Studies. Those classes are "Management Organization and Behavior," "Children's Literature," and "Psychology of Women."

Through the external degree program, teachers can earn a Master of Education Degree with the work undertaken entirely in the Coachella Valley, if there is adequate registration for the courses.

This winter, eight classes will be offered leading to the M.A. with options in counselor education, elementary education, reading, and special education (learning handicapped). These classes also apply toward several specialized credentials.

The college also has scheduled a non-credit course in microcomputer uses for teachers.

The college continues to offer classes in the Paralegal Studies certificate program this winter with "Family Law and Community Property" in Palm Desert and "Property Law" in Banning.

Most courses which are applicable toward degrees, certificates, or credentials meet one evening a week for 10 or 11 weeks during the quarter. Other special interest classes meet from one to several times on evenings or weekends.

Information and a free bulletin of extension classes is available by calling the Office of Continuing Education at (619) 346-4403.

New M.A. program's success is arresting

People employed in law enforcement, probation, and corrections can begin working toward an M.A. in Criminal Justice beginning this Winter Quarter through a new program at Cal State, San Bernardino.

The focus of the degree is in the administration of criminal justice areas. The program is geared primarily for people already working in the field who seek management skills.

"Police, corrections, and probation, while not requiring a Master's Degree, are viewing it in a highly favorable light for promotion purposes," said Dr. Frances Coles, the program coordinator.

The program is designed with a limited prerequisite requirement to enable students with Bachelor's Degrees in related fields such as Psychology and Administration to enroll along with students in Sociology and Criminal Justice.

This quarter, two lower-division prerequisites, in criminology and in punishment and correction, will be offered. Also scheduled is a graduate-level prerequisite course in management and organization behavior, which may be counted as an elective. Core courses for the M.A. will begin in the Fall Quarter, 1983.

The degree can be earned in one or two years of full- or part-time study, Dr. Coles said. A total of 25 units of core courses, five units of which are in thesis research, and 20 units of electives are required. Most classes at the college carry five units of credit.

To accomodate working people, the classes within the Master's Degree program will meet in the late afternoons or evenings, Dr. Coles said. Further information about this new program is available by contacting her at (714) 887-7252.

Cal State San Bernardino's Learning Center Here To Help

by Helen J. Jones

As one walks through the door of room PL 37, located in the basement of the Pfau Library, the person is greeted with a warm, "Can I help you?"

The secretary at the desk situated at the entrance to Cal State, San Bernardino's Learning Center poses that question to thousands of students who come for help in subjects such as Accounting, Art, American History, Economics, Education, English, Foreign Language, Math, Music, Nursing, Political Science, Psychology, Reading, Sciences, and Social Sciences.

A list of tutors, their subject areas, and hours they are available is posted above a sign-in book located just inside the Center. Students and tutors are seated at tables busily engaged in writing or discussions. Other students, with headphones on, are in cubicles listening to tapes provided for language studies and lecture review. Conference rooms are available for taking tests.

The Learning Center provides tutoring free of charge to students of Cal State, on a one-to-one or group basis, in most academic areas.

"The Learning Center has relocated twice due to an increase in services offered and needs of students," said Dr. Dianne E. Irwin, Director of the Center for the past eight years.

The Center has become an integral part of the campus because of the tremendous increase in student use, she said. Student visits have increased from 1,800 in 1972 to 20,466 in 1982. One out of every four students used the Learning Center last year, noted Dr. Irwin.

Student Elaine McDonald, who visits for tutoring in French, said, "Students should not be embarrassed to come to the Learning Center. They should use it whether they are failing a course or just want to raise their grades. If I would admit to myself that I really needed help, I would raise all of my other grades, too."

Dr. Irwin said, "In 1976, Cal State, San Bernardino was the first Learning Center in the California State University system to be accredited by the Western Association of Schools and Colleges."

Along with tutoring, the Learning Center works with faculty to develop additional material in various forms to assist students, Dr. Irwin said. "Some of the large lecture courses," she added, "are taped and maintained in the Center for student review."

Also, according to the Learning Center's 1981-82 brochure, several non-credit seminars are available to students: The College Study Skills Survival Seminar; Term Paper Seminar, offered in conjunction with the Library; Intermediate Writing Seminar; Writer Awareness Improvement Seminar; and the Pre-Statistics Seminar. The Intermediate Writing Seminar and the Writer Awareness Seminar are both taught by Dianna Pelletier. All seminars are provided throughout the academic year and during the summer.

The Learning Center offers other short term workshops in conjunction with the Student Assistance in Learning (SAIL) program, which provides specific topic area emphasis such as vocabulary, notetaking, reading, and listening.

Nancy Fraize, a Biology major, said, "I enjoy input from other students I meet at the Learning Center." She said she has been coming to the Learning Center two or three times a week for about three years. "I've also attended some of the writing seminars put on by the Center and found them to be very helpful to me," Fraize added. "I was fearful when I first came to the Center for tutoring, but they made me feel comfortable and I found it was easier to learn because of the informality projected at the Center. I feel, though, that the good tutors are overloaded."

Leslie McLeod, a Nursing major, said she has been coming to the Learning Center starting Spring Quarter, 1982, and her grades have improved. She believes the Center needs more publicity. "I was here at Cal State for two years and didn't know about the Learning Center," she said.

The Center's professional and clerical staff consists of Dr. Dianne E.

Irwin, Director; Dianna J. Pelletier, M.A., an advisor; and Barbara J. Williams, secretary. The student staff consists of student and graduate assistants who tutor in specific subject areas, and other student assistants, said Dr. Irwin.

