Men's Basketball Wins Regionals

By Michael Bernardi
Chronicle Staff Writer

The Cal State men's basketball team proved this weekend that the improbable is never impossible. CSUSB traveled to Central Washington for the West Regional tournament, won three games in three days and walked away as the best team in the west.

CSUSB will travel to Louisville, Ky., Mar. 17, to play in the elite eight against Florida Southern.

On Mar. 4, in their first appearance in Div. II postseason, the Coyote's knocked off Sonoma State. On Mar. 5, the team went on to upset number one seed Central Washington and finally on Mar. 6, the team finished the tournament with an overtime victory against Seattle-Pacific.

Two keys to a winning season are luck and skill and the Coyote's have definitely enjoyed both so far in their tournament wins.

In round one they had a sizeable mental edge as they drew Sonoma State, a team that they had blown out in recent history. Round two was a hard fought victory against the top seed Central Washington in which the Coyote's displayed defensive skills. In a stroke of luck however, U.C. Davis fell to Seattle-Pacific on the same day as the Coyote's second win. Davis had beaten Cal State twice during the regular season but had the mental edge.

In the opening game against Sonoma State, Phil Johnson had an off game but managed to come up with 14 points. Scott Duffy checked in with 12 points and Eric Maye had a double double with 11 points and 10 rebounds off the bench.

The Coyotes played a tenacious defense in a second half rally that disposed of Sonoma en route to their first Div.II tournament win and earning a match-up with top ranked Central Washington.

The following night, Cal State delivered the first home defeat of the season to Central Washington in front of a crowded crowd of over 3,000 fans. As it turned out however, it was a home game of sorts to guard Phil Johnson as he had more than three weeks into the fall quarter. Foster said, "Professor Killian told me she would not pass me because my writing skills needed improvement. She ridiculed me and said I was hostile." Foster added, "I turned in all the work but I still got an 'F.'"

Racial Discrimination Grievances Filed

Is Another Lawsuit in the Making?

By D'Lorah DeBarge

Barney Foster and Lee Cooke are the latest students to file racial discrimination grievances against CSUSB. Both were failed by the same professor, in the master's program, Kerry Killian, whom they believe was prejudiced against African Americans. The two are represented by Gil Navarro, an education advocate.

Two other students, Phyllis Ann Hernandez and Pamela Lee Bial - Shimizu have gone through the grievance process unsuccessfully and have since filed Federal lawsuits because of racial discrimination as well.

A protest rally held on Feb. 16 to bring attention to the students' plight attracted only a few students, but, "250 flyers were distributed to students in the area," Navarro said, "some students asked how to file their own grievances with the university." While Navarro is not an attorney, he is legal that he represents students before the United States Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR). *

"Certain procedures must be followed when a student files a complaint or grievance," Navarro said. A paper trail so-to-speak. Apparently, the university’s by-laws concerning the handling of complaints and grievances does not meet the federal guidelines which state that a student has 180 days after an incident to file a complaint. The university’s rules allow students only 40 days to file, reducing the reporting time considerably. This fact alone could affect a student's decision to file. Furthermore, Navarro said, the rules governing academic grievances and non-academic grievances are obscure and further confuse the process.

My concern is that barriers are put in place so students don't have a fair due process for airing grievances. I say [to the university] either correct the situation and follow the law or I will recommend strongly that the university lose its federal funding," said Navarro.

Former student Barney Foster, an African-American female graduate, said she filed a grievance because it became clear to her that Professor Killian was determined to fail her. "As early as President Clinton visited Mexico in February to attend the U.S.-Mexican Summit. Mexican President Ernesto Zedillo met with President Clinton and Secretary of State Madeleine Albright. The Mexican Summit was an attempt to challenge and confirm Mexico’s ability to perform under strict anti-drug standards. A failing grade given by President Clinton would have meant that Mexico would be subjected to strict economic sanctions. The Summit appeared to be a success for both nations.

The Bi-National Performance Measures of Effectiveness (PME) agreement would require Mexico to comply with 147 action items laid out for Mexico by the United States. Specifically, the PME will address the following areas of drug control: demand reduction, production and distribution of drugs, criminal organizations, law enforcement cooperation, extradition, firearms trafficking, corruption, border security, chemical control, money laundering, asset forfeiture, interdiction, training, and exchange of information and evidence.

According to CSU, San Bernardino, Political Science Professor William Green, “They are meeting to ‘unstick’ some important issues in US-Mexico relations...US proposals...can legitimately be seen as an erosion of Mexican sovereignty. Because of corruption, the US legitimately views Mexico’s law-enforcement arms as hopelessly compromised, and wants to handle most of the work ourselves; even in Mexican territory. I think that such arrangements are inherently unstable and need continual renegotiating and fixing.”

The law enforcement program agreement would provide training and technical aid to a new federal police force that will oversee airports, borders, seaports, and other law enforcement jobs. This program will also include regulation of chemicals commonly used as precursors to illegal drugs.

The U.S. Export-Import Bank will provide approximately $4 billion in export financing for Mexican purchases of American products. The aid will include (in the form of loans) loan guaranties, and credit insurance. It will assist in purchases of aircraft, construction equipment, and needed materials for the broken down Mexican infrastructure. U.S. officials say that the program will support 60,000 new U.S. jobs.

