The school’s 50th homecoming anniversary was celebrated recently, as many alumni and leaders came home to celebrate what has been achieved in the last 50 years.

“This is a meaningful opportunity to not only recognize what we’ve accomplished, but what we can do better,” said former CSUSB President Albert Karnig to The Press Enterprise.

Opening back in 1966, the campus had three permanent buildings and 293 students, with the first graduation class of 59 students coming two years later.

After 18 years of opening their doors in 1964, CSUSB earned its university status, as well as its first year fielding intercollegiate athletic teams.

San Bernardino was never known as a college town, but CSUSB has raised its enrollments to over 17,000 students, according to The Press Enterprise.

The region of San Bernardino had a low college return rate back in the early 2000s. Karnig’s time as the school’s president helped turn that around.

From 2008 to 2009, the rate of college goers in the San Bernardino region was raised from 25.4 to 29 percent, according to The Press Enterprise.

“San Bernardino was never known as a college town, but CSUSB has raised its enrollments to over 17,000 students,” said Karnig.

“Over the last 50 years, the region has experienced a college-going rate as any place in the country, according to Karnig.

“The California Faculty Association (CFA) is preparing a five-day strike in April that can potentially affect the quality of education for students. All 23 California State University (CSU) campuses will go on strike if the CFA does not reach an agreement with CSU management concerning fair wages. “When faculty pay is low and the number of students we each try to teach is high, the CSU cannot attract and retain the best teachers,” said CFA President Jennifer Eagan.

Students are struggling to afford the costs of attending college. The CSU must shift system priorities to better align with its core mission of affordable and quality higher education, according to calfac.org. Even though students are paying more in tuition than ever before, they are getting less for their education.

There are more students per faculty resulting in larger classes and less time to help, according to calfac.org. “That is unfair to students and to the future of California,” added Eagan.

CSUSB is known for its mission to make four-year college return rates back in the early 2000s. Karnig’s time as the school’s president helped turn that around.

“That didn’t change overnight, but it is changing,” concluded Karnig.

The university created special medals that they awarded all four graduates, posthumously in the case of John Henry McCoy.

Ku Klux Klan (KKK) rally in Anaheim left three people stabbed and 13 others ar-

“It is a disappointing situation to see now-a-days, it's 2016. Why can't we all be civil and respectful?” said stu-

Before the KKK had even arrived, protesters had shown up to confront the Klan, according to the LA Times. Moments after the Klan members had exited their vehicle at the park, fights broke out.

Witnesses told the LA Times that the KKK used the point of a flagpole as a weapon while fighting the protesters.

Sgt. Daron Wyatt of the Anaheim Police Department said that the other protesters were stabbed with a knife and an unidentified weapon, according to CNN.

Klan members jumped into their black SUV and sped off, leaving three to fend for themselves, according to the LA Times.

The KKK members, led by William Quigg, an Anaheim resident, were part of the Loyal White Knights in California and other Western States.

This specific group call themselves “Klan without robes,” according to the LA Times, who aim to raise awareness about illegal immigration, terrorism, and street crime.

In the end, six Klan members and seven protesters were arrested, Wyatt told the LA Times. A day after they were arrested, five of the six Klan members were released from jail, according to CNN.

“It was pretty convincing that the KKK members were attacked violently,” Wyatt told CNN.

Campus open if strike

There has been an increase in pay raises and managerial positions for CSU executives and managers at a faster rate than the increase in full-time equivalent faculty positions, according to calfac.org.

“When faculty are worrying about bankruptcy, making rent, choosing which bill to pay or not pay, and losing the time it takes to get to our second or third job, we realize that our students are not getting the best from us,” said CFA Secretary Molly Talcott.

The average CSU faculty member earns $45,000 per year; more than 50 percent earn less than $38,000 per year, according to calfac.org.

“Students cannot be compelled to walk out of class, walk picket lines, stay away from campus or support the strike as part of a class assignment or in exchange for a grade,” stated President Tomás D. Morales.

CSUSB plans to maintain full campus operations with minimal disruption to students, faculty, staff and guests.

CSUSB President Tomás Morales sent an e-mail to the student body stating the campus will be open during the CFA strike.
A new bill designed to increase graduation rates was introduced to California’s legislature by Sen. Steve Glazer. SB-1450, or the “California Promise,” aims to provide a new pathway for incoming college freshmen students to graduate in four years.

“One thing that we fall short on is the issue of student success, being able to complete your degree in four years, and unfortunately California State University ranks near the bottom,” stated Glazer in a video of a press conference at Cal State Sacramento.

That is far below the national average four-year graduation rate for public universities, which is at 34 percent, according to the U.S. Department of Education.

The bill, if passed, would require the trustees and the board of governors to establish a contract that authorizes CSU campuses and the California Community Colleges to enter into a pledge with a student who satisfies a specific set of criteria to support in obtaining an associate’s degree within two years and a bachelor’s degree within four years, according to the California Legislative Information.

Under this optional contract, there are requirements for both student and institution.

Students will be obligated to take a minimum of 30 units in an academic year and to maintain a “C” average.

The institution will be obligated to give students enhanced academic advising, priority registration for popular classes and a freeze in their tuition if the student met the terms of the contract.

“Whatever you paid in your first year, you would pay throughout your second year, third and fourth year as long as you remain under contract,” stated Glazer.

For one student, the perk of priority registration would be enough to sign the contract.

“As someone who left CSUSB after his freshmen year because I was unable to get the classes I needed to make any progress towards my major, I think this bill would go a long way toward helping students graduate on time and with less debt,” said student Kevin Miller.

“It’s something we really need considering CSUSB is one of the most affordable CSU campuses but our students graduate with the most debt,” concluded Miller.

Out of the 23 CSU campuses, there are only four that regularly with their department academic advisor, according to Glazer.

The institution will be obligated to give students enrollment to the number of units they are assigned, they may then select the option to protest, choosing from a list of excuses such as “I’m aware of my privilege” or “I was a middle child,” as reported by the California Legislative Information.

“This bill states that Cal State University students will graduate in four years. This bill states that Cal State University students will graduate in four years.

“The best example is at Cal State San Bernardino,” stated Glazer. “They started admitting kids under this optional contract in 2007, and since that time, their graduation rates in that program is twice that of the institution itself.”

CSUSB’s Four-Year Graduation Pledge Program requires students to enroll in at least 45 units per academic year, maintain a 2.7 CSUSB grade point average and meet regularly with their department academic advisor, according to the CSUSB Advising and Academic Services.

In turn, the students receive first priority registration. In the program, 85 percent of students who have entered in the contract are considered to be under-represented minorities, according to Glazer.

