Did Riverside County's Sheriff Cover-up Pretrial Detainee Deaths?

Wikipedia.com

Since before Chad Bianco took office there were concerns regarding his efficacy and qualifications. Soon, those concerns expanded to include his extremist, right wing philosophy and in other cases the shifting away from the professional image of the Riverside County Sheriff's Department.

All of this coupled with questionable use of force incidents and deteriorating conditions related to the health and welfare of inmates in county jails has led to the current patterns and practices investigation into the Riverside County Sheriff's Department by the California Department of Justice.

Now, we are learning more about the maltreatment of inmates trapped in Riverside County jail facilities, and as a result, the clearer the picture becomes of the wanton and failed leadership of Chad Bianco.

The lawsuit

A lawsuit filed last week by family members of Richard Matus Jr., an inmate who died in custody at Riverside County's Cois M. Byrd Detention Center in Murrieta last year, accused Bianco and his minions of multiple failures of responsibility. As noted in the document filed with the court, the lawsuit hopes "to bring to public light the deliberate disregard for safety and protection carried out by the individual defendants in the present action." Included at the top of the list of defendants is of course, none other than Chad Bianco.

The complaint states the obvious, that Riverside County has a long history for failing to meet the medical needs of those in its custody. The complaint also stresses how this failure is the reason the county continues to operate under a court approved Consent Decree. The

Dell Roberts Riverside's 2022 Citizen of the Year

Dell Roberts(Center) stands with past winners of the Greater Riverside Chambers of Commerce Citizen of the Year Award. (Prince James Story, Black Voice News)

Prince James Story | Staff

Thursday night, the Greater Riverside Chambers of Commerce held its 123rd annual celebration at the Riverside Convention Center. It was their first in-person ceremony since 2019.

Businesses of all sizes gathered together for the ceremony honoring individuals who have significantly impacted other people's lives in Riverside.

While multiple awards were given to business and community members during the ceremony, there was no applause as loud as when community leader and civil rights icon Dell Roberts was presented with the 2022 Citizen of the Year Award.

"I have known this man for almost 45 years, and in that time, he has represented the best that our city has to offer you. So I'm honored to introduce an individual who has demonstrated exceptional leadership throughout the years," Nick Goldware said.

A tribute video was played about Roberts that featured prominent community members describing him as an honorable, extraordinary, gravitas leader.

"Dell's biggest contribution to the community has been unifying people. So whether it's rich and poor, Black and white, have and have nots, Dell brings these people together," said Riverside Unified School District Superintendent Renee Hill.

A history of service to the community

Roberts has a long history of service in the inland region. In 1968, he co-founded the Black Students Union at local high schools. In 1979, he co-founded the Riverside Black History Month Committee, and in 1980, he co-created the Black History Parade, just to name a few of his contributions.

Over the years, Roberts has received multiple awards for his service to the community, including the Chuck Kane Award, the YWCA Achievement Award, the 2007 Bank of America Local Hero Award, and the Roy Hord Volunteer of the Year Award.

Last year, Roberts was awarded the Frank Miller Civic Achievement Award for 2022. The award is given to individuals, couples, or groups who have made significant contributions to the city and community of Riverside.

"I don't expect any of the awards," Roberts said. "I enjoy helping people and connecting the dots. I love when things come together."

Roberts said he loves working with the youth and would like more opportunities for them outside of the classroom.

On the current state of the Riverside community Roberts had this to say, "We've come a long way ... we have a long way to go, you know, to bring the city up where there's equity, and there's not equity right now. But it's getting better."

Roberts retired from Riverside Unified School District in 2003 after 38 years of service.

Prince James Story | Staff

It did not matter that it was raining during the grand opening of the Black and Brown Opportunities for Profit (B-BOP) Center. The community showed up in large numbers to express their support.

The B-BOP Center is a 10,000-square-foot building in San Bernardino to help end racial and gender inequality in entrepreneurship in the Inland Empire.

The center has 14 rooms, a cafeteria, shared workspaces, a child care center, a quick-pitch room, and a legal guidance room.

According to the State of Women in The Inland Empire Report, Black women make 60 cents for every dollar a White male earns. The gap is more significant for Hispanic women; they make 42 cents for every dollar a White male earns.

“Within our programs and services, we've always had an entrepreneurship component to the work that we do, especially for women of color and those who have experienced discrimination due to being a woman of color or even having felony convictions,” said Vanessa

Perez, Executive Director of Time For Change Foundation.