Civilian aviation will be granted permits to expand air traffic from two airlines per shared port to four per port. Charter flight restrictions will also be eased due to new-shared codes between the two countries. Shared codes allow air transport companies to fill more flights by making more planes available.

Border violence is expected to drop due to the training that will be shared between the U.S. Border Patrol and Mexico’s Federal Police. New non-lethal enforcement techniques will be the main push of the training. These techniques, when employed properly, are expected to minimize border incidents that require lethal force. The accord also creates joint procedures that will be used by the two forces. The United States uses these techniques overseas where U.S. personnel are deployed and have proven to be successful in almost eliminating lethal confrontations with individuals.

Mexico and the United States will develop new ways to make people aware of the tuberculosis disease, and how to prevent the spread of the disease. The program will also increase detection of disease outbreaks and monitor the spread of drug-resistant tuberculosis.

“What happens in Mexico has an impact on the daily life of Americas” Jeffery Davidow, U.S. Ambassador to Mexico, said that “Both the United States and Mexico remain firmly committed to efforts to counter the growing threat of large-scale drug trafficking and other serious organized crimes.”

“It is significant that the Government of Mexico continues to cooperate with the United States on a broad range of counter-narcotics activities. As [President Clinton] notes, Mexico scored several counter-drug successes this year and implemented a number of changes the U.S. viewed as critical to effective bilateral cooperation.” He added, “While the Zedillo administration is committed to taking aggressive action against drug trafficking, it acknowledges that Mexico’s justice and public security institutions remain seriously flawed; police and military forces lack the tools and training.”

In a September 10, 1998 speech before the Chamber of Deputies, Mexico Attorney Madrazo said: “The people’s most serious concern is public security. The citizens feel impatient against crime and perceive the authorities as inefficient to combat it. The public is equally afraid of criminals and the police.”

Most people at Cal State have heard the horror stories of a Tijuana visit that went wrong. In fact, Mexican Federal Police have an extremely poor reputation with most Americans. The U.S. State Department has made efforts to protect Americans in Mexico. In conjunction with Mexican forces, the U.S. intends to change the reputation of Federal forces on both sides of the border.

PME’s will not completely solve the problems that both countries share, but they will make a dent in the illegal activities in border regions and also develop confidence in border law enforcement. In California ports-of-entry from Mexico, drug seizures have increased almost two-fold from last year. According to U.S. Customs officials, seizures of major illicit drugs have doubled from 1997 to 1998 with cocaine being the only drug not increasing in seizure rate.

Since the 'War on Drugs' is increasingly appears to be a debacle many times the scale of Prohibition,' Professor Green said, "one could argue that any concessions made in this area are not 'fair' to US interests."

The President and the First Lady will also be travelling to Central America from March 8 to March 11. The purpose will be to address similar issues in the Central American Summit.

Professor Davis said in February, "I am very pleased to announce that President Zedillo has accepted my invitation to travel to California this spring. This will be his first visit to California as President of Mexico. I have also asked the presiding officer of the Senate and Assembly - and they have agreed - to extend an invitation to have President Zedillo address a joint session of the California legislature."

"I have long believed that California cannot succeed if Mexico does not succeed. We are tied together by a common history and a common tradition. California is home to more people of Mexican descent than any other place on the planet earth besides Mexico City. The president and I agree that we should work as allies to solve common problems."

Davis has taken steps to develop strong California/Mexico relations. He has encouraged...
Women’s Conference Charts Path to Empowerment after 2000

Tomorrow Senator Joe Baca will be hosting CSUSB’s 7th Annual Women’s Conference, “Charting the Path Towards Millennium Empowerment,” a free event that takes place from 8:00 a.m. to 2:00 p.m. in the Upper Commons. The conference is co-sponsored by the Cross Cultural Center, Women’s Resource Center, ASI Cultural Planning Committee, San Manuel Indian Bingo and Casino, and Pacific Bell.

As master of ceremonies, Marilyn Karnig will introduce keynote speaker Maria Contreras-Sweet, Secretary of the Business, Transportation, and Housing Agency.

Five additional panelists, from the university as well as the San Bernardino community, will speak.

Registration and a continental breakfast begins at 8:00 a.m. The commencement program begins at 9:00 a.m. After the keynote speech during lunch, the event will wind up at 2:00 PM. Seating is limited, so contact Beverly Munoz at 880-7204 or 797-2493 or sign up at the Cross Cultural Center.

Mexican companies to work with Mexican citizens illegally in this country, and on the degree to which the state government will promote the Spanish language and ‘Latino’ culture,” Green said. “Naturally, Davis’ actions in this area are popular in Mexico and may affect the degree to which the Mexican government chooses to direct investments in California as opposed to other border states. Bottom line—I don’t think our new governor will be a significant factor in US-Mexican relations.” These programs may be successful, but it seems they may impact our taxes and resources. Our education and social programs will be jeopardized. This will affect not only the US but will lead to higher taxes in California and a continual degradation of social programs.

gram. Foster said her writing skills were not up to par, but she passed the upper division writing course when she obtained her bachelor's degree. And more importantly, she passed the two other master's courses that she took in the fall.