A new application has been developed to split restaurant bills based on wage inequality among diners. Equipay, an app designed by comedienne Luna Malbroux, divides a dinner bill between friends and family based on the race, gender and income inequalities of each individual at the table, according to New York Daily News.

“Equipay allows you and friends to split the cost of a meal in accordance with gender and racial income inequalities,” stated Malbroux.

Users of the application enter basic information, such as the total dollar amount of the bill and the names of the individuals they are splitting it with.

The app’s “diversity tracker” then determines how much each individual pays based on how diverse they are. If a user does not agree with the dollar amount they are assigned, they may then select the option to protest, choosing from a list of excuses such as “I’m aware of my privilege” or “I was a middle child,” as reported by the New York Daily News.

While the app was introduced as a statistical method to call attention to the issue of wage inequality, some students argue that it wouldn’t be appropriate to use.

“I would not split up the bill based on any of those things because that isn’t how friendship works. It depends on how often the same group goes out. Sometimes you would pay for it and another time the next person,” said student Angelica Guibat.

“Everyone should pay unless the one with the higher pay and better job offers to pay,” said student Alba Luviano.

“Although it is true that their graduating class of 1967 totaled just 59 students, it should disturb us that only four were black. I would suggest that there is no better way to honor these four than by double- ing our efforts to achieve real diversity and inclusion,” said Morales.

“I can tell you that I am fully committed to this. There is no higher or more important priority,” concluded Morales.

Lois Carson, Maryjane McCoy, Joyce Payne and John McCoy (no relation to Maryjane) were a few of the names he came across while doing research. Successful through his “obstacles” in order to graduate, he took the idea to the committee and all members decided to make Roberson’s vision come true.

“My family in the room, myself included are standing on the shoulders of those who came before us,” said scholarship coordinator Louise C. Jones, according to The San Bernardino Sun.

Graduates of the 1967 class and many people who attended the event leaned on those who came before them. The theme for this year’s breakfast and scholarship essay was “The Shoulders Upon Which We Stand.”

It showed that when standing together the pioneers are “a force to be reckoned with.”

Student and scholarship winner Shaquel McCoy was one of the many individuals who looked up to those graduates before her and stood true to the theme.

“You are black excellence, and I am proud, we are all proud to be standing on your legacy and strong shoulders as young activists, pioneers and dreamers,” said McCoy in her presentation at the breakfast.

McCoy was not the only one who was proud to have the guests of honor, CSUSB President Tomas D. Morales also honored the past graduates.

Although it is true that their graduating class of 1967 totaled just 59 students, it should disturb us that only four were black. I would suggest that there is no better way to honor these four than by redoubling our efforts to achieve real diversity and inclusion,” said Morales.

“I can tell you that I am fully committed to this. There is no higher or more important priority,” concluded Morales.

In addition to the four members of the Class of 1967, the Pioneer Breakfast honored five other African-American faculty and staff members.

The popularity of online dating has increased in response to new dating applications offered on smartphones.

A recent study by the Pew Research Center has shown that 27 percent of Americans between the ages of 18 and 24 have used online dating services or applications.

The number of users and participants has tripled within the last two years from 10 to 27 percent, according to the Pew Research Center.

Mark Carrier, a psychology professor at Cal State Dominguez Hills, credited the growing popularity to convenience.

“Looking for other people and portraying yourself are all easier to do through the apps,” said Carrier.

Some students agree that dating applications are more convenient because technology provides quicker methods of communication.

“They’re a fast way to message or talk to someone who would seem interesting,” said student Alba Laviano.

Others, however, argue that online dating can be awkward and is typically utilized for spontaneous sexual encounters.

“I have always felt that dating apps or websites are awkward. It seems very unnatural to me to start a relationship through the internet. Although college students are notorious for hook ups, so I could see how popular these apps are amongst college students,” said student Maria Villalpando.

Although the number of individuals who use dating applications has grown, the likelihood of forming and sustaining a committed relationship is relatively low.

Only five percent of Americans who are married or in a committed relationship said they met their partner online, according to the Pew Research Center.

Healing bandage for those in combat

The WoundClot Hemostatic Gauze is a bandage created to heal wounds faster for military by controlling blood loss.

When the bandage comes into contact with the wound it immediately starts absorbing blood with the capacity to hold 2,500 times its own weight, according to Newsweek.

When a typical bandage is removed, the clot that formed gets torn away, slowing the healing process.

To preserve the healing process, WoundClot Hemostatic Gauze turns into gel when exposed to liquid.

Pursuing a graduate degree may be advantageous

By STEFFANIE MARTINEZ
Staff Writer

Tough choices have to be made after obtaining your college degree—a huge one in particular, choosing between attending graduate school or going straight into the workforce.

This is not always the easiest decision to make as there are many factors to take into consideration.

Graduate school is not an extension of your college life—there are big differences.

“From studying to socializing, you’re entering a new world. But if you choose to go to grad school to study something you’re passionate about, you’ll likely find it much more rewarding than college,” stated Dr. Melissa Boone Brown of Columbia University.

Speaking to recent grad school graduates, I have found that they do not regret their decision of pursuing a higher degree.

“It is something they actually encourage for students to do sooner than later. On the contrary, many college graduates find it more beneficial to pursue their career as soon as they obtain their bachelor’s degree.”

Most college grads do not want to miss out on opportunities if they hold off on searching too long.

“This should not be an issue considering master’s programs, in particular, are tailored to work around people with a full time work schedule, giving the choice of taking night and or online classes.”

There are certain occupations that will not reward graduates for having a higher level degree.

Earnings will always vary by field of study, but there is no question that a master’s or doctorate’s degree will hold more value in the long term.

An analysis by the Georgetown University Center on Education and the Workforce (CEW Georgetown) found that on average, people with more education make more than those with less, pretty self-explanatory.

The numbers are what make the difference.

According to CEW Georgetown’s report, the average bachelor’s degree holder earns about $2.3 million over a lifetime, a master’s degree holder typically earns about $2.7 million, and a professional degree earner typically takes home $3.6 million.

Regardless of what degree you choose to obtain, a master’s does not necessarily guarantee you a job, but it will definitely put you ahead of the competition.

Our campus has plenty of resources to help calm your fears about whether or not you should consider taking the chance and pursue a graduate degree.

The Office of Graduate Studies offers more than 40 different programs and concentrations and give you access to the different coordinators.

With their help, it will be much easier to get an idea of what the program offers and they will guide you into the right direction to pursue the degree.

One thing to be noted is that not all college students can afford to allow money to solely dictate the decision of your pursuit in continuing higher education.

CSUSB offers many different resources to help you financially while you go through your graduate courses.

It is a huge decision to make.

Do you want to spend the extra number of years at school? Will this degree benefit you financially?

No matter the doubts you may hold, there are always alternatives.