Perez said the vision for this project came to her in 2020, at the height of the pandemic.

Businesses were shut down, and mothers, especially single mothers, struggled to make ends meet and had to find ways to provide for their children.

“We wanted to make sure that Black and brown women have access to the tools and the resources they need to create, build, grow, and scale successful businesses,” Perez said.

The center will provide women access to technology, working spaces, resources, legal support, and capital and investment.

They also have the B-BOP Academy, which will have three phases: build, grow, and scale.

When you sign up for the academy, they will “Housing is healing,” Step Up President and CEO Tod Lipka said last week during a ribbon-cutting ceremony for a new supportive housing project for chronically unhoused seniors in the city of San Bernardino.

In 2022, San Bernardino's unhoused population increased by 7% from 2020 numbers, according to the county's most recent Point-in-time(PIT) Report.

This project is a testament to what we can do when government and private industries come together to solve complex problems and deliver services to our communities.

- Andy Myers
CEO of Shangri-La

San Bernardino leaders declared a local emergency in response and within six weeks, a coalition of state and local representatives joined with Step Up and Shangri-La Industries to create this housing opportunity for seniors in need.

Seventy-six chronically unhoused seniors will now have a place to call home. The development was built at the former location of San Bernardino's All-Star Lodge. The project was funded by Shangri-La Industries and Governor Gavin Newsom's Homekey Program, an initiative created to address the housing crisis in the state.

Supportive Housing for Chronically Unhoused Seniors Unveiled in San Bernardino

Step Up Board Member Amie Quigley, Mayor Helen Tran, Councilwoman Kimberly Calvin and Congressman Pete Aguilar cut the ribbon to unveil San Bernardino's most recent permanent supportive housing for 76 chronically unhoused seniors at the repurposed All Star Lounge on March 16, 2023. Funding for the facility was made possible through financing from Shangri-La Industries and the State's Homekey program. Organizers say that this public-private partnership represents successful community collaboration in efforts to alleviate the homelessness crisis in the city. (Aryana Noroozi for Black Voice News / CatchLight Local).

Safe Spaces

“This project is a testament to what we can do when government and private industries come together to solve complex problems and deliver services to our communities,” said Andy Meyers, CEO of Shangri-La. “We must be creative in our solutions, tackling homelessness at its core. These 76 units will provide safe spaces for the unhoused community that they can finally call home.”

According to the Homekey Program, 5,911 units and 120 unique project sites were created in round one of the program, housing over 8,000 individuals.

“This project exemplifies the transformative Homekey solutions providing thousands of individuals across California with the supportive services they need and a safe place to call home,” said Governor Newsom. “I applaud San Bernardino and local leaders across California for partnering with the state to meet the urgency of this moment and make a lasting change in our communities.”

Data from the PIT report also showed that nearly half of those surveyed were classified as chronically homeless, meaning that they have been unhoused for a year and have a disabling

Meet Michelle Burroughs, Who is Helping Her Community Save Themselves

by Breanna Reeves & Aryana Noroozi

As Black communities and communities of color across the Inland Empire experienced fatal outcomes and faced challenges to accessing adequate care throughout the pandemic (and before), one community leader wanted to disrupt the narrative by equipping the residents with tools and resources to help themselves.

Last August, Michelle Burroughs, M.P.H., director of Community Engagement & Outreach for the Center for Healthy Communities (CHC) at the University of Riverside, California (UCR), launched a series of town hall events that focused on COVID-19, Long Haul COVID and the importance of being an advocate for oneself.

Bringing a vision to life

With the support of her small, but mighty team (Selina Hernandez and Shaleta Smith), Burroughs organized a series of town halls that welcomed Black providers, including epidemiologists, health directors and other medical professionals to give residents first-hand knowledge about COVID-19 in their communities and allow them to ask questions about their own health concerns.

In addition to organizing these town halls across Riverside and San Bernardino Counties, Burroughs was one of the lead organizers of the fourth annual Health Disparities Research Symposium that took place in February.

The two-day event brought together top researchers, medical professionals and stakeholders across Southern California to discuss pressing issues that are impacting communities in the Inland region and present ways in which they are addressing issues of equity and access.

What inspires

Burroughs' passion for health and her community has not gone unnoticed as she was recently the 2022 recipient of the Staff Diversity, Equity and Inclusion Award by the UCR School of Medicine.

