The three fish that swim around the main fish bowl in Rev. Gil Bliss's office have helped him deal with the major stressor in his life: the powerful pressure caused by the death of his beloved wife. fish. The same can't be said for the congregation of Life Church of God, Christ.

For 20 years since Gilson founded the church with three mem bers, the congregation has grown to 4,000 - with enough money to buy several buildings, start building another church, begin a school, start a transitional living center for troubled youth and host a multi-denominational conference that attracts more than 20,000 people from across the country.

But then a few years ago, called Koinonia (the Greek word meaning fellowship), something happened in the congregation; it will be held Aug. 15 at the Riverside Convention Center.

This Koinonia Conference was introduced to provide a gathering for like-minded people from all over the world, from different races, cultures, and backgrounds to come together in unity in an atmosphere of praise and fellowship. A high level of participation is expected from the local churches, both black and white, and this year the Distance Learning Center is offering the event via satellite to other areas of the country.

The event, Disparities in Healthcare: An event for UC Riverside is seen as a catalyst for driving disparities in health for all Americans.

The real impact of health disparities nationally is 589,000 more African-Americans dead between 1995 and 2000 than there would have been had health care been equal. According to Dr. Robin Fox, a health specialist with the California Office of Statewide Health Planning and Development, the data shows that on all but a few health measures, African-Americans are at disadvantage. In Riverside, even more so.

Dr. Carol M. Pollack, a professor of public health and of the public and private health sector that is responsible for California's broken health care system.

"The research-based position planed for UC Riverside, was one catalyst for reversing the stark disparities in health for all Californians," said Carroll. The event, Disparities in Healthcare: An event for UC Riverside is seen as a catalyst for driving disparities in health for all Americans.

 sprawled a serious and dangerous shortage of healthcare workers. This creates a tremendous opportunity for people of color in non-white fields that provide great social-justice jobs. So why are we still in a four-year-old legal battle with the federal government about what qualifies as a health-care worker? Perhaps we should be looking at other sources of education in the community. If we don't have the \( \text{people in the} \) right places, we can't get the support of the health-care workers. And when you can't get the support of the health-care workers, there are many are. Few people are voting, are using their voices. California

Clarence Thomas: a Lost Cause - Part I

Clarence Thomas is such a lost cause that even Thomas and Chief Justice John G. Roberts, Jr., pretend to be acting in the true tradition of the Civil Rights Movement. The idea that we no longer have to take affirmative measures to preserve and protect the law guaranteed by the Constitution is not new; it is often discussed in the context of school systems that have been deemed unconstitutional, as in the case of Brown v. Board of Education. The practical implication of Thomas's ruling is that states and local school authorities have the discretion to determine whether to segregate students based on race. This is a radical departure from the longstanding principle of "one person, one vote," which was established by the Supreme Court in Brown v. Board of Education. Gifted ‘Good Times’ Star-Stanis Now Author

By Earl Heath
Staff Writer

It’s been some time now since many of us tuned in to the seventies sitcom “Good Times”. Bern Nadette Stanis, known as Thelma on the hit show, gave us many laughs. She portrayed a positive image of a young Black woman on television.

Stanis personified Black beauty of the seventies. She was widely praised for helping overcome African-American stereotypes in America.

The Black Voice News joined the talented star, who has authored the book “Situation 101”, at the Storyteller Bookstore located at the Foxwoods Resort Casino in Connecticut.

She spoke of her “Good Times” cast member, John Amos. “He was great,” said Stanis. “He taught us a lot.”

On the legendary Esther Rolle - “She was wonderful. She was a mother figure in real life. Everyone on the show loved her.”

Ralph Carter (Michael) was nicknamed the “militant midget” on the show. “He grew up similarly to his character. He spent over 10 years living in Africa.”

Stanis, who attended the Julliard School in New York, used her talent to create the book which addresses a variety of relationship concerns felt by today’s women. Before you go complaining of one sidedness I will tell you, this is more than a book just for women. While sharing a few moments with this gifted woman at a book signing, I personally witnessed male after male that came to purchase the book seeking her autograph.

“When I wrote it I thought that women would just be the ones to buy the book,” said Stanis. “I found that men buy it, love it and email me and tell me how they enjoyed it.”

A big topic that people discuss is abuse and not always physical and not always by men. Both sexes have a tendency to go back to the person that dishes out the abuse.

“You’re like addicted to a person when there’s no good for you. I’ve found many people have a self-esteem issue. A lot of times it’s about a person being toxic for you, people keep going back to that bad person.”

The book does contain humor. You will find a situation related to you or a friend.

Stanis has fans from her television life as well as the book. “I specifically came for the signing,” said Scott Catton of Boston. “It was probably my favorite sitcom from the 70’s era. It was a comedy that incorporated drama. It (Good Times) crossed cultural lines and just wasn’t a Black situation comedy. It’s a rare big occasion.”

Stanis travels around the country with her beautiful mother, Eula. The Julliard grad makes about seventy speaking engagements a year.

For more updates on Stanis, who now makes her home in Southern California, go to www.thelmaofgoodtimes.com.