Foster obtained her B.A. from CSUSB and entered the master's program in social work in order to be later licensed as a social worker. She was admitted with the proviso that she would maintain a 3.0 average. Receiving the failing grade from Killian completely knocked her out of the program, and disqualified her from receiving further financial aid. Now, she will have to repay the $5,000 stipend that she was awarded, and she does not have the resources.

In an effort to salvage her educational career, Foster has applied to other universities to complete her master's degree. She believed filing a grievance was her only recourse, because she is a student who is still in the program and is suffering because of Professor Killian's conduct. At press time, Professor Killian had not responded to any calls made to her voice mail.

Dr. Craig Henderson, judicial advisor, said that the federal Family Education Rights and Privacy Act prevents him from commenting on the claims. The only thing Henderson would say was, "The process is moving along appropriately."

What pollutes the air, impedes growth of hair, and darkens the organs called lungs? The breath it creates and how bad it tastes, everyone knows it’s tobacco.

Tobacco, tobacco, it’s dirty and ugly and rude. Tobacco; tobacco it’s much worse than bad it’s crude. You should stop smoking now. Better stop smoking now. Doctors will have a cow. Better stop smoking now.

I had to borrow a jingle from the old “Slinky” ad to make the song work, but it sure fits. Everything about tobacco, from the delusory health effects to the deceitful corporate and political structure that protects it, stinks. Tobacco is a huge problem in modern day society, and it is costing those of us who choose not to partake in the filthy habit greatly.

First, there are the secondary smoke inhalation problems. Do we have the right to breathe fresh unpolluted air? Or, do smokers who choose not to partake in the filthy habit greatly.

Third, not that air pollution isn’t a big enough problem for me, but what about litter. Look around campus. What is the number one source of litter? That’s right, cigarette butts. Some of you that pay for the steep medical bills incurred in the treatment of smoking-related illnesses. That’s enough to piss me off right there.

Well, I for one am in favor of making CSUSB a smoke-free campus. Why not? Let’s be the first university to officially recognize the scourge that smoking is and ban it from the academic environment. Let’s be on the cutting edge of evolution into the next millennium and set the standard for the rest of the world to follow.

If you want to promote smoking, addiction, lung cancer, cardiovascular disease, air pollution, littering, and everything else that tobacco stands for, be a walking billboard somewhere else. Go parade around grade schools like so many teachers do, promoting tobacco to our youth. Someone should start up a petition to make CSUSB a smoke-free campus. I’d sign it.

Smoke ‘em if you got ‘em that’s what I say. It’s certainly an unpopular thing to say now days, but I really don’t care. There’s so much whining about the smokers, the smokers.

Sure there are health risks involved, but there’s a health risk involved in just being alive these days. So when people talk about second hand smoke, polluting the environment, it’s all just noise in my ears—blah, blah, blah!

I think the real reason everyone is so fired up (no pun intended) has to do with money and fashionability and that’s it.

It’s not fashionable to smoke anymore. It’s no longer a socially acceptable vice-like drinking alcohol, which can lead to LIVER DISEASE.

And then there’s all that money the taxpayers have to spend on cardiovascular disease because of all those horrible smokers. What about all the money taxpayers spend on cardiovascular disease because people are FAT and have arteries clogged by a lifetime of gobbling down SATURATED FATS in french fries, fish and chips, fried zucchini, fried shrimp, onion rings and hamburgers? What about all the people with skin cancer because of VANITY and the pursuit of the perfect tan?

Why doesn’t the government tax the crap out of fast food and sun tan oil? Why isn’t there a lobby trying to ban those vices?

As for the people who cry second hand smoke, all I have to say is INDUSTRIAL AIR POLLUTION. Why are people picking on smokers when industrial corporations are turning the planet into an uninhabitable blob of dirt? If smokers puffed away for the next million years, we couldn’t do one quarter the damage!

So quit bashing the smokers all you hypocrites! If you aren’t going to dish out the condemnation across the board, just sit down and shut up.

Dear Editor:

In response to last week’s article by Assemblyman Bill Leonard, I honestly can’t decide which is more absurd: the notion that 500 red-legged frogs are in danger because of toxic drums in close proximity or the fact that a political system set in motion 150 years ago cannot decide the right course of action.

Here is the way that I see it. An estimated 500 frogs may die if heavy equipment and manpower is used to remove the toxic drums. But, left alone long enough there could be thousands more frogs to die when, and I do mean when, the toxins seep out of those drums, leach into the ground and then percolate up into those pristine pools of water where the frogs thrive. Let’s not forget the other creatures drinking that lush water.

Why don’t we simply get two haz-mat suited environmentalists, give them each a plastic bucket, rubber gloves, little nets, and river socks and let them carefully scoop up as many frogs as they can and gingerly tip-toe back to the creek. In all this safety regalia they should be able to scare the deer, pigs, snakes and birds away for a few weeks. Then, those hysterical environmentalists can go straight to Riverside Community Hospital, where they can be housed down in the parking lot for all of the inland empire to see.

With all the animals physically moved or frightened away, the heavy bull dozers can lumber into the Casmalia Resource’s dumpster, and carry the toxic drums to where ever they take toxic drums. Herein lies the real problem with this public policy. It shouldn’t be a mystery where toxic waste is disposed. Now, can someone explain why Casmalia Resources was situated next to the largest source of water in the area in the first place?