"In my 30+ years of experience in the field of public health, I have found that it is exceedingly rare for a single individual to possess a transformative vision and have the commitment, discipline, and ability to methodically move a team forward to achieve that vision," said one of the people who nominated Burroughs for the award. "Michelle is one of those rare individuals."

Black Voice News spoke with Burroughs about her work, what inspires her, and what she hopes to continue to accomplish in her role.

This interview has been edited and condensed for clarity.

BVN: Congratulations on your award for Staff Diversity, Equity and Inclusion. You've organized town hall events for the public, organized the health disparities symposium and continue to inform the community about health issues that impact them. What motivates you to do this work?

Burroughs: I think it started young, just observing my family. It was something in the culture of our family. My grandparents really instilled in us the importance of giving back to the community and serving your community. Then, my brother was diagnosed with some health issues, so that got me interested in pursuing health and it just came together as a perfect match, going into the public health field. I'm able to serve my community and I'm also able to work to improve our community's health outcomes.

So, that's what motivates me. I really am passionate about health and people living healthy lifestyles, achieving optimal health and not physically looking a certain way, just being healthy as human beings, and the importance of making that a priority. Because if you don't have good health, you don't have a good quality of life.

BVN: With March marking Women's History Month, is there a woman from history that has influenced or inspired you? If so, why?

Burroughs: I have to say my family, again. My mother really inspired me to make health a priority and not only just physically, but mentally, emotionally, spiritually — and don't be ashamed to work on yourself, don't feel bad if you realize you need some emotional help.

There's nothing wrong with having moments where you're like, 'okay, my mental health is not in a good place and I need to either seek therapy or just take a moment and kind of reassess my life.' But, my mom was really instrumental in just her character and how she treated people. I'm just inspired to be a better person each and every day because of the model that my mom presented and the way she risked her life and how she treated people.

BVN: I attended several Long Haul COVID Town Hall events last year and one thing I noticed is that many of the doctors and experts invited to speak have been Black women in medicine. With Black doctors accounting for just under 6% of all physicians in the U.S., what impact does learning and hearing from Black physicians have on these local communities?

Burroughs: Oh, representation is everything. I think that we understand each other, we understand each other's way of speaking, cultural things, whether it be the food you like to eat, how we move about. You can say little, simple things to a Black physician and they get it — you don't have to tell the whole story. For example, if I'm concerned — us, as Black women, we care about our hair, right? — I go in and I'm having challenges with my hair. I can go into a Black dermatologist and say, 'I have signs of losing hair.'

They understand the significance in that, where a non Black dermatologist will be like, 'oh, you're getting older. It's thinning. It's not that big of a deal, just calm down.' But the Black dermatologist will say, 'what are your stress levels? What's going on in your life?' They will really delve into it because they understand there's unspoken things that they get. I think it just helps bring about calm when you go to a Black provider because that part is eliminated.

I am a huge proponent, as you know, of representation and making sure that we highlight our Black providers that are out there because, as you said, there's not very many of them. So any, and each one of them that I come in contact with, I'm always like, 'Hey, at some point in time, I'm gonna call on you to be able to come out and speak to our community because your voice matters and they need to see us in these spaces.'

BVN: What are some goals you hope to accomplish this year, professionally and/or personally?

Burroughs: I am pursuing my doctorate in Health Administration. I did that because, again, representation matters. I have been fortunate to be able to serve the community and build trust and build strong relationships with the community. And they listen to the things that I say, thankfully, and they appreciate the opportunities to come together to be able to talk with Black providers in this space. But I realized at a certain point that there were limits being placed on me because I did not have a doctorate.

I don't want any limits being placed on what I'm able to do and how I'm able to be of service to my community. I'm well in my program and I'm very excited about it. I want to be able to use that to get into spaces, expand my reach, be able to be in the media and potentially speak on television as a respected, credentialed individual speaking on this topic. Unfortunately, because of how society is, if you don't have certain initials behind your name, you're not seen as credible.

So, I'm doing that personally and professionally, so that I can expand my reach in engaging our community and make sure that we understand that no one's coming to save us. We have to make our health a priority and do the things that we need to do to change the narrative of our health outcomes.

I really want to expand the work that we're doing here in the Inland Empire. I'm hoping that we have an opportunity to engage more individuals who will come and will listen and will understand that, again, if you don't have your health, you don't have anything.

We have to come together as a community. We have to share our lived experiences. We have to work together and see how we can change the system because the fact is the system is racially biased and there's discriminatory practices that are happening. When we show up and present ourselves, we're not going to be viewed or not going to be listened to or heard. And we need to learn how to advocate for ourselves.