It is the knowledge you would gain through these programs about your occupational aspirations and the opportunities that will open up that you should take into consideration.

Some say the pursuit of higher education is a waste of time because it does not guarantee you a job, but neither does a bachelor’s.

Keep in mind that no harm will ever come from choosing to further your education.

Safe sex practices will prevent harm

By NICHOLAS WHITT
Staff Writer

Sex—a wonderful experience that is explored vigorously in college but just like many wonderful experiences, there are consequences if one is not cautious, which seems like common sense.

“It’s estimated that each year, there are nearly 3 million new chlamydia infections in the U.S. Chlamydia is most common among young people ages 15 to 24,” according to It’s Your (Sex) Life, MTV’s public information campaign.

With 18 to 24 the prime age for people attending college, having safe sex seems to be a bit of a challenge.

Almost as if they have no concern if they obtain a sexually transmitted disease (STD), sexually transmitted infection (STI), or become pregnant.

Well, it makes sense when “one in four college students has an STD,” according to nursingschools.net.

College students practicing safe sex seems almost as if it was a folk story being told about the lone condom saving only few individuals who are accepted by it.

“The only protection that is essential is the pull-out method, because if the girl had anything wrong with her, you would be able to tell, so worrying about pregnancy is the only issue,” said student Brian Brodie.

This is an automatic response that should be accepted; especially with all the harmful things that can happen to your body if you obtain any STD or STI.

Unless you’re okay with peeing fire every time you use the bathroom or dying. The odd things is, students are given a plethora of resources and information on safe sex and CSUSB is no exception.

The Student Health Center offers a plethora of resources and information on safe sex and CSUSB is no exception.

It is available to all students attending CSUSB, it is completely confidential, and takes a couple of minutes to fill out a small amount of paper work.

The staff running the program are completely understandable and non-judgmental, only preaching that you as a student are taking the necessary steps towards practicing safe sex.

Establishing the point that no matter the relationship your partner and you have, safe sex must still be the number one priority.

“Even in a monogamous relationship, you must still practice safe sex, it’s your body not your partners...” said Health Education Assistant Judi Cruz.

The resources are available to students, yet the program only obtained around 3,000 students either new or returning Family PACT members, yet there are more than 20,000 students currently attending CSUSB, according to a chart provided by Cruz.

Students need to realize how crucial and devastating not having safe sex is.

Cruz continued, as a student there are enough stresses you must deal with every single day—being pregnant or obtaining a STD or STI should not be a concern.

College is about doing things you would normally not do, but that doesn’t mean you should invite Gonorrhea into your life just because you wanted to have fun for one night.

Every college student likes to follow the wise words of Notorious B.I.G. “We like to party and bullshit,” but being risky is no way to live life.

Remember, you only have one body; take care of it and be cautious of potential threatening consequences that may cause damage.

Engaging in safe sex practices will prevent harmful bodily risks like STDs or STIs for those who are sexually active.

Mindfulness is a powerful tool

By MICHAEL ISBERTO
Staff Writer

A course on mindfulness is one of the newest additions to CSUSB’s curriculum. The Communication Studies department dedicates an entire class on helping students strengthen their focus by helping them stay in the present. I believe this is great for students and it is a crucial skill to have for everything we do.

"I’m interested in taking Mindfulness & Communication because it sounds rad," said student Coleen Cabral. "I would like to learn how to be mindful and how to meditate and to live in the present moment. To distress from my other four classes I’m going to take. It’s a way to knock out an upper-division elective requirement without stressing that the class will be too much to handle," concluded Cabral.

Certain students think the class will be an easy one, and when I first heard about the class, I thought the same thing. But what surprises me is that students are actually very interested and invested in this topic. The maturity in this topic is a great sign for this generation.

So often we are focused on what’s behind us and what’s ahead of us that we neglect the here and now. In a society where we are driven by producing outcome, we so often forget to be grateful for what is happening in this very second. Sometimes this can open up the floodgates of regret, dwelling on what could’ve happened or what could’ve been done.

"Mindfulness [...] is paying attention in a particular way intentionally and without judgment," said Dr. Bradford Owen, who will be the course instructor. Maybe we are somewhat spoiled by idealism. Maybe we are not grateful enough for what we have, so we do not take care of what is right in front of us. Maybe some of us have self-destructive tendencies that are driven by glaring advertisements and things around us, feeding into the idea that who we are and what we are doing with our lives is insufficient. Whatever it is that steals our attention of what is happening right now makes us forget that we are only promised this very second.

Taking care of this very moment is what allows what is yet to come. Staying in the present takes a lot of commitment to not only yourself, but also to those around you—it is a practice that invites a very specific and fine focus to what is happening with us. This practice is incredibly useful in all aspects of our lives. Staying in the moment, at school or in the workplace, opens us to a wealth of information, knowledge and experience that cannot be taken back or missed if we are fully engaged.

This moment of complete engagement creates a building block and a solid foundation for us, as we are sponges to all that life is gifting to us. "I’ve been a meditator for more than 40 years so I found it beneficial personally," said Owen. "Empirical research evidence has demonstrated a number of benefits of mindfulness. [...] Generally it helps reduce stress, reduce unwanted negative emotional reactivity and it helps the ability to concentrate," continued Owen.

Neuroscientists at Harvard Medical School reported that meditation not only reduces stress, but it can also thicken the gray matter in the frontal cortex, which is associated with memory and decision-making.

"There are dozens and dozens of studies that show these kinds of benefits, many of them are physiological. Even a short eight week meditation practice has been shown to thicken the gray matter of the brain in a beneficial way," concluded Owen.

We allow more positive things to happen in our lives when staying in the moment and inviting mindfulness into our world.

Students hang out in San Bernardino

By MARIA DE LOURDES CAMPOS Staff Writer

“There’s no better university than CSUSB,” stated student Britney Allan. According to Allan, the reason why CSUSB is one of the best universities is because there are an enormous number of places around campus where students can go hangout.

These places provide students with stress-free environments where they can unwind and de-stress. “I love the Woman’s Resource Center here on campus, because it is peaceful and friendly. Not to mention, that they have free scantrons, which is great if you’re ever in need of some. They also have free snacks, chocolates, and condoms, so it doesn’t get any better than that,” stated student Shirlenea Baggett.

The center is a social outlet for students to relax, socialize, and interact with other students who, like them, want to take advantage of the ample amount of resources and supplies that the center provides.

“Women’s Resource Center host events, such as Feminist Comedy Night and Vagina Monologues to promote feminism and women’s empowerment,” said student Marissa Wollard.

CSUSB Women’s Resource Center is a welcoming place for students to relax.

Indeed, it’s a great place to go hangout if you’re a student, because the quality of customer service, food, and ambiance is unparalleled to those other chain restaurants that are on Waterman,” added Gram.

