The Office of Technology, Transfer and Commercialization (OTTC) at CSUSB recently approved several grants totaling $445,890. The grants will fund seven companies throughout the United States working on biometrics and robotics.

The companies will work to convert and improve existing military technology to that which can be used by the public.

OTTC is interested in a very specific area of technology, everything from portable traps to robotic rocket launchers with biomedical research payoffs.

"We have decided to be more focused now, and this year we are looking at only two categories of technology: robotics and biometrics," Greg Zerovnik, Communications Manager for OTTC said.

Biometric technologies are enhancing security systems by increasing the accuracy of personal identification.

The robotics area focused on technologies that can be integrated with existing military robots now in use in Iraq and Afghanistan.

Cornell University in Ithaca, New York, was awarded $75,000 grant for the use of prototype testing and evaluation development.

CornerTurn will also receive up to $22,000 for a student study of RODTOPS, which are sensors that maintain navigational information over previously cleared spaces such as buildings or caves.

GEM, a company in Redlands, has been awarded a marketing and feasibility study for its Power Universal Battery Charger, an intelligent battery charging system that automatically balances the size and type of battery to be charged and completely recharges it.

Bionics Americas of Las Vegas will receive $20,000 for a marketing study to test and evaluate a blind-aid warning automation system. The work will be conducted with Univesity of Virginia.

Embedded Computer Products of Wildomar, California, was awarded $10,000 for its plan to continue on Pg. 2

The California State University Mentor Foundation announced $375,000 in funding for endowed scholarships to be available to students in the 2007-2008 academic year. The funding is available to students who will be attending any of the 23 CSU universities campuses throughout California. The funding for those endowed scholarships comes from donations by individuals and organizations to the CSU Foundation and has helped thousands of students at CSU over the years, CSU's assistant vice chancellor of advancement services Lori Retffann said.

"We are currently reviewing funding applications for the 2007-2008 academic year, that are available on campus and for those through the Chancellor's office," CSUSB Scholarship Coordinator and Financial Aid Advisor Roberta Albert said. Students can apply online if they go to our website (http://financialaid.csusb.edu) and click on the 2007-2008 CSUSB Scholarship Application tab.8

The applications has thirty-six questions and once the student submits the application they must follow up by providing the financial aid office with an alternate source of aid. Continued on Pg. 2

Financial aid deadline

Over $120 million in financial aid and scholarships will be dispersed to CSUSB undergraduates who apply before the March 1 priority deadline for the 2007-2008 academic year, according to the chancellor of financial aid and services at CSUSB.

"Applications for Federal Student Aid (FAFSA) must be submitted by the priority deadline before the priority deadline to receive maximum consideration for all available aid," President Steve Agee said.

"Application deadlines for the CSU system are already up and the priority deadline for Federal Student Aid is March 1st," said Paul Browning, media relations specialist for the Chancellor's Office.

CSUSB students can fill out their FAFSA forms online at www.fafsa.ed.gov. CSUSB students can also fill out their FAFSA forms by mail. To complete their FAFSA forms students must apply for Federal Student Aid by the March 1 priority deadline.

It is also important for students to not forget about scholarships as well," said Rosanne Browning, director of financial aids and services at CSUSB. "Combined California State University scholarships total about $120 million for the 2005-2006 academic year.

Rice said she is expecting the number to increase this year due to the new Academic Competitiveness Grant (ACG) and the Federal Grant.

There are four key steps that CSUSB students need to complete to see if they are eligible to receive financial aid applications. The descriptions of the four steps and other applications are available on CSU Mentor's.

The first two steps are estimating financial aid eligibility and filing a FAFSA form with the federal government.

Third, after filing the FAFSA, students should research the types of federal aid that are available while waiting for their Student Aid Reports (SAR) the federal government sends to students filing their applications.

After students receive their SAR's, they should check for awards and make corrections to their FAFSA online.

The last task is to wait for a response from the Financial Aid Office.

Vision for gifts and estate

Wendy Diaz

Chuck Pringle has just been appointed to run CSUSB Gift and Estate Planning Program. The gift and estate planning program is an element of fund raising at CSUSB that is part of a full-fledge fund raising program. Planned giving is typically referred to as "bequest giving" because it involves people giving away assets they already own, even if they haven't specifically set aside the money specifically for that purpose. Gifts and estate planning is an "offering" referred to as "planned giving," and Estate Planning Program is an "element" of fund raising at CSUSB that is part of a full-fledge fund raising program.