Invasion of the Kickboxers

By Jim N Karitsiotis
Special to the Chronicle

It seems that everywhere you look, someone is getting hurt nowadays. I remember hearing last quarter that a woman was attacked in the restroom of the Visual Arts Building. If you aren’t safe on campus, where can you be safe? The answer to that question is nowhere. Luckily, Cal State has a self-defense class to teach you how to handle a situation if it arises.

The self-defense class teaches various techniques from Kickboxing, Muay Thai (Thai Boxing), Jujitsu, Boxing, Karate, and Jeet Kune Do. The purpose of the class is to simply provide self-defense techniques to the student population at CSUSB. The class is taught by Jim VanOver, who has done a lifelong study of martial arts and various styles of combat. Instructor VanOver has an 8th Degree Black Belt in Shorei-Ryu and was the United States Muay Thai Light-Heavyweight Champion under the tutelage of the famous world champion Thai Boxer Master Chai. Instructor VanOver has been training fighters and teaching self-defense since 1981. Although listed as “Karate” in the class schedule, the course is only a karate class in that it teaches self-defense. Other than that, the class is far from your typical Karate class. There are no uniforms, no bowing, no people running around trying to mimic monkeys. In this class, you learn what works as Instructor VanOver states, “If it works, use it.” Instructor VanOver also adds that “statistics show that if you fight back, you stand a greater chance of survival.”

When Instructor VanOver first took over a year ago, the class was not taken very seriously as some people thought it was a chance to catch up on social events. Instructor VanOver quickly “cleaned house” and in two quarters the class went from two sections per week to four full sections per week, gaining popularity primarily by word of mouth. However, the class is still not publicized enough as most students don’t know that we have a self-defense class at CSUSB. Those that do know we have a "Karate" class may be turned off by the mental images and stereotypes that term suggests. Instructor VanOver wants to dispel the myths that surround martial arts and fighting. Most people that learn self-defense are not hyper-aggressive and overbearing individuals; rather, they are mild-mannered and confident in the fact that if a situation should happen to arise, they could handle it.

Pulling the best from many arts, the class is divided into two sections, a beginner side and an advanced side. You are equally suitable for the course if you have studied martial arts your entire life, or you have never studied at all as the students are placed according to desire and ability. If you have never studied before, the class will teach you the basic tools of survival for the real world; on the other hand, if you have studied martial arts and/or fighting and wanted to continue your training, the advanced side is just for you.

Instructor VanOver often times takes his fighters to “smokers,” which are sanctioned amateur bouts for first-time fighters. The purpose of the smoker is to give inexperienced fighters a chance to see if they want to fight for competition. Opponents are randomly selected at these events, and a short 3-round bout ensues. After participating in a smoker, if you decide that fighting is what you want to do, then Instructor VanOver will help take you to the next level. If you want to be world champion, he will help you attain your goals, but you have to want it “like you’re underwater and you need air.”

Instructor VanOver has trained black belts and many other fighters that have gone on to win North American championships and other title belts. Someone who hopes to follow in their footsteps is Angela Rivera, a 19 year old fighter from Victorville, California. She currently fights in the 117lb. weight class and has been training for 1 1/2 years under Instructor VanOver’s watchful eye. Angela got into fighting because she wanted to be able to defend herself without actually hurting somebody permanently through an armed defense (guns, knives). She trains 7 days a week, focusing on her goal of being a World Champion Thai Boxer by the age of 25. Prior to taking the course, Angela had no previous combative experience, yet in just 1 1/2 years she has become Instructor VanOver’s “best fighter.” Highly touted as having “enormous potential,” Instructor VanOver stated that one time Angela knocked an opponent’s mouthpiece out of her mouth twice in the same fight (a feat that requires an enormous amount of power). Angela won her most recent bout in Bakersfield two weekends ago and is fighting in Vallecio on March 20. After that, she plans on fighting as often as possible until she can turn pro and pursue her dream. When asked what Instructor VanOver means to her, Angela replied, “Jim (Instructor VanOver) is the greatest teacher you could ever want, and I’d never trade him for somebody else... he’ll take you as far as you want to go.”

Whether you want to learn a few self-defense techniques or become world champion, the self-defense class is a nice springboard to get you started. Personally, I would like to see the class grow to the point where kickboxing would have a place in the intramural athletics program, or possibly even inter-school tournaments.

Winner of 5 Grammy awards, The Miseducation of Lauryn Hill doesn’t need to be hyped. With its homage to past R&B greats like Marvin Gaye and Stevie Wonder, Hill’s record plays to the heart. Hill’s lyrics are provocative (“The Final Hour”), heartbreaking (“Ex-Factor”), and biographical (“Every Ghetto, Every City”). Something new shines with each listen to this album. Hill not only raises the bar as to what constitutes hip-hop music, but what constitutes popular music. It’s been awhile since a major artist has released a record that is not only challenging musically, but intellectually.

In R.E.M.’s first record without drummer Bill Berry they have attempted to break new musical ground. Peter Buck’s guitars cut in-and-out like sound effects, Mike Mills spends more time at the keyboards than the bass, and on one track (“At My Most Beautiful”) the band breaks out into harmony ala Brian Wilson. With the break from contemporary rock tradition, what remains the same are Michael Stipe’s enigmatic lyrics, which sound haunting, perverse, and romantic simultaneously. UP may not be the best album of the band’s career, but it is certainly one of the most interesting.