Gibson decided against Church members and employees of Life Church say many escaped serious violence and Black Panthers and other Black while the structure was there times for drug overdoses and he had to return to his neighborhood, even touching his own family when his father was injured in a shooting. Her he was ready to follow Jesus. His mother saw the change immediately after that. After, Gibson enrolled in college and began his spiritual awakening with God his inspiration. He had heard share his message, "God is real," he was living proof. His devotion to God and the desire to help others find the light eventually led him to a reality. Those continuous, not only with his church and the vast amount of faith-based programs, but with his outreach to the community, including a program for young men who most certainly could end up like him in his youth. REAL LIFE: The church's Real Life residential program is designed for males 13-18 years who have been a part of juvenile hall. In the two years since its inception, at least seven teens have gone through the program, though not all are successful. "Some just can't deal with the system," said Alex Crispi, principal of the K-6th church operates, "some come in and don't give it a chance." The program is not as rigid as juvenile hall, but there are rules the teens must follow. Their stay begins with a 30-day observation period where they have no visitors, Guidry said. They earn levels of privileges based on their behavior. They have a family room, complete with a Plasma TV and many more luxuries than they would not have in Juvenile Hall. "We try to provide as normal as possible a family setting," Guidry said.

LIFESTYLES

Pastor Ron Gibson and First Lady Latelita Gibson review final details of the Realism and the new construction.

There are counseling sessions, free times and a faith-based curriculum, however the teens are not forced to attend Life Church, but they are invited, he said. Guidry estimates that four teens have successfully gone through the four-month program. He recalls one particular troubled youth who was asked, "where do you think you will be in five years?" His reply, "I'll either be dead or in prison." That's where reality he keeps his new leaders searching for youth to fill the program's beds, hoping to save even one. At times the choice is to attend Real Life or remain toJuvenile Hall. The church works with the Riverside County Probation Department to identify youth who may benefit from the program. A similar program is being considered for at-risk girls. Guidry said.

THE FUTURE

Though many initiatives are in the works at Life Church the biggest undertaking is construction of a new church, equipped to handle the church's massive growth, four Sunday services, missionary initiatives and the televising of the worship service. The new church will be across the street from the current facility and is part of a major development of 1,200 homes, a Home Dept and several other retail developments. The church also will feature a 24-hour prayer tower where all are welcome to come pray at any hour. Gibson estimates move-in will be in 2010. For now, Gibson focuses on his current ministry and studying the word of God. His office, an eclectic featuring a wall of books that include works on Islam, Judaism, Hinduism, Catholicism, and Buddhism, because Gibson said he believes a pastor should have an understanding of all faiths. Besides the many faith-based books, there are also books on physical geography, the art of conversation and an introduction to mathematical analysis. And then there are the three fish that also share his office, the school also is expected to grow.

Helping Small Businesses and Organizations Bridge the Digital Divide

The Art of the Start: Getting Back to Basics

When I get deep into the day of my business operations, it often becomes easy to lose focus of the big picture. I had a great conversation with a seasoned veteran of the dot com era and he shared with me the basic concept of Chaos Theory.

The basic idea is that if you extract yourself away from the details, you begin to see patterns not previously apparent. This concept provided me to rethink a book that helped the basic elements of starting anything: The Art of the Start by Guy Kawasaki. Here, I will revisit the essentials.

1. Make Money

In our case, we saw meaning when the creator of ThemBid.com, Isaac Solomon, pondered the question of finding someone to repair a leaking faucet. He asked, "Wouldn't it be cool if I could just go online and post my request and have someone fix it?" Then he extracted away from the details to see the basic concept of Chaotic Theory.

From this, our team saw the vision of creating a marketplace in situations where consumers could find the best value without wasting valuable time searching, while simultaneously allowing businesses to reach large numbers of consumers in easy means of connecting to their costumers. Once the need for higher advertising expenditure became evident, something we must pursue.

2. Make Money

Instead of using a drawn out transaction process that nobody would read, a small noticeable investment in needed to walk to keep every one in the organization focused on the main goal. In our case, we chose: "Stop thinking, Make Them Bid." Admittedly, this is actually too long... but it is a start.

3. Get Money

It's easy to get stuck in the specification phase. You can spend months, if not years defining all the details. Instead, adopt the Zen mantra of "release it, let it go" and move forward with the project. Sometimes, that investigation reveals that it may be time to start something else.

4. Define Your Business Model

We now accept ATM

5. Weave a MAT (Milestones, Measurements and Timelines)

We all know the importance of goal setting. A goal is a vision of where you want to get to. In our case, we saw meaning when the creator of ThemBid.com, Isaac Solomon, pondered the question of finding someone to repair a leaking faucet. He asked, "Wouldn't it be cool if I could just go online and post my request and have someone fix it?" Then he extracted away from the details to see the basic concept of Chaotic Theory.

From this, our team saw the vision of creating a marketplace in situations where consumers could find the best value without wasting valuable time searching, while simultaneously allowing businesses to reach large numbers of consumers in easy means of connecting to their costumers. Once the need for higher advertising expenditure became evident, something we must pursue.