The Gift and Estate Planning Program comprises people in their 60s, 70s, or 80s, who are planning to have something in their will to the university. By creating a tax deductible vehicle, donors may earn some income because of assets they donate. These assets include commodities such as homes, cash, or stock to help programs for further research with faculty or develop scholarships for students. It is a program that will help the university build its endowment over time. CSUSB's endowment is at $970,000, Pringle said. Pringle has been with CSUSB for 20 years and has experience in marketing, public relations and fundraising.

According to Pringle, "We haven't necessarily put a full time focus on it, so now there's a full time person over seeing this program, building and developing it.

"This is a sort of a natural progression from that job because I had not been many people who seem involved with the university and its first presidency with John Paul, I had conversations with people who had found success with the university and who might want to leave a deferred gift at some point in the future.

Pringle said: "The universe has been building its fundraising operation since 2002."

Greek advisor Natalie Moreno said, "Many of these organizations are focused on personal growth, academic success, and community service. It's a great opportunity to grow as an individual and contribute to your community." Joining a Greek organization is a significant decision that should be carefully considered.

Joining a Greek organization involves visiting open houses, attending recruitment events, and making a final decision during Rush Week. This process can be daunting, but it's an exciting opportunity to meet new people and enrich your college experience.

The "Forgotten Masters: Revived Turbulence and Transgamy" exhibit at CSUSB's Robert V. Fuller Museum features two very different artists and exhibits a wide range of amazing works.

The artists are Stanislav Szukalski and Teng Hsik Chiu. Szukalski is a favorite of several celebrities including Leonardo DiCaprio and Danny Carey. Carey, the drummer of popular rock band Tool, provided 1987's "Surf Permut", from his own collection for this exhibit.

Szukalski, representing the turbulent part of the exhibit, specializes in sculptures. The main timeframe of his work was 1911-1955.

The exhibit at the museum contains 16 of Szukalski's pieces as well as a mix of nine paintings and drawings.

Teng Hsik Chiu, representing the tranquil part of the exhibit, was a painter who focused on landscapes. The main timeframe of his work was 1916-1935.

The exhibit includes a mixed selection of Chiu's oil and watercolor paintings. Most of the works are done in soft pastel colors.

Eve Kanis, director of the museum, has researched Szukalski for quite a while and has worked as a museum in the artists' nativeland.

She expressed her excitement over this unique opportunity to bring the work of such talented, yet forgotten, artists back to the attention of the public.

Krich explained that the works are on loan from private collections.

The works of Chiu are largely from Seattle, the Bay area and Orange County. Szukalski's works are mostly from Fillmore, CA.

The artist had lived in California for a time, and one painting reading is "Krich.'s personal favorites from the artists are Chiu's 1979 painting of "New York, Central Park", one of the pieces that showcased his traditional Chinese influences.

The winner of this contest will be Justin Timberlake's performance with the "My Grammy Moment" mobile phone search winner.

Danny Carey of the rock band Tool, provided Szukalski's "Surf Permut" for the exhibit.

It was difficult for her to choose a favorite of Szukalski's. Krich decided on "Surf Permut," as her favorite.

"It's really telling and really defines him as an artist and a person," said Krich.

It's a mystery as to why Szukalski's work is ignored. His sometimes bizarre sculptures are very detailed and abstract.

CSUSB student Brenda Hernandez's favorite piece was Szukalski's bronze sculpture from 1912, titled, "Star." "It's overwhelming," Starks said.

CSUSB student Audie Spitzer's favorite piece was "Surf Permut," another bronze sculpture from 1917.

The winner of this contest will perform a duet with Justin Timberlake at the Grammys.

Voting is still open on the Yahoo! Music website for the top three finalists.

Grammys are given to artists across 31 general fields of music, according to grammy.com.

"We want to represent the many different genres and fields of music. We want to honor all forms of music," Keppl said.

Danny Carey of the rock band Tool, provided Szukalski's "Surf Permut" for the exhibit.

She found all of his work reflective of the time period the pieces were made which included World War I and World War II. CSUSB student Rick Trujillo enjoys Teng Hsik Chiu's work a lot because he is drawn to city landscape paintings.

His favorite piece by the artist is "New York, Skyscrapers," because it is a good view of the city showing everything in the distance.

CSUSB has its fair share of successful individuals study on this campus.