With Jars of Clay breaking new ground for contemporary Christian music on modern rock radio, there are some bands that have still gone unnoticed. Audio Adrenaline, a hard rock band from Tennessee, has been a staple of Christian rock radio for the past few years. Their album, Some Kind of Zombie is a rock/pop sensation that unrelentingly drives home their message of faith, love, and Jesus Christ. Their unconventional lyrics range from anecdotal (“Chevette”) to lacerating (“Blitz”), and will ignite your thinking whether you agree with them or not.

Mulch 13 Days

By Jim N Karitsiotis

Special to the Chronicle

Mulch is a punk band that incorporates some of the typical grunge elements into their sound, much like Blink 182 and Offspring. Their CD on BBR Records, titled "13 Days," is a valiant independent release. The musicianship on the album is very good, as each of Mulch’s members obviously know how to play their instruments. The grungy guitars hammer away at power chords all day as the leads that blanket them are interesting, yet not overly complicated.

Although there are no blazingly fast guitar solos on this album, the lead-work is appropriate as it fits the song, not the guitarist’s ego. One negative aspect of the guitars is that they often times sound as if they were lost in the mix. Sometimes they blend in too well with the background music, forcing the guitars to drown in the chaos, which makes the crunch disappear and the album sound dated. The bass playing is solid yet minimalist as the drumming throughout the album constantly plays the same 4-4, straight-ahead beat.

Unlike many punk bands, the singer of Mulch, Brad Smith, actually sings. The vocals sound reminiscent of 7 Mary 3 at times, with a hint of Dexter from Offspring; however, the songs lack a vocal hook. For a song to be great it needs to have a vocal hook, a melody that reels the listener in. On this album there are almost no vocal hooks. The music is great and the songwriting is strong, but the most important part of any song is the vocals.

On the other hand, the lyrics on this album are quite interesting and unusual, a pleasant surprise from the typical punk lyrics. The strongest part of Mulch’s package is the changes that they incorporate into their songs. Almost every song features a groove or dropout that slices right into the up tempo mix. You’ll be listening to a really fast song and all of the sudden it turns into a ballad. Mulch incorporates these changes effectively and with ease, but so much that it becomes predictable. The good songs on the album are tracks 1, 2, 4, 8, and 9. The OK songs are tracks 3, 5, 6, 7, and 10. You won’t be missing out on much if you avoid the other songs. On a sidenote, the title track of the album, “13 Days,” is almost a country tune with slide guitars. Considering that the rest of the album is punk, it probably should have been left off the CD. Also, on the side of the CD it reads "13 Days;" yet on the cover it reads "Thirteen Dayz." So, which one is it? I give this CD a 2 out of 5 rating.
How much do you really know about the Harlem Globetrotters? Well if you're anything like me, you may not have known much, until the game on Mar. 3. That's when the Globetrotters performed live at Coussoulis Arena. Everyone was there from our ASI vice president Mary Ellen Abilez to our neighboring newspaper the Sun. The stadium was filled with both young and old who wanted to get a glimpse of the famous basketball team.

Before the game began I caught a glimpse of one of my favorite globetrotters, Curley Johnson a.k.a. Boo. In case you went to the game and forgot who he is, he's the shortest one on the team with a lot of energy and a great personality. Johnson is a guard on the team and he is one of the funniest of the globetrotters. I had the privilege along with some of the other lucky guests to sit and listen to Johnson talk before the game about some very interesting facts about the globetrotters. First of all did you know that the Harlem Globetrotters are not even from Harlem at all but are in fact from Chicago Illinois? This is where Abe Saperstein, who had an idea to bring a young African-American group of men together to play basketball originally brought the group together. His idea turned into gold because on January 27, 1927 the Harlem Globetrotters played their first game. This game was played in Hinckley Illinois in front of an audience of 300 people and made a $75 profit. This was known as the beginning of an "odyssey."

The globetrotters started off with their famous fancy footwork and playing horsy trying to get the basketball in the net. Their opponents, the New York Nationals, were doing the same thing. Throughout the game the Globetrotters had the audience in stitches. In particular, one of the Globetrotters was trying to throw the ball to the referee. Every time the referee ran to catch a ball then the player threw another ball out. All this while the referee is still trying to throw the first ball. Another fun moment was when two of my favorite Globetrotters Curly Johnson and "Showbiz" himself, Matthew Jackson, were throwing water out at the audience. It all started because Curley was trying to drink water right beside the audience. Of course Showbiz tripped and the water splashed all over. Then they would walk toward another section of the audience and a pitcher of water would land in that section of the audience. A real treat came with the twins. If their names sound familiar it's because they were entertainers on the famous Saturday night show "A Night at the Apollo." They were 8mm, is the type of movie that makes you want to go home and immediately take a shower. As in Paul Schader's 1979 chilly drama Hardcore, 8mm involves the trailing of an innocent man who gets involved in the disgustingly corroded world of pornography. In both, the hero was looking for a young girl.

In 8mm, Nicholas Cage portrays Tom Wells, a surveillance specialist tracking down the stars of a snuff film for a rich old client. The sweet old lady has found a disturbing reel of celluloid in her late husband's safe and simply has to know if the snuff film is real or not.