Student Valeria Gomez said there are not many alternative hangout spots for young adults to go to in San Bernardino.

However, when she’s here on campus and has several hours to spare, she likes to go to the Inland Center Mall because it’s within proximity.

“I like going to the Inland Center Mall because there’s a variety of stores like Torrid, Forever 21 and Victoria Secret,” said Gomez.

Gomez takes advantage of the fabulous food court, sales and environment.

If ever hunger strikes after class, check out My Hero’s Subs.

“My Hero’s Subs is a cool sandwich shop here in San Bernardino. They have this sandwich called the ‘Dirty Girl,’ and let me tell you, it’s beyond amazing,” said student Jordan Anderson.

The shop owners take really good care of CSUSB and Valley College students because they offer a 10 percent discount with any entrée, and at lunch it is super packed because it is super delicious and affordable,” added Anderson.

There are many places to hang out on campus, but surrounding businesses offer students alternative social environments to relax and enjoy themselves. Explore, have fun, and bask in the beauty of San Bernardino.

Break Bread art gallery opens in L.A.

By ARTHUR MEDRANO Staff Writer

Artists Scott Hove and Baker’s Son present Break Bread in Los Angeles’ downtown fashion district.

This fun, cake-themed gallery housed six chambers with over 9000 square feet of sculptures, an ice cream truck, and a coffee lounge to quench your thirst on this unique experience.

Having never gone to an art gallery myself, I was not sure what to expect.

The entrance was difficult to find due to its staircase entrance, which was occupied with a make-shift hat shop leading into the second story warehouse.

At the end of the stairway, I could already see the first exhibit of a canopy bed decorated with flowers.

This hole in the wall gallery, owned by Think Tank, was whimsical and hysterical all at once with taxidermied animals and weapons covered in icing. There were influences by Cirque du Soleil’s Zumanity and watercolors found in artwork throughout the six-chambered exhibit.

The beautiful frosting-patterned artwork is not true buttercream or pipework.

Instead, the artists used poly-foam and acrylic paint to create a decadent experience as if one were to dine on a Boston cream pie.

They included a mirrored-maze that lead to several different rooms.

One even portrayed a heaven and hell experience with a projected scenery of rain and flames with no sound.

Despite the gallery being fun for the whole family, there was underlying criticism of human consumerism we could see in the art. Modern technology and famed video game characters were seen hanging on a fence as if they were targets to be destroyed by wicked beings.

The ice cream truck was also a jagged perception of how much care goes in with the delicious amount of stress that work and school infinges upon him.

Another hidden gem that many students may not know about is Castaways.

“Castaways is awesome, especially if you’re on the north side of San Bernardino, because it’s a restaurant that over looks the entire city and at night the view is just incredible,” stated student Michael Gram.

Even though it’s kind of old, it’s a great place to go hangout if you’re a student, because the quality of customer service, food, and ambiance is unparalleled to those other chain restaurants that are on Waterman,” added Gram.

Student Valeria Gomez said there are not many alternative hangout spots for young adults to go to in San Bernardino.

There are many places to hang out on campus, but surrounding businesses offer students alternative social environments to relax and enjoy themselves. Explore, have fun, and bask in the beauty of San Bernardino.
I met student Artyonna Rector while eating lunch at Farmer Boys. Her six year old daughter approached me with wide green eyes and a pearlescent smile. “I became pregnant at the age of 15… abortion was my initial solution,” said Rector. “People at school would bully me, calling me names such as “slut” and “hoe.” I had to drop out of school because I couldn’t stand the name-calling. It was the most humiliating thing I have ever been through.” “I tried hiding my pregnancy for about four months. I didn’t eat just so my stomach wouldn’t grow. When my (single) mother finally found out I was pregnant, she cried and cried. Seeing my mom cry was probably the hardest part of it all,” continued Rector. “I didn’t go through with the abortion. My mom gave me her unconditional support. When my daughter was born, everything made sense. She became my motivation to be a better person and be the best parent I can be for her.” “I went back to school and got a night time job. Now, I am finishing up my last two quarters in Psychology and I am working on getting into the Master’s program,” concluded Rector. Though Rector was introduced to motherhood at a young age and thought it would be a blessing and her “motor to keep fighting,” she cried and cried. Seeing my mom cry was probably the hardest part of it all,” said the anonymous student.

However, unlike Rector, an anonymous student shared a story without a “happy ending.” “My dad would take me to school high on methamphetamine. One day while driving me to school, he drifted off to the right side of the lane and scraped the passenger side on the ramp right where I was sitting. I was eight. He didn’t even seem to care,” said the anonymous student. “Coming home from school was not any better. Many times I would come home looking for my toys, to find out he had sold them for drugs.” “Till this day, I still remember and visualize how he would look laying on the living room floor, twitching,” continued the anonymous student. “I have a problem with alcohol. My rough start in life made me fall into alcoholism. I am not trying to justify my actions, but it is a strong battle I have been fighting since I was 16. God knows I am trying. Though I still cannot conquer my demons, I have definitely become a stronger person,” continued the student. “I came back to school, I make my own money, and I own my own house. My experiences with my dad made me realize that I don’t want to be like him. I want to be a good father. I want to be there for my children.” “I truly believe that we write our own destiny. If we sit around dwelling about the past, we will not grow. We just have to push forward,” concluded the anonymous student.

Overcoming adversity

By ERENDY TORRES

“The struggles of life shape and mold our character. They are tests that take us to the edge and a up to us to overcome and prevail. As rapper J. Cole said—“There’s no such thing as a life better than yours…There’s no such thing as a life worse than yours… There’s beauty in the struggle and ugliness in the success.”

High-flying destinations raise concern

By CHRIST CAUHAPÉ

Recreational use of cannabis is now legal in Alaska, Colorado, Oregon, Washington, and the District of Columbia. There have been substantial efforts to promote a new kind of tourism within these geographical areas, which has become known as marijuana tourism. The idea of marijuana tourism has even reached the medicinal-marijuana-only states.

A survey by the Colorado Tourism Office in 2015 found that legalized cannabis played a role in the selection of Colorado as a destination in half of the out-of-state visitors interviewed, according to ABC News.

The number of out-of-state residents showing up at Colorado hospital emergency rooms complaining of conditions that may have been spawned by cannabis use had doubled from 2013 to 2014, according to a report by the New England Journal of Medicine.

Out-of-state residents were 50 percent more likely to show up at an emergency room complaining about marijuana intoxication than locals.

The tourist patients were a year-and-a-half older (35.5 years) in median age when compared to Colorado residents visiting the emergency rooms.

According to Colorado Public Radio, the head of the Department of Emergency Medicine at the University of Colorado Hospital said that smoked marijuana is not the cause of the upturn.