BVN: Reflecting back on the last five years of your career, what's the highlight?

Burroughs: I'll say, just engaging the community. I feel so fortunate to be in this position. My career has continued to grow and advance. I wasn't as intentional as I think some people think I was, as far as moving about, but I've had an opportunity to work in for-profit [settings], nonprofit [settings], in the community, in hospital settings and now I'm in the academic space.

I have just been really, really fortunate to be able to engage the community in all those different spaces and to make, what I believe, a meaningful impact in the lives of whichever community I was serving at that time.

I just feel very fortunate that people continue to want to engage. I've learned so much from the community and I know that people want to live healthier lifestyles, people want that for themselves. Oftentimes, they don't have the tools or the language to be able to do so. So, reflecting back, I'm just very happy that I've been able to be in certain spaces and be able to sit at certain tables and make sure that our voice is heard, and being in a position now where I can affect change, I can make decisions that will make good impacts in the lives of our community members.

I'm just happy that God has blessed me to be able to be in the spaces that I've been in and be able to maybe change the direction of certain things.

BVN: What advice would you give to the next generation of women who seek to make impacts in their own communities?

Burroughs: Be true to yourself. Be really honest about your intentions. Whatever field you're in, make sure that you think it through. It's not going to be easy. It's not going to be an easy road. When you're trying to make a difference overall — especially when you're working in the health field — it's not going to be an easy road traveled, but stay persistent. Make sure that you take care of yourself because if you're not healthy, if you're not in a good place emotionally, physically and everything, you really can't care for others.

So, as they always say, put your own oxygen mask on before you try to revive or save someone else. Make sure that your intentions are always to do the right thing in every scenario. Again, it's not going to be an easy road traveled, you will have to make some hard decisions. The higher you climb, you will be put into positions where your integrity will be put into question. You're going to have to make some hard decisions. Always keep your integrity intact and always try to do the right thing.

BVN: What can the community expect to learn from the upcoming community event with Dr. Glenda Newell-Harris?

Burroughs: We're being very intentional, very actionable. Most of our town halls and community conversations have been geared around education [and] educating ourselves because knowledge is power. But now we're moving more into action.

We want people to have those tangible tools and resources and talking points to be able to do the things that they need to do to ensure that their health is moving forward in a good direction. How do I navigate the healthcare system? How do I advocate for myself and my family? I'm so excited because Dr. Newell-Harris is going to be coming to us and presenting and educating us on how we advocate for ourselves and our families, but it's going to be a workshop.

So, please come and be willing to engage and exchange dialogue. We're going to have an interactive workshop where we're going to talk about case scenarios, we're going to have real examples about how individuals have gone to seek health care and maybe it didn't go as well as it could have gone.

We're going to walk our participants through that and give them key points and help them with their own scenarios. I'm super excited about the trajectory and the direction that we're taking our conversations because we really want to empower our community to take responsibility.

My personal goal is to change the narrative and remove the word disproportionately. I'm so tired of hearing that placed in front of the Black community's narrative, especially around health. We're disproportionately affected by everything. We die at higher rates from everything. Every health issue is disproportionately [affecting] the Black community. I want to erase that verbiage. I want us to change that narrative together. And that's the only way we can do it, is together.

Michelle Burroughs poses for a portrait at her office in Riverside on March 16, 2023. She serves as the director of Community Engagement & Outreach for the Center for Healthy Communities (CHC) at the University of Riverside, California (UCR). Last year, she launched a series of town halls with open dialogue between the community and health providers to counter misinformation and provide the community with resources to best protect themselves. (Aryana Noroozi for Black Voice News / CatchLight Local)

BVN: Anything else you'd like to add?

Burroughs: I really want to put a plea out there to our Black community. We really have to make our health a priority. I know a lot of us are kind of in survival mode, just trying to make it day by day. But again, I say this all the time: if you don't have your health, really, you don't have anything and you can't live a good quality of life.

I would ask all of us, especially women, because we're the ones who make things happen. We're the ones who make the world go around. So really as women, as Black women, as women representing a woman of color, I would ask that we stop and before we start taking care of everybody else, which we are naturally going to do, that we take a look and take care of our own health and do an assessment of our own health and well being.

Are we good? Are we good physically? Do we have any physical ailments that are going on? Do we have any mental challenges that are going on? Take assessment of ourselves and really try to work on ourselves, so we can be present and be the best that we want to be for others.