After accepting the well-paying job, Wells goes from searching police files to purchasing porn magazines to exploring the sleazy porn underground, where anything is available for a price. Along the way, he picks up a young guide, an adult bookstore clerk Max California (Joaquin Phoenix) who knows the scene.

Soon we, along with Wells, are being subjected to numerous scenes of disturbing sexual violation.

The performances are not bad. Cage has a grasp on the shaken, disgusted, and in love looks. His wife, Catherine Keener knows how to project being upset, scared and long suffering. The bad guys are slightly over the top, almost to the point of comic relief, but not quite. Phoenix gives a good performance, as his character is the most versatile. Aside from Phoenix, the actors are not enough to warrant watching this movie; I would consider this one of those ones you just never get around to seeing.
The Truth About Tooth Whitening

By Cheri Dixon
Design Editor

But, what about the toothpastes on the market that promise to give you those brilliantly white teeth. Do they deliver? The answer is "no" according to many cosmetic dentists across the country.

"Only a dentist can get your teeth their whitest," said Dr. Shirley Mathew of Carrollton, Texas.

There are several good reasons for having your teeth whitened under the care of a dentist. Teeth whitening is actually a bleaching process that lightens discoloration of stains caused by coffee, tea, tobacco, and cola as well as aging and trauma.

The quick-fix whitening toothpastes may only slightly reduce stains through use of a harsh abrasive.

The dentist-supervised whitening product contains hydrogen peroxide or carbamide peroxide. For those over-the-counter whitening toothpastes that do include a bleaching agent, there are two problems. First of all, the bleaching agent in the whitening toothpaste is in contact with more than just your teeth. It's also touching your gums, tongue, and other soft tissue in your mouth. Under dental supervision, after the whitening gel is placed on your teeth, specially fitted trays go over your teeth to protect the rest of your mouth from contact with the bleaching agent.

According to the American Academy of Cosmetic Dentistry, although most folks agree that a smile is a social asset, "only 50% of Americans are satisfied with their smiles." This may explain why there have been "60 million cosmetic dental procedures performed in this country," estimated the American Dental Association in 1990.

Whitening is one of the primary cosmetic procedures that people want done. The cost to have your teeth cosmetically whitened may range from $200 to $350. Not everyone's teeth will whiten the same. Yellowish-hued teeth will probably bleach well, brownish-colored teeth will bleach less well and grayish-hued teeth may not bleach well at all," said Dr. Kenneth Burrell of the American Dental Association.

Only a consultation with your dentist will let you know whether you should have this process done.

It's The Most Wonderful Time of the Year!!

By Dan A. Farmer and Michael Bernardi
Managing Editor and Staff Writer

I love the NCAA tournament! This is the time of year when you call all your friends that you haven’t spoke with since football season and argue over who’s going to win it all.

Look closely, and you will see quite a few interesting matchups that you can debate on for hours. Be sure to get enough sleep and get your bracket picks in before Thursday the 11th. Then sit back and watch the fun begin!

EAST

This should be a foregone conclusion for everyone out there filling out your brackets for the office pool. Duke will be penciled in to represent the East in St. Petersburg. But hey, this is March madness, and anything can happen. That is anything but someone other than Duke making it to the Final Four in the East bracket.

The number two seed is Miami. No, not the Redskins out of Miami, Florida: the Hurricanes of Miami, Ohio: the Hurricanes of Miami, Florida. For the first time since 1965, Miami has posted a 20-win season and they are heading into the tournament with a lot of momentum.

Miami has a lot going for them and should have no problem getting by the first two rounds. They finished 15-3 in the Big East, which ain't too bad. But, they might run into some trouble with the pesky Bearcats in the Regionals.

Cincinnati finished the regular season 25-5 and enters the big dance for the eighth straight season and despite the NCAA sanctions earlier this year; the Bearcats look focused and ready for anyone. They are the only team to hand the Blue Devils a loss this year, beating them 77-75.

Their biggest obstacle before meeting up with Duke will be the Hurricanes. The Canes are notorious for poor ball control, averaging 19.1 turnovers a game, and that should be the deciding factor for Huggins' defensive minded club.

There shouldn’t be a whole lot of upsets in this bracket. The top talents should run the table. Be sure to tune in and see Kent’s first visit to the big dance and give John Chaney fits. Tennessee and Wisconsin aren’t legitimate factors, and neither should make it past the Sweet 16.

If you have to have a dark horse, look for the College of Charleston. They have seven seniors on the squad and have the tournament experience to shake things up. I would make two brackets for the pool, one of them with Charleston beating Duke. Besides, who else would have the Blue Devils losing in the second round?

- see SOUTH continued next page -

The South Conference should be upset riddled and provide the "madness" we all come to expect as it looks to be pretty wide open. First round matchups to keep an eye on are number 5 UCLA and number 12 Detroit as well as number 6 Indiana and number 11 George Washington.

Possible upsets in the second round include number 8 Syracuse over number 1 Auburn, as the two teams match-up well against each other and number 5 UCLA over number 4 Ohio State.

Look for St. John's to advance from this conference to the final four from upset central, the South Conference. Other possible dark horses include Syracuse who can upset past Auban and possibly sneak their way into a final four appearance.