Dr. Richard Zane said the condition is generally presented when the patients have consumed edible cannabis in the form of candies or cookies. Symptoms include gastrointestinal complaints, aggressive behavior and hallucinations.

Inhaling the smoke of cannabis generally produces a “high” within a matter of minutes if not seconds. Eating cannabis products can take up to two hours to produce the high.

When an individual who is accustomed to smoking the weed tries the edible forms for the first time, he or she may tend to increase the dose.

If unaccustomed to the slow onset of the desired effect, the user who has previously only smoked cannabis may “overeat,” believing that he is not getting high because he has not ingested enough edible cannabis to produce the desired effect.

Eating more than necessary is one explanation for so many visits to the emergency rooms. Other explanations include the lack of a means to determine the amount of intoxicant delivered per gram of edible cannabis.

An anonymous CSUSB student who is a medical marijuana patient said that the first time he medicated with edibles, he experienced much discomfort because the first belated effect he felt was the “sensation of a brick dropping into the pit of my stomach.”

“If it was completely legal, marijuana dosage would be regulated by the U.S. Food and Drug Administration and these emergency room visits would become a rare occurrence,” stated Sandra Lagerson, administrative assistant in the Department of Nursing at CSUSB, Palm Desert Campus.

Lanny Swordlow, a registered nurse and the founder of the Brownie Mary Democratic Club, which promotes re-legalization of cannabis within the framework of the California Democratic Party, said that the emergency room visits are symptomatic of gastrointestinal overindulgence.

“These symptoms can be relieved simply by waiting a few hours for the feeling of panic to dissipate,” according to Swordlow.

College can be stressful. As students, many have pretty tight budgets. Books, tuition, and daily expenses often hinder the idea of becoming rich anytime soon. Some students take loads of challenging classes, while others have to balance work, school and families. In the battle between limited time and limited money, there is enough room for the egg and yolk to fill up the core.

Read Webtoon and remove the pit. Scoop out some of the avocado, so there is enough room for the egg and yolk to fill up core. Place in a muffin pan so avocado can be stabilized. Crack egg into the avocado.

Avocado Bacon and Eggs
You will need:
1 medium avocado
2 eggs
1 piece of bacon, crumbled
1 tbs. low fat cheese
1 pinch of salt
Preheat oven to 425 degrees.
Cut avocado in half and remove the pit. Scoop out some of the avocado, so there is enough room for the egg and yolk to fill up core. Place in a muffin pan so avocado can be stabilized. Crack egg into the avocado.

Ramen N’ Cheese
You will need:
8 oz. cheddar cheese
2 packages of ramen noodles
1 tbs. corn starch
½ cup milk
First grate the cheese and combine with corn starch. Mix milk with the cheese and corn starch combination in a medium sauce pan on medium to low heat until consistent. Keep warm until serving.
Boil ramen noodles in a separate pan.
Once boiled, drain water.
Top with crumbled bacon.
Sprinkle the cheese on top and add 1 pinch of salt on top. Top with crumbled bacon.
Cook for 15 minutes and serve!
Ramen noodles are a college student staple, especially for students living on campus. Here is a four ingredient recipe of cheesy deliciousness.

Oatmeal Mask
You will need:
1/2 cup raw ground oatmeal
1/2 cup water
1/2 cup milk
1 tsp honey
Combine these four ingredients and cook in a small saucepan on a medium heat for five minutes.
Let it cool, apply to face, and rinse off after 15 minutes!
According to Buzzfeed, this mask claims to moisturize the face and manage breakouts.
Experts, according to Buzzfeed, also said that this reduces inflammation and is definitely worth a try! If you attempt at any of these, be sure to share with your fellow Coyotes!

Comic culture

By JAEYEON KIM
Staff Writer

Comic books have been produced by lots of comic book companies, such as DC Comics, Marvel Comics, Dark Horse Comics, as well as many others.

Comic books have affected cultures in many ways for a long time. One of the affected cultures is the movie industry. Many movies have been produced based on comic books, such as Batman and Superman.

“Batman and Superman have infiltrated every major form of entertainment in America, except for the music industry,” according to Ink.

Like Batman and Superman, America has many superhero movies, such as those featuring Iron Man, Hulk, Thor, and Avengers.

As these superhero comic books and movies have become famous, fashion has been affected by the superhero comic books and movies. In America, people see children as well as adults who wear T-shirts, caps, and other products of the superhero genre.

Besides the superhero comics, Donald Duck, Mickey Mouse, Cinderella, and other Walt Disney cartoon characters have become famous in America.

Many people have been influenced by the Walt Disney animations and movies. This can be seen in places like Disneyland.

Americans have been affected by the comic books in many ways, such as movies, fashion, and even hair accessories.

Koreans have been also affected by the comic books, but the effects of the comic books to Koreans are different than Americans.

“In America, the comic books have affected Americans with blockbuster cultures, such as Universal Studios and Disneyland. However, in Korea, a minority of people who like the comic books make their fan cultures for their comic books,” said student Yena Hong.

Koreans have made their communities for the comic books they like and support. Through the internet and social networks, the fans of the comics have shared information with other fans in their communities.

Although Koreans have not been affected as much, the comic books have gradually impacted to Koreans with Webtoon. “We can enjoy Webtoon easily because we can read Webtoon with our smartphones whenever and wherever we want. Therefore, Webtoon has become popular among Koreans,” said student Seongwon Pa.

Koreans are interested in the fashion of the Webtoon. Some clothing stores and websites have advertised clothing with the words, ‘main character’s style’. America and Korea cultures have been differently affected from the comic books, but Americans and Koreans both love the comic book culture.

Even though each country has different aspects of comic book influences, people enjoy comic books in both countries.

The 1975 released their second LP “I Like It When You Sleep, For You Are So Beautiful Yet So Unaware Of It” on Feb. 26.

Bold, audacious, and fearless are all words to describe what the band created with this masterpiece. The band made a daring move with the lengthy title choice itself. “Although I don’t like the title, I do think that it’s something unique to do. Albums are usually single worded, not a whole sentence long,” said student Manuel Macias.

The album includes 17 creative songs—each of them have their own unique twist, different from what is typically heard in today’s pop culture.

A mixture of genres are heard throughout the album. Some of those genres include ‘80s, chillwave, pop, electropop and indie rock. Usually artists stick to one specific genre in their albums but these guys did it all.

According to the Guardian, lead singer Matthew Healy said that people listen to various genres, and so he felt it was important for his band to deliver just that.

“They made a great move in combining all those different genres, because someone is bound to like at least one of those songs, but I personally have enjoyed listening to the entire album as a whole,” said student Theresa Ramirez.