"The caliber of student tutors is excellent. They are experts," said Fred Allison, another student who is currently working toward his Master's Degree in Business Administration. "Without the assistance of the Learning Center, I would have died. Outside, I have paid as much as $300 for tutoring for one class, and here at this college it's free," said Allison.

"It's a helluva deal. Most students don't know about it. They should use it because by getting help at the Learning Center you are almost assured of an 'A' in the class," Allison said.

Hours for the Learning Center during the academic year are 8:30 a.m. to 8:30 p.m., Monday - Thursday; 8:30 a.m. to 4:00 p.m., Friday; and noon to 3:00 p.m., Saturday.

For additional information about the Learning Center, call (714) 887-7612.

Focus on Faculty:

Dianna Pelletier

by Anthony Manning

"Bonjour. Comment allez-vous?" I asked.

"Je vais tres bien, merci," came the reply. After speaking with Dianna Pelletier, Learning Center Advisor, one could say that things usually go tres bien for her. Dianna's warm personality and gifted sense of humor quickly puts any apprehensive student's mind at ease.

Miss Pelletier is a familiar sight to students who go down to PL 37 to utilize the Learning Center. She has been with the Learning Center since its inception, and at one time was the only person available to staff the Center. Her hours have been long, and the work often involved, but Miss Pelletier readily admits, "I enjoy it tremendously. It's a lot of fun, especially to see everyone grow up and go through college."

"I've seen the Learning Center evolve from a little place helping a few kids in LC 17 to this new facility (PL 37). There's now at least twelve staff members available to assist students, compared with two when it all started," Miss Pelletier continued.

Dianna has come a long way herself. She started to earn her Bachelor's Degree at the University of Maine, but moved to California because of illness. She earned her A.A. from Victor Valley Junior College, and received two B.A.s from Cal State, San Bernardino in French and English, as well as a teaching credential. "You've got to be versatile nowadays. You never know what will come up," she said.

After getting a Master's in Education, with an emphasis on English, Miss Pelletier worked for the Learning Center. Now, besides her duties as an advisor and French tutor for the Center, Dianna teaches French classes and seminars sponsored by the Learning Center. One of the seminars, a Research Paper Seminar, was developed by Miss Pelletier.

The Research Paper Seminar was developed in a manner so as not to make students feel uncomfortable about writing. "I thought that if they (the students) could be made to feel at ease with writing, they would retain what they learned," she said. "It's surprising how many students coming out of high school and those already in college don't know how to write a research paper."

"Students are fascinating," Miss Pelletier added. "Some years a good

crop of kids comes through here, and another year the students are lagging behind. But these seminars must be doing something right, because they're always full and everyone shows a marked improvement by the end of the class."

In spite of the success of these seminars and the tremendous growth of the Learning Center in recent years, Miss Pelletier still feels that there is a stigma attached to the Center. "A lot of students go through Cal State without ever stopping by. They think that the Center is just for 'dumb' people, and so they miss out on an excellent opportunity to enhance their education." While it is true that the Center helps slower learners, a good majority of the students using the Center have a G.P.A. of at least 3.0. They visit the Center to receive additional instruction outside of the classroom.

"It makes me feel bad that students who are out there and need help don't come by because they think the Learning Center isn't for them, or they're just too proud." Dianna paused for a moment, and then went on, a gleam in her eye, "On the contrary, it takes a good student to say, 'Hey, I need help. What do I need to do?'"

The only part of her job that is annoying, said Miss Pelletier, is the fact that so many students wait until the last few weeks of a quarter to "discover" the Learning Center. Then the staff of the Center becomes overloaded, as nerves are frayed and tempers shortened. "It bothers me somewhat that these students I haven't seen all quarter swarm in frantically looking for help, trying to take tests, or getting additional help with their pronunciation in French. I could have been helping them all quarter long!"

Besides being an excellent tutor in French and an asset to the Center in so many other ways, Miss Pelletier is more than happy to lend an ear to her students. "I feel their pressures, and not just the ones at school. I can sense their problems, and I'll gladly listen to them if it means taking a load off their shoulders." Her tone became serious. "I have feelings, too, and I don't want to see a student suffer."

Miss Pelletier summed up her feelings about her many years here at CSCSB when she said, "Thank God I've been so blessed with this job. The students I help have been super people who are interested in learning. It's a great feeling."

And Cal State, San Bernardino is blessed, too, because it is fortunate enough to have such a dedicated and sincere teacher in Dianna Pelletier.

"Music at Cal State" Presents A World Music Panorama

A panorama of music from around the world will be presented by the Center for World Music from San Diego State University during a concert this Saturday, Jan. 8, at Cal State, San Bernardino.

Electronic Jewelry Exhibit Slated To Open Next Week

Electronic jewelry by 16 artists from the United States and abroad will be featured in an exhibit opening with a reception from 7:00 to 10:00 p.m., Friday, Jan. 14, in the Art Gallery at Cal State, San Bernardino.

Combining today's computer technology with the art of jewelry making, the more than 50 pieces have functioning electronic circuits to make them active with lights and sounds. Most have their own power sources.

The works range from stainless steel insects with flashing eyes to a jewelry-scale sculpture with ultrasonic detectors. Many of the artists have used experimental materials, such as plastics, aluminum, titanium, and nickel.

Coordinated by Chad Lynde, an art instructor at Cal State, San Bernardino, the show closes Feb. 24. There is no admission charge. Art Gallery hours are 9:00 a.m. to 4:00 p.m., Monday through Friday.