Relief Efforts for Mountain Communities in Wake of Historic Blizzard Underway

"I'll keep pushing for additional resources for our mountain residents, who continue to impress me with their courage and resilience," said Board of Supervisors Chair Dawn Rowe. (Source:Twitter.com/SBcounty).

Asante-Ra | Contributor

Last week the San Bernardino County Board of Supervisors unanimously voted to waive up to $5,000 in County plan review and permit fees for property owners looking to rebuild or repair structures damaged or destroyed by the recent record-setting blizzard. The waiver is available for each structure and will be funded by $500,000 of the $10 million Emergency Response Fund the Board created on March 1 to address the impacts of the storm.

"This waiver is important for the recovery of our mountain communities. As our businesses and residents rebuild, we need to ensure that we eliminate as many additional burdens as possible," said Board of Supervisors Chair Dawn Rowe, whose Third District bore the brunt of the blizzard.

The County's Land Use Services Department has created a Storm Response Team focused on supporting the public in the repair and rebuilding of their structures damaged by the extreme snowstorm event. The team will expedite the plan review and permit process for impacted residents to the fullest extent possible.

The mountain communities of San Bernardino County received an unexpected amount of snowfall in a series of storms that began on February 22. Many homes, businesses, and other structures were damaged by the weight of the snow, which exceeded what they were designed to withstand. County inspectors have red-tagged 29 structures as too damaged to be inhabited and yellow-tagged 27 damaged structures, allowing for limited occupancy. These numbers are expected to continue increasing.

Rebuilding Waivers

In addition to the rebuilding waivers, the County is operating several relief efforts for the mountain communities, including five Commodity Points of Distribution providing free food, water, and other necessary supplies to mountain residents; a donations program to channel relief from donors ranging from national corporations to individuals, a prescription delivery program, and a snow-removal reimbursement program.

The County's mountain and valley communities are predicted to experience additional rain and possibly snow. County crews are working around the clock to prepare flood control facilities such as culverts, debris basins, and channels. Residents are advised to take precautions to protect themselves and their property.

The San Bernardino County Fire Department has requested damage reports for residential and commercial buildings that sustained structural damage from the 2023 Winter Storm. If your home or business sustained moderate to major damage, please report damages at bit.ly/3LfRmM5.

For more information on these and other programs related to the blizzard recovery effort, visit snowinfo.sbcounty.gov or call the County's Storm Help Line at 909-387-3911.

mental illness, chronic health condition, and physical disability.

In the city of San Bernardino, there are a total of 238 sheltered, 120 in transitional housing, and 992 unsheltered individuals.

When asked what city they first became homeless in, 41% of those interviewed said San Bernardino.

“Providing them (unhoused population) with wraparound preventive care is critical to meeting their needs. And we alleviate any further risk of them being back in the streets,” San Bernardino Mayor Helen Tran said. “Homelessness and a lack of affordable housing are a crisis in San Bernardino and our region. These are the types of results-driven partnerships that will be key to ensuring folks are kept off the streets and have a place to call home.”

The new housing unit will provide 76 single occupancies, fully-furnished 250-square-foot apartments, and one permanent onsite manager unit. Apartments will also have a TV, kitchen, and high-speed internet.

Eight units are explicitly designed for occupants with mobility issues, and four units are outfitted for aurally or visually impaired individuals, according to the Director of Inland Empire Housing Services for Step Up, Gregory Coffos.

All units will be fully furnished, and residents will be offered wraparound services provided by Step Up.

The Beverly Hilton provided the venue to promote the highly-anticipated April 22nd matchup, featuring two outstanding and undefeated boxers who will fight at a catch weight of 136 lbs.

Great fights often match styles, charisma and perfect records in the ring, that this one promises to deliver. Gervonta Davis (28-0) vs Ryan Garcia (23-0).

Davis, National Silver Gloves champion and Junior Olympic Gold medal winner

Gervonta “Tank” Davis (28-0), a hard-hitting southpaw from the tough streets of Baltimore, committed to box his way out at a very young age by amassing an impressive 206-15 amateur career record. Davis was a three-time National Silver Gloves champion, plus two Junior Olympic Gold Medals. In January of 2017, Davis defeated IBF Featherweight Champion, Jose Pedraza (22-0) by a seventh-round KO to earn his first title.

Mentored by Floyd Mayweather Jr., Davis has credited the former World Champion with the ability to focus and keep his composure in the ring.