The song, “I Like It When You Sleep, For You Are So Beautiful Yet So Unaware Of It” can be compared to songs by the indie rock band The Postal Service from their 2003 album “Give Up.”

The 1975’s song is definitely electro-pop—a mixture of both electronic and pop music. It gives off a sense of quietness, but the electronic beats will keep you awake. It is as if you are falling asleep in a quiet house but can still hear small noises, such as birds chirping or cars passing.

“Nana” is their more heartfelt song about Healy’s passed grandmother and his belief that God does not exist.

Along with the piano/guitar ballad, he uses lyrics such as “I wish you’d walk in again/Imagine if you just did/ I’d fill you in on the things you missed,” making sure that the listener knows that he strongly misses his “Nana.”

The tone of his voice is softly spoken, adding a state of seriousness to the album, because the pain he feels is truly evident, not only in his lyrics but in his voice.

He then continues with “And I know that God doesn’t exist/ And all of that palaver surrounding it/ But I like to think you hear me sometimes,” expressing his religious views on God.

By adding his atheist beliefs, Healy is giving his fans a more inside look into who he is personally. Another song where he lets the listener into his personal life is “A Change Of Heart.”

He speaks of a fling where he thought he was in love but later finds himself to have a change of heart, leading to his decision to depart from the relationship.

Just the idea of having to break someone’s heart makes you feel sorry for the girl that he is breaking up with. As you keep listening, you find that she was actually the one that deceived him; he’s leaving her because she’s not the sweet person he thought she was.

You then start to have your own change of heart and feel sorry for him.

The versatility of the album is not just seen in their genre choices but also in the mood of each of the songs.

Moving away from the seriousness and heartbreaking tones of “Nana” and “A Change Of Heart,” the songs “UGH!” and “The Sound” are both upbeat, feel good jams, something you can bop your head to while shopping at a store such as Forever 21.

Their danceable hit single “Love Me” is also included on the album. It kicks off with a sound like that of Tiny Tim’s “Tiptoe Through The Tulips,” a song that was featured in the film “Insidious,” but definitely not as creepy.

It is really important to keep your mind open when listening to this song.

Someone who appreciates old pop songs will surely find this entire album to be a staple in their iPhone playlist, others will only find a couple of the songs to be of their liking.

Oscars finally get diverse

From Leo’s big win to Stacy Dash’s awkward appearance, the Oscars were talked about seemingly by every news outlet in the world. Many fun facts were left unknown about the Oscars that you may not typically find on your favorite Hollywood magazine or routine talk show.

This year was a big year for women in the film industry. Despite the lack of diversity claims that have been surrounding the academy awards these last few months, the award show has improved a little by recognizing more women in film.

Sara Bennett won best visual effects for “Ex Machina,” along with Andrew Whithurst, Paul Norris and Mark Ardington, making her the first women to win in this category.

“Brooklyn,” “Mad Max: Fury Road,” and “Room,” were three out of the eight films that were nominated for best picture that focused on a women’s story and a women protagonist.

“It makes me happy that little by little the industry is making progress and giving [women] more opportunity,” said sophomore Evelyn Cortez.

This year marked the third consecutive year a Mexican-born film maker has taken home the win award for best director. Alfonso Cuarón won in 2014 for the film “Gravity” and for the last two years Alejandro Gonzalez Iñarritu has dominated with his films “Birdman” and “The Revenant.”

This makes Iñarritu the first director in 63 years to win Best Director two consecutive years and only the third ever.

Another member of the Cuarón and Iñarritu team that broke a record this year was Emmanuel Lubezki. The cinematographer became the first person in history to win three times in a row for his films with Cuarón and Inarritu which includes “Gravity,” “Birdman,” and “The Revenant.”

Ennio Morricone won best composer for the film “Hateful Eight” at the age of 87. Morricone became the oldest person to win an academy award after beating 2011’s best supporting actor winner Christopher Plummer’s record, who won at the age of 82.

The crowd gave the Italian composer a standing ovation for his win and for his work of 30 years in the industry.

Anohni became the first transgender performer to be nominated for best original song. The singer was up for her song “Manta Rey,” a collaboration with J. Ralph for the film “Racing Extinction.”

Although the artist was filled with excitement when she first heard the news of her nomination, that excitement turned into embarrassment and sadness after learning that she was not invited to perform at the Oscars.

“Last night I tried to force myself to get on the plane to L.A. to all the nominee events, but the feelings of embarrassment and anger knocked me back, and I couldn’t get on the plane,” stated the musician in an article for Pitchfork.

“I think it would have been very cool to see her perform. The academy needs to be more diverse and be more accepting of people,” said student Eric Rojas.

Instead Lady Gaga, The Weekend, and Sam Smith took the stage, in which Smith took an Oscar home.

During his acceptance speech he claimed to be the first openly gay man to win the award.

As classy as could be, Smith replied with an explanation that all he was trying to do was to send love to the LGBT community and apologized and congratulated Black.

Not enough good acting to save "Triple 9"

"Triple 9" star-studded cast placed fifth in February’s last box office weekend with $1.1 million.

Set in present-day Atlanta, GA, the action thriller focuses on a group of crooked men, all of whom have worked in law enforcement, forced to work under the orders of Jewish Russian mob leader Irana Vaslov (Kate Winslet).

In the opening credits, we hear the group of crooked cops in mid-discussion of a heist they are planning, as red-lighting slowly pulls in, we start to identify each man in the group.

"This has to be done in broad daylight," one man says as the scene switches to them successfully robbing a bank. After their success, Vaslov tells the men’s leader, Michael Atting (Chadwick Boseman) to pull a 999 – police code meaning which thanks to Vaslov’s blackmail, perform one last impossible task, which winslet.

Although each actor has been praised for their past work, some actors seemed to only give a mediocre job with the exception of Winslet, Ejiofor, and Collins through director John Hillcoat’s guidance.

Winslet was phenomenal playing the heavy Russian accent bad-ass, with class and danger written all over. Ejiofor’s character portrayed was satisfying because he had a lot of backstory that eventually unfolded by the end of the movie. Collins’ character grew over time, and by the end, was one worth paying attention to.

Paul failed mainly due to lack of character development. The character only seemed to appear at random moments, and had one too many late reactions that made his performance uninteresting. Affleck’s portrayal seemed strange due to his inattention to the movie perfectly, confusing at the beginning but exciting towards the end. His use of red in her wardrobes symbolized danger, and this scene served as foreshadow that any scene taken within a red room or lighting signified potential danger.

The use of stress and hip hop music in the sound and score was another plus, which seemed to sum up the movie perfectly, confusing at the beginning but exciting towards the end. The film itself could have called in a 999 to gather help, however as far as cop movies go, it was still an enjoyable movie to see.