Steve Avila is like most university students attending classes at CSUSB. What sets this English major apart from the average undergraduate or graduate student is that he’s an accomplished science fiction writer.

Last December, Avila’s novel, “Everything Changes,” the first entry in a trilogy known as “The Trevvlek War,” was published. The plot of “Trevvlek War” surrounds a young man’s struggle to grow and adapt in a chaotic world overrun with armamentarium taints.

The story is described as a story of endurance, defense and hope.

Writing this epic story has been a drawn out process for Avila. Towards the end of his first year of high school Avila began writing “The Trevvlek War.”

Avila finished the first book in the series at the end of his first year at CSUSB. Avila first experimented a love for writing at the age of six.

“My teachers would come up with these, come to think of it now, potential assignments to me to fill up one page story using ten vocabulary words to also show the meaning,” Avila said.

Most elementary school students would cringe at an assignment like this, but not Avila.

“I started enjoying it more than other students in class and began writing my own stories,” Avila said.

From that point on Avila made writing more than just a common activity in school.

“It became his passion. I would like to make it writing my career,” Avila said.

Being the next Kurt Vonnegut or J.R.R. Tolkien is not something easy to come by.

Regarded as a prime example of current success, Avila still understands the difficulties of becoming a successful science fiction writer.

“Trevvlek War” trilogy was published last December.

There are no classes you can go to that guarantee a career as a writer,” Avila said.

For now, I’m focusing on journalism or teaching English,” Avila said.

Avila’s success as a writer thus far is not limited to writing science fiction novels.

He first gained acclaim writing poetry.

Avila doesn’t necessarily consider himself a poet but he has found great recognition for his poetry.

His poetry has been entered into and won two poetry competitions, one of which was hosted by CSUSB.

Science fiction isn’t the only genre that interests this talented writer.

Avila has ideas for stories encompassed with a wide range of genres, everything from drama to suspense to horror.

For those of you interested in picking up a copy of “Trevvlek War,” copies can be ordered from Barnes & Noble for $22.69.

Xlibris, the company that published Avila’s work also distributes the novel on its website at Xlibris.com.

“Trevvlek War” can be purchased from the publisher’s website for $19.94.

Immigration dilemma

Chris Ari Rosati
Staff Writer

Hundres of illegal immigrants are deported after U.S. Immigration authorities conducted a sweep around Los Angeles, Orange, Ventura, Riverside, and San Bernardino counties last week. Approximately 700 people were arrested during the operation, called "Operation Return to Sender." This action is part of an initiative that targets criminal aliens.

Although many of the individuals deported were criminals, awaiting release from jail, people were also arrested for simply being undocumented immigrants. The sweep included undocumented immigrants from 14 countries that included Spain, Poland, and Bolivia...but most of the men detained were from Mexico.

In an interview with Reuters, Immigration and Customs Enforcement (ICE) spokesman Gary Kiehn said, "The goal of our enforcement efforts is two-fold. First, it's about restoring integrity to our nation's immigration system. Second, it's about safeguarding our communities from those who have already damaged our laws."

The Executive Director of the Coalition for Humane Immigrants Rights of Los Angeles, "This is a wake up call for a serious attempt to deal with an immigration system that just doesn't work."

Human rights organizations like the ACLU that the real issue is the border itself and deporting individuals because they are simply here illegally will not deter them from coming back. Whereas side of the issue you're on, it is hard not to sympathize with undocumented immigrants who have come here to the United States for a chance at a better life for themselves and their families. For a country that is considered the melting pot of culture, how have we suddenly become xenophobes?

The danger lies when trends in society move from xenophobia to prejudice and then to racism. When the ICE conducted their immigration sweep, they mentioned that most of the ones arrested were criminals. However, they also helped some individuals who were simply here without visas.

Fear of foreigners has also grown. Some fear that the other side of the issue can dj date the right woman for the job. According to the polls this is now replaced terrorism as the number one issue among the American people.

Hillary has taken a hard stance on immigration. "I am, you know, adamantly against illegal immigration. I think if..." she said. Democrats in the party however, would like her to take a more conservative approach to immigration in order to get the Latino community behind her.

The other big issue is, of course, terrorism. Terrorism seems to have taken a backseat to immigration. I think that if [Hillary Clinton] wants to keep her..." she said. I believe that if we Americans carry with them. When an individual is victimized, we will be attacked again. America cannot forget the events of 9/11.