Garcia possesses height, reach, speed and power, utilizing all in the ring

Ryan “Flash” Garcia (23-0) as a professional, had an impressive amateur career as well, winning 215 of 230 of those early bouts, forgoing an Olympic dream and ultimately signing with Oscar de La Hoya’s Golden Boy Promotions.

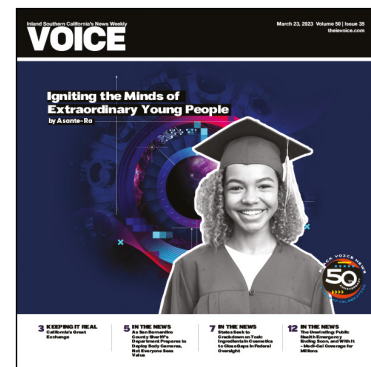

Garcia, the southern California native, trained by Joe Goosen, possesses the height, reach, speed and power, utilizing all attributes in the ring. Garcia will also have a five-inch height advantage at 5’10” and nearly four inches in reach, which he will need to keep the shorter, more aggressive Davis at the end of his jab. Boxing purists always long for a new rivalry to emerge

The appeal of the lower weight classes in boxing reminds enthusiasts of some of the great rivalries of the past.

Pacquiao-Marquez (5), Leonard-Duran (2), Barrera-Morales (3), Del la Hoya-Mosely (2) or Leonard-Duran (3) to name a few all-time greats who brought their best into the ring.

Boxing purists are always longing for a new rivalry to emerge, perhaps the coming bout between Gervonta Davis and Ryan Garcia will be act one of theirs.

what's happening now and that there is a high-tech, state of the art entrepreneur center for Black and brown women in San Bernardino.

In addition, Carter highlighted the importance of successful entrepreneurs and women coming out of the center with what they need to elevate and innovate in addition to growing, building, and scaling investable businesses.

“I represent helping women find that freedom, freedom to do whatever they want to do in life, that they'll be the imagination of their own life, and take care of their kids. We don't need to dictate to women what to be. Let women create for themselves,” proclaimed Carter.

building was completed by the world-renowned artist group YANOE x ZOUEH.

Ryan Safati (YANOE) attended the ribbon-cutting ceremony and spoke about the idea and his thinking while painting the building.

“If you walk around the building, starting from the front to the back, it slowly starts to introduce color and a little liveliness. And then on the side of the building, you can actually see a window where there's a beautiful sunset with flowers kind of trickling through, which allows you to see life within the building.”

They painted two large murals of unhoused individuals on the back of the building. Safati said he wanted to “Portray homelessness in murals and actually show that there is a brighter side to what this (housing unit) could be.”

Decree, however, seems to have done little to mitigate the problems in Riverside jails.

As noted in the lawsuit against the county, despite this history and the court's previous intervention, by the time Matus entered the county facility last year, the jail was infested with “endemic, ongoing and unabated risks of injury or death to inmates”. It was these risks, the lawsuit contends, that resulted in the death of Matus on August 11, 2022. Yet, this is only part of the story.

Falsification of records

What may ultimately prove equally as significant relative to the allegations against Bianco and his squad is that the department may have falsified records about injuries and/or deaths.

I find this significant because it means anything and everything the department previously claims about the status of those who have died in custody is suspect.

Matus experienced a medical emergency that went unnoticed for a period of time and when his condition was discovered, the emergency medical attention he received was purportedly inadequate.

At the time of his death 29 year-old Matus, was not convicted of any a crime as he was a pretrial detainee. In other words—innocent until proven guilty.

The complaint alleges Bianco and team provided inaccurate information to the Department of Justice regarding how it classified pretrial detainees who died in custody. They accomplished this classifying “pretrial” detainees like Matus as “sentenced” inferring they were post conviction prisoners.

It is believed this misclassification was intentional so as to impose a higher degree of culpability standard to the deceased. In my opinion, it also helps shape community opinions about those who died in custody as convicted criminal when for most, this is not true. Sadly, reports indicate that county jails can be a death sentence for pretrial detainees.

KEEPING IT REAL

The bottom line however, is that no one should die in custody whether or not they've been convicted.

The Matus claim is the first of many more to come according to the family's attorney.

In addition to the dysfunction Bianco has brought to the community due to his failed leadership, the patterns and practices audit may prove to be the tip of the iceberg. It now appears taxpayers should prepare for millions of dollars in settlement costs as the Matus family attorney has warned there are many more to come.

Of course this is just my opinion. I'm keeping it real.