Unfortunately, this star-studded cast could not alone save the film from scriptwriter Matt Cook’s intangible storyline due to the lack of fluidity.

With continuous additions of needless characters, minor storylines, and predictable plot twists, the story seemed to drift from the main plot leading to unclarity throughout the movie. The violence in the film was remarkable with backheadings, explosions and numerous character deaths throughout. The element of color implemented throughout the film was phenomenal and helped connect some loose ends. During a slaughter house scene viewers see a close-up of Winslet’s red heels while animal blood is washed off the floors.

The event was spread all across social media and the only downside one could expect is the wait in line for getting the chance to get any items for the 20th celebration.

Average wait time spanned from two to three hours just to gain entrance into the small store located on Melrose Ave.

Although most die-hard fans were seen waiting hours before the actual opening, they made their long wait worthwhile with the camaraderie of all age groups celebrating Japenese pop culture.

There were collectibles, poke plushies and a signature Eevee evolution T-shirt on sale for the event, who is a small furry Pokémon adored by many just as Pikachu and Jigglypuff are. Waiting in line also brought out many fans cosplaying as their favorite Pokémon character or Pokémon.

You could see the vivid adoration for the series and if you don’t get the chance to visit the store, you’ll have a chance to catch ‘em all through their website that sells the same products.

Prince Royce is a bachata singer from New York City who broke into the Latin pop mainstream in 2010 after incorporating both English and Spanish into Ben E. King’s famous song “Stand By Me,” and giving it a smooth urban beat.

The remake quickly became a hot hit, making it on to the top ten Latin Billboard Chart; not only was this the beginning of Royce’s career, but the kick-off to a new bilingual style of music. “It gives the listeners the best of both worlds, keeping a mutual understanding between his listeners and the messages he tries to convey with his lyrics,” said student Kathia Rodas.

Royce focused on bachata music for the first four years of his career, gaining thousands of fans along the way. In 2015, this spirited, young artist decided to collide both his worlds into one and finally released the English album that he had worked on for a little over three years. “I think that now, as far as the creative side and the sound, I am much more solid in my head as far as what direction I want to go,” said Royce in an interview with Billboard.

He released his first English album “Double Vision” during the summer of 2015. This album had tracks featuring many popular icons such as Snoop Dogg, Kid Inc, Tyga, Pitbull, and Jennifer Lopez.

This album, alongside the tour he went on with Ariana Grande, opened many doors for him, both in the English music and acting industry. In early January, he announced that he would debut his acting career on Fox’s musical “The Passion” that will be hosted and narrated by Tyler Perry; it tells the story of Jesus Christ’s last few hours on earth.

Royce will help bring this story to life by playing his role as Jesus’ most confident partner, Peter. This story, although 2,000 years old, will be given a modern approach through a variety of popular music and charisma. “As a Latino, I can honestly say that this is a big accomplishment, not only for him but for young Latinos everywhere, comes to show that we should always be proud of our Latin roots,” said student Anthony Lopez.

“The Passion” will not be the only acting we’ll be seeing from Royce. It was announced on March 2 that he will be joining Hulu for the fourth season of its famous series titled “East Los High.” This makes it the first English-language show with all Latino actors, creators and writers, which fits perfectly with Royce’s ambition and keeps an equal balance between his Latin and American roots. “I can’t wait to see the series. I skimmed through the first few seasons, but I am 100 percent sure that I will be stuck to my TV screen once Prince Royce joins the cast. I just hope that him focusing on acting doesn’t stop him from making new music for his long time fans, like me,” said student Maria Chavez.

After being a hardcore Prince Royce fan for over six years, I can say that I have never been more proud, not only for his career accomplishments but also for being a leading example to those who have nothing and dream of becoming something.
The Coyote baseball team fell completely short from Feb. 26 to 28 as they took on UC San Diego’s Tritons in a four game series. The first night’s game was hosted in La Jolla where right-handed pitcher (RHP) Tyler Wells threw 104 pitches over five innings. Wells racked up eight strikeouts and only allowed one run.

Catcher and first baseman Brian Lockey started the game off with a two-run single, giving the Coyotes a 2-0 lead in the first. Infielder Dylan Lohman scored off of a one-out double by catcher Andrew Lopez, giving the Coyotes a 3-0 advantage. In the sixth, in-fielder Jake Caron scored an unearned run leading the Tritons 4-1. Wells stepped off the mound with the lead and was replaced by RHP Jonathan Tellier. However, the Tritons returned, scoring three unanswered runs in the seventh and five more in the eighth to give them the 9-4 victory on Friday night.

“This is always frustrating whenever you’re in the lead and it’s taken away from you,” said Wells.

Wells said the Coyote bullpen has been having trouble lately, but he trusts them. “The ability for them to go out and throw strikes is key right now [and] I think that is what has been killing us,” said Wells.

The Coyotes played their first home game of the season at Fiscalli Field on Feb. 27. However, they would be defeated twice in a double header, 20-4 and 5-3, against the Tritons. In game one, in-fielder Grant Buchanan knocked out two singles, but the Tritons grabbed an early lead when they scored three runs off a three-run home run in the first. “I thought I did pretty good, but the result wasn’t what we wanted,” said Buchanan. “We got to keep working everyday and leave everything in the past and take one day at a time,” added Buchanan.

Game two had a slower start, as it was not until the bottom of the fifth that the Coyotes got their first run on the board. Trailing 4-0 infielder and pitcher William Ouellette scored off of outfielder Damien Edmond’s fielder’s choice, making the score 4-1. In the bottom of the sixth, Buchanan scored a run after leading off with a single. Buchanan fired back again in the bottom of the seventh with a two-out double to left center scoring Lopez who led off with a walk.

RHP Brian Conley took the loss after throwing five innings with four strikeouts and five walks. The Coyotes found themselves back in La Jolla for their last game of the four game series on Feb. 28. The Coyotes trailed 7-0 all the way to the top of the fifth where they earned all of their five runs in that single inning. William Ouellette went 5-for-5 with five singles in the Coyotes 16-5 loss to the Tritons. “I was seeing the ball really well, I was more aggressive when it came to the fastball early in the count,” Ouellette said.

The Coyotes will play the Chico State Wildcats March 12 and 13 in Chico. Then the Coyotes will return home to play Stanislaus State March 19 and 20.

There may still be another quarter left before summer break, but now is the time to get ready for trips to the beach. According to Women’s Health, there are seven steps to take to feel ready for the summer.

The first step is getting your sweat on with strength training. The second step is making your belly and butt top priorities.

The CSUSB Recreation and Wellness Center (Rec Center) offers many classes throughout the year that can really work up a sweat and focus on the belly and butt.