In the first round look for UConn, North Carolina, and Stanford to move on with little trouble from their western siblings. The most intriguing first round matchup comes with number 7 Minnesota taking on number 10 Gonzaga. Look for Gonzaga to upset Minnesota with their devastating long range shooting as they are amongst the best in the nation from behind the three-point arc.

Round two appears to live up to the excitement deserving the NCAA tourney, with possible matchups between number 4 Arkansas and number 5 Iowa, as well as number 6 Florida looking to upset number 3 North Carolina.

The South Conference would not come from the West Coast. Big East champion Connecticut picked up the number one spot while Stanford drew the number two seed. With perennial powerhouse North Carolina following at the number three spot, the West Conference boasts two of last years number one seeds, the West Regional final.

SOUTH

The South Conference seemed to be where all the most surprising teams in the nation were grouped together. Leading the pack was Auburn who made their last tournament appearance back in 1988. The Tigers pulled down conference even though they lost seven games leading up to the tournament. Number 2 Maryland lost to North Carolina, Number 3 St. John's was whipped by Connecticut and number 4 Ohio State was upset by Illinois.

Number 10 seed Creighton is the upset horse in the South that didn't lose their last game. Auburn however, has proven over the season that they are for real by beating ranked opponents numerous times on their way to a (27-3) record.

MIDWEST

This is by far the strongest bracket in the tourney. The top four seeds look like the final four: Michigan State, Utah, Kentucky, and Arizona.

How do you pick one of these teams to make it to the final four? Not to mention Kansas. Gee, didn't they win the whole dance a few years ago?

The close knit unity of "The Flintstones" from Flint, Michigan allowed the Spartans to win 29 games this season, and are the heavy favorite to come out of the Midwest.

Kentucky has had a little trouble closing out games recently, with late season losses to Arkansas and Tennessee.

Then you have Arizona and Kansas sneaking around and hoping to pull some big upsets over the big guns. Neither of these two teams is a fraction of what they used to be and pose no real threat but their name the way that Michigan State and Utah are playing.

Look for Utah to fall short again to Michigan State as they look to get their first NCAA title since Magic was in town.

Campus Organization Battles Hate

By Ofelia Morales
Special to the Chronicle

It is so hard to be young and gay. So many things are unsettled," said Martha P. Kazlo, the Gay, Lesbian, and Bisexual Student Union (GLBSU) advisor. That's why she and several faculty members, who are also advisors to the organization, are here to offer their support to CSUSB students.

As Dr. Kazlo said, it is difficult enough to be young, uncertain about your future, about your career, and about your financial stability. Gays and lesbians on campus share the uncertainty we all deal with in our lives as students and more of their own personal uncertainties. Not only are our gay and lesbian classmates concerned with getting a job in their field, but they are also concerned with being able to keep it once their sexual preference is known. They are concerned with their family life, because they worry about being loved and accepted after their family knows about their sexual preference.

These are the issues that the GLBSU are here to help out with, as well as many other issues, by offering emotional and moral support. The GLBSU also provides a secure environment in which students who need it can voice their concerns about themselves without fear.

The Gay, Lesbian, and Bisexual Student Union is also the oldest club on campus. The organization was initiated in the 1970s. Since then, faculty and students, regardless of sexual orientation, have been educated on the diversity that exists among us. Also, support for our gay and lesbian community has been available through this organization.

Although there are some members of the CSUSB student body who do not recognize the Gay, Lesbian, and Bisexual Student Union as an organization that benefits them, there are a great many others who have been touched in some way by the mere existence of it.

This organization aids the campus in cultural awareness. A lot of people do not seem to realize that their brother, sister, cousin, coworker, friend, neighbor, or anyone they know might be gay," stated Jason Colby, GLBSU president. "If one in ten people are gay or lesbian, then, statistically, this campus alone has 1,306 gay students."

According to Dr. Kazlo, the fact that this student organization exists gives gay and heterosexual students alike an opportunity to look more closely at themselves and think about who they are.

The existence of the Gay, Lesbian, and Bisexual Student Union helps many students start to see homosexuality as a variation in the sexuality spectrum and stop seeing it as a reason to hate.

Greeks Give $400 to Charity

The gentlemen of Delta Sigma Phi (AEp) and the ladies of Kappa Delta (KA) had their Broomball Social Sat. Feb. 27 at the Palm Desert Ice Rink. Before heading out to the ice rink, we met at Jersey's Pizza on Kendall for food and drink. It was a blast and everyone had fun. Delta Sigs and pledges from our UNLV chapter were also there to join the fun. Broomball is basically hockey played with brooms as the hockey sticks and a rubber ball for the puck.

The previous weekend of Feb. 21, Delta Sigma Phi participated in the Annual Ski-a-thon at Big Bear Mountain Ski Resort. We raised $400.00 for the United States Adaptive Research Center (USARC) that helps handicapped people learn to ski with specialized equipment. It was fun and we helped raise money for a great cause. What a deal.

Delta Sigma is currently planning events with the ladies of Alpha Phi and Alpha Delta Pi.

Sigma Phi Epsilon Upsilon Chapter at CSUSB announced the loss of a founding member. Brother Curtis L. Carlson, 84, died peacefully, with his family by his side, in Minneapolis on Friday, Feb. 19.