The question remains: can Hillary Clinton make the big decisions? It will be interesting to find out how she plans to protect America, as well as deal with the various issues she faces in a nation. The Republicans appear to be in trouble. They don't really have a first running candidate as of right now.

You have John McCain and Rudy but neither one has taken the first running position, although Giuliani seems favored due to his leadership during 9/11. However, Clinton sure seems to represent their party. America is going to have to decide who will be the best Commander in Chief. I urge you to put your political affiliation aside and actually think about your vote. Do not vote Democrat because you are a registered Democrat. Don't vote Republican because you are a Republican. Do your research on each candidate and then decide who is the best fit for our country. Your vote means the most, it determines who is chosen to be back on the ballot again. America cannot forget the events of 9/11.

The danger lies when trends in society move from xenophobia to prejudice and then to racism. When the ICE conducted their immigration sweep, they mentioned that most of the ones arrested were criminals. However, they also helped some individuals who were simply here without visas.

Fear of foreigners has also grown. Some fear that the other side of the issue can dj date the right woman for the job. According to the polls this is now replaced terrorism as the number one issue among the American people.

Hillary has taken a hard stance on immigration. "I am, you know, adamantly against illegal immigration. I think if..." she said. Democrats in the party however, would like her to take a more conservative approach to immigration in order to get the Latino community behind her.

The other big issue is, of course, terrorism. Terrorism seems to have taken a backseat to immigration. I think that if [Hillary Clinton] wants to keep her..." she said. I believe that if we Americans carry with them. When an individual is victimized, we will be attacked again. America cannot forget the events of 9/11.

The question remains: can Hillary Clinton make the big decisions? It will be interesting to find out how she plans to protect America, as well as deal with the various issues she faces in a nation. The Republicans appear to be in trouble. They don't really have a first running candidate as of right now.

You have John McCain and Rudy but neither one has taken the first running position, although Giuliani seems favored due to his leadership during 9/11. However, Clinton sure seems to represent their party. America is going to have to decide who will be the best Commander in Chief. I urge you to put your political affiliation aside and actually think about your vote. Do not vote Democrat because you are a registered Democrat. Don't vote Republican because you are a Republican. Do your research on each candidate and then decide who is the best fit for our country. Your vote means the most, it determines who is chosen to be back on the ballot again. America cannot forget the events of 9/11.

After reading the following story, I am very tempted to invest into an E Ink display. Years ago, a CSUSB student was asking his lights into a deli on campus pizza. His cell photo ring and a napkin wasnovation. He forced his greasy hand into his pocket, was also arrested for simply being undocumented individuals that have come here to the United States for a chance at a better life for themselves and their families. For a country that is considered the melting pot of culture, how have we suddenly become xenophobes?

Da Bears da Colts Superbowl XLI

Brian Lutcher, the Bears' linebacker, will help to support the team's strong defense this Sunday.

One of the most important games of the year in the NFL may be on just two weeks away. This past Sunday was an exciting time for football fans across the country. The Indianapolis Colts played the New England Patriots for the American Football Conference Championship, while the Chicago Bears battled the New Orleans Saints for the National Football Conference title game. The first time, with the Saints against the Bears, seemed to be a low scoring game that was going to go down to the wire.

However, in the fourth quarter the Bears showed why they should be in the Super Bowl by defeating the Saints 39-14. In the CFL and Patricia game, the Patriots seemed to have the win in their hands by the end of the first half.

In the second half, the Colts overcame a huge deficit to send the Patriots in the final minutes 38-34.

Super Bowl XLI will be played Feb. 4th in Miami, Florida. This will be the first Super Bowl appearance for the Chicago Bears and the Indianapolis Colts in many years.

The Bears have not been in a Super Bowl since they were in Baltimore in 1971 and won.

The Bears have not been in the Super Bowl since 1986 when they were also victorious.

This will be the 41st Super Bowl since the NFL has been established.

The NFC leads the series with a 21-19 record against the AFC in the Super Bowl.

The Colts have had somewhat of a hard road in the regular season leading to the playoffs. Going 12-4 in the regular season and winning the NFC South gave the Colts a third place spot in the playoffs. The Bears have had a phenomenal season. Chicago has blown out most of their opponents going 13-3, and having the best record in the NFC.

The Bears have the 5th ranked overall defense in the NFL. Their defense only allows 13 points per game.

The Colts have the best quarterback in the league and Peyton Manning has shown that through.

Terrell Davis, the Bears' linebacker, will help to support the team's strong defense this Sunday.