All of the free group exercise classes offered at the Rec Center advertise that participants can burn from 300 calories to a seriously sweat inducing 550 calories.

Of the 12 available classes to take, there are four that can burn between 400 and 550 calories and that also geared toward breaking a sweat and working out your glutus and abs. These classes are Boot Camp, Butts and Guts, Cycle Fit and FX.

Boot Camp is a fast paced and intense workout that involves high intensity training, body conditioning, core training, and speed and agility. The workouts change each class, but promise to burn up to 550 calories. Butts and Guts focuses on exercising the glutes and abdominals while using hand weights, body weight and balance balls.

The class starts with a warm-up that progresses in intensity, ending after an hour with a cool-down and up to 440 calories burned.

Another high calorie burning option is the Cycle Fit class, which can burn up to 550 calories in the 60-minute time frame. The class may take place indoors, but participants can expect to work on their overall strength, cardio, and fitness. The TRX class offers an intense workout that can burn up to 550 calories. TRX is a fast paced class that combines cardio drills and suspension training to keep the heart pumping while conditioning the body.

These classes at the Rec Center are just a small part of what you can do to get ready for the summer. The third step mentioned by Women’s Health is to make sure you drink lots of water.

This is an easy step to take as there are many hydration stations available, not only in the Rec Center, but throughout the campus as well.

Drinking lots of water prevents overheating and helps to flush out excess water weight.

Tip number four from Women’s Health is to increase the amount of natural diuretics in your diet. These are food and drink options that can help aid in the bloating. Choices include: cucumbers, asparagus, lemon, green tea and anything with a high concentration of potassium, caffeine, magnesium, or vitamin C.

Remaining on the note of food, tip five says that it is very helpful to cut out carbohydrates like bread, pasta and crackers.

Since carbohydrates tend to be on the saltier side, they can lead to excess water retention and bloating. Instead, you should opt out of grains and vegetables with some lean protein.

For those of age, a significant reduction in the consumption of alcohol is a must. By limiting the amount of alcohol in the system, you’ll get a better night sleep and consume fewer calories.

The seventh and final tip offered by Women’s Health involves having good posture. They’ve suggested that by standing up straighter, you will look thinner and will also be training your body to hold everything in once you are in your swimsuit.

With these tips, you and your friends can be ready for summer in no time.

Track races in the right direction

Coyote Women’s Track and Field headed out to Claremont to compete in the Claremont-Mudd-Scripps Rossi Relays on Feb. 27.

The Coyotes competed in multiple activities throughout the course of the day, placing high in many categories.

Each activity is broken down into sections that are categorized by top athletes to placing high in many categories.

Each Coyote has two places; one that they placed in the section they participated in and the second where they placed overall out of all the other athletes in the activity.

The next activity to take place was the 100-meters.

The Coyotes ran in the fourth, sixth, and seventh sections for the 100.

In section six, Willy Simpson ran 14.01 seconds for the 100, placing seventh in her section and 53rd overall.

Things kicked off on Feb. 26 where the Coyotes earned their first loss out against the Warriors with a final score of 4-3.

Outfielder Jessica Angulo drove in the Coyotes’ first run in the third inning, followed by catcher/outfielder Ashley Leffingwell and pitcher Cassandra Williams, who each earned a RBI in the sixth inning.

Williams, who pitched for five innings, recorded six strikeouts on the mound and allowed three earned runs.

The Coyotes’ second game against the Warriors began with Angulo singling up the middle to drive in the first run in the first inning.

The game remained tied until the fourth inning when outfielder Morgan Ratliff hit a double to left field earning her an RBI. Two batters later, outfielder Caelyn Smith singled to left field scoring another run for a lead of two over the Warriors.

The final innings of the game, Ratliff and Angulo both doubled at bat earning one RBI each. Then finally in the sixth infielder Amanda Herrera doubled to center field earning the last run of the game for the win with a final score 6-4 Coyotes.

Pitcher Amanda Ramirez relieved Williams and had four strikeouts and one walk with six hits allowed. The Coyotes faced the Warriors in another double header the following day where the Coyotes claimed a victory in both games.

The first game was off to a very slow start with both teams not getting their first hits until the sixth inning.

That’s a wrap on the women’s basketball normal season.

The Coyotes had the honor of finishing their last two regular season games on their home turf of the Coussoulis Arena.

Coyotes’ first game of the weekend was against Sonoma State Seawolves on Feb. 26.

However, the Seawolves won this game 57 to 48.

Senior Alexcia Mack shined in her second to last game of her regular season college career by scoring a high of 19 points and shooting two 3-pointers in the first quarter.

Mack was the only Coyote who was able to reach double digits in scoring against the Seawolves.

The Coyotes started out the game just right by taking a 19-11 lead in the first quarter.

Seawolves took the lead over the Coyotes towards the end of the second quarter and by the end of the first half of the game the score was 29-28.

Chelsea Barnes was the next runner up for most points scored in the game against the Seawolves, totaling it up to 9 points.

Barnes scored a 2-point jumper to catch the Coyotes up to the Seawolves.

Barnes said the team needed to make “more shots, and rebound better,” in order to have a chance at winning the game.

“We have a really good team,” said Barnes.

“But as the end of the season approaches, in order to win, it comes down to playing harder and smarter than the other team,” continued Barnes when asked what the team could improve on.

The Coyotes took another lose when they played their second game of the weekend against the San Francisco State Gators.

The final score was 64 to 59.

Mack led the Coyotes in points again, scoring 17 total while Chelsea Austin and Barnes scored 12 points each.

The Coyotes honored their seven seniors before the game.

Emotions were high as the seniors said their farewells.

When asked how she felt about playing her last regular season game, “it was [a] bitter sweet moment,” said Barnes.

“I will miss being around people I genuinely love,” added Barnes.

Barnes also mentioned that playing basketball “has helped [her] learn to speak up, how to stand alone, make [her] a stronger person, physically and mentally.”

Barnes ended with wanting to “thank Cal State San Bernardino for a second chance at playing basketball.”

Coyotes ended the regular season 13-12 overall and 10-10 in CCAA.

Although it was the end of regular season, the Coyotes redeemed themselves and dominated their playoff game against the Stanislaus State Warriors; winning 76 to 66.

Senior Brianna Harden scored a season high of 22 points with 10 rebounds.

Harden wasn’t the only Coyote to score in the double digits, as Barnes scored 15, Sophie Bhasin scored 11, and Mack scored 10.

Coyotes trailed behind in the first-half of the game but picked it up in the beginning of the third quarter when Barnes scored a 2-point layup.

Mack kept the momentum going when she shot a 3-pointer, putting the Coyotes up 58-56.

Coyotes were in control in this game and nothing could stop them from achieving this win.

They walked away as first round winners with their heads held high.