Carlson was involved with the Order of the Golden Heart, Sigma Phi Epsilon (SPE) Citation, SPE Foundation Trustee, and Chairman of SPEs seven million-dollar "Campaign for the Heart," from 1991-1993.

SPE Upsilon Chapter observed a moment of silence at their chapter meeting last Monday, to recognize his accomplishments. Brother Curtis parlayed a $50 loan into a $15 billion conglomerate, named The Carson Companies. Still private, the company's leadership passes on to his daughter, Marilyn Carlson Nelson. His other daughter Barbara is President of the Carlson Family Foundation.

Brother Carlson loved Sigma Phi Epsilon and believed in its undergraduate Brothers. To assist them in their personal development he gave his time, talents, and his personal resources. In 1991, he endowed the Carlson Leadership Academies, known in Sigma Phi Epsilon as the "Carlsons." The Carlson Leadership Academies conclude this weekend with more than 2,300 Brothers participating in the 1999 Carlson University simulation, 30 of which will be from Cal State's Upsilon Chapter which has been nominated for an award at the Carlson's.

The Coyote Chronicle

Aries: (3/21-4/19)

Having problems lately? The best way to end a struggle could be compromise or surrender. I know what you’re thinking… Surrender? Yeah right! Your ambitious nature may rebel at this thought, but letting go can be surprisingly easy. Sometimes it’s best to choke back your pride and use your head objectively. Whether it may be relationships, friendships, or matters concerning work, sit back and be honest. Experience the relief of a wise decision. Happiness comes by recognizing your full potential.

Taurus: (4/20-5/20)

If you’ve been feeling cocky lately, there may be a valid reason. An all-too-familiar set of priorities could force its way to the head of the line. This attitude could put a spin on your personal life as well, by making it have precedence over what others expect of you. You never want to intentionally hurt someone else’s feelings, but you also become tired of coating all your opinions in feelings, but you also become tired of coating all your opinions in feelings. If someone can’t accept your polite excuse, that’s just too bad.

Cancer: (6/21-7/20)

The longer you postpone an unwelcome issue, the bigger it could get. Honesty is the best bet, no matter how painful the investment. This not only applies with work, but also with your love life. For several weeks now, you’ve been balancing work, school, and your personal life. You have been doing a great job, but you may be more prone to stress as a result. Spend some time alone and relax, you might need it. By next week, this could all feel like a dream.

Leo: (7/21-8/20)

Feeling emotionally repressed? Talk or write to a trusted friend. There’s no point in pretending to be objective, but at least you can try to be fair. Relationships may seem tense this week, so be warned. Once you’ve expressed your pent up feelings, you’re ready to go out and have fun. It’s better to relieve your frustrations positively to a friend, rather than exploding in a public place where you might be unfairly judged. With all that is going on in your life, you do not need added stress.

Virgo: (8/21-9/20)

When you’re making a business deal, a handshake agreement may not be enough. Watch out for hidden clauses and unwritten expectations. Even the most meaningful words can be lost in a blast of static or some other meaningless distraction. Someone may be trying to take advantage of your generous nature. Romance may also be on shaky ground, so don’t rush into new relationships hastily. Focusing on school and work might prove more profitable in the end.

Libra: (9/21-10/20)

This is the week to shine! Spend this gregarious time with family and friends. If you are not in a situation where three’s a crowd, then feel free to invite a few guests. The more the merrier! You may also feel better after some shopping, although it may not be the wisest choice. Be impulsive for a change, you only live once. Dress to match your mood, instead of coordinating your wardrobe. You will glow among your friends.

Scorpio: (10/21-11/21)

As a relative outsider, you can’t help noticing someone else’s controlling hand. You may not want to get involved in a situation, but you may not have a choice. There are quite a few uncertainties this week, so tread cautiously on unknown ground. This includes your personal life. Relationships among family members may be strained, but it will work itself out. Time might be your best friend.

Sagittarius: (11/22-12/20)

Stuck in a rut? Your reputation lets you find all the help you could possibly need. You’ve done enough for others that everyone is eager to return the favor. Gratefully share the rewards of your accomplishments. This could be beneficial since this week may prove more hectic than usual. With finals coming up and spring break to prepare for, your organizer will be booked! Take advantage of this luck and have fun to the fullest!

Capricorn: (12/21-1/19)

So much to do in little time! With all the little things going on this week, distractions may overwhelm your sense of resolve. You may be faced with unhappy consequences if you fail to perform, but don’t fret, situations will get better. Stay on track with your professional life, and things should prosper. Romance may be grim, but you’ll be collecting new friends. They will keep you entertained without all the emotional baggage.

Aquarius: (1/20-2/19)

Stress!!! Trial and error could be your best friends. Work and school might overwhelm your sense of being, but a friend will bail you out of your dilemma. No matter how much control you may think you have, you don’t! Tone down your workload and relax. You won’t be able to study for finals with scattered nerves. Love is looking up, but your partner is still sending you mixed signals. Be cautious and avoid misunderstandings.

Pisces: (2/21-3/20)

You’re far from the right answer, but you still have time to work your way toward it. The most obvious solution may not be the correct one this time. Consider all options before making a concrete decision. This attitude also reflects upon your love life. As emotional and creative as you are, there is a line between imagination and reality. Keep your feet grounded and you’ll eventually gain a broader perception on life.
