Preparing for Wildfire Season

Helicopter lands near Hob Fire in San Bernardino Mountains on April 26, 2023.v(Source: twitter.com)

Although the fire currently burning in a rugged and remote area of the San Bernardino mountains is minor when compared to some of the major conflagrations the State of California has experienced in recent years, it certainly serves to let us know the 2023 wildfire season is here.

The Nob Fire erupted on April 26 northwest of Lytle Creek and south of Wrightwood. It continues to burn (up to 227 acres through April 28 when it was 49% contained). The good news is because of the fire is burning in such a remote area, no structures are threatened.

This year's wet winter was certainly good news in relation to the relentless drought but experts have advised this doesn't mean we can put our guard down relative to wildfires.

The 2023 fire season is expected to be "near to slightly above the historical averages," according to Accuweather forecasters who also predict the possibility of between 60,000 to 75,000 wildfires that may burn 6.5 million to 8.25 million acres of land. This is close to the average 68,707 fires and 7,000,514 acres experienced annually between 2001 and 2020.

Fire experts also predict that between April and June, the wildfire threat statewide will be very low but the threat may gradually increase as we move further into summer when weather typically stays warmer longer and fuels that feed wildfires, including branches and trees knocked down by winds and rains from the winter storms, dry out and become fodder for potentially prolific wildfires.

The Moreno Valley Unified School District has been recognized for its exceptional commitment to music education by the NAMM foundation, earning the 2023 title of "Best Community for Music Education" among 830 school districts across the United States.

The NAMM foundation's recognition highlights the efforts of teachers, administrators, parents, students, and community leaders who support music education as part of a well-rounded education for all children. Superintendent Dr. Martinrex Kedziora expressed his joy in receiving the award, saying, "We continuously seek ways to expand our programs in visual and performing arts to offer a variety of opportunities for our students."

Mary Luehrsen, Executive Director of The NAMM Foundation, believes that music is a vital component of a well-rounded education, and emphasizes that it supports emotional health and well-being while also unleashing students' 66 creativity. "We applaud the administrators, teachers, and communities who support and sustain music education through a period of intense change and are committed to music education so that all children can explore and express themselves through music," she said.

The 2023 Best Communities for Music Education program focuses on schools and districts that have made a significant impact in developing a stronger music education presence on their campuses and in their students' lives. The School Board President Susan Smith expressed gratitude for the communal effort, saying, "We thank our staff, families and community members for supporting our programs year-round."

Moreno Valley Unified School District boasts several music programs across the district, including their newest addition, the "MVUSD Tour Band". Introduced at the district's annual State of the District in January 2023, ommunity members, healthcare workers → and city officials gathered for a roundtable discussion about the state of behavioral health services for older adults in the Inland Empire.

Some of the guests who attended the California Department of Aging's listening session shared their experiences with the healthcare system. Attendees shared that they felt ignored by doctors who didn't address their concerns during their visit.

David Wilder, Commissioner on the San Bernardino County Senior Affairs Commission,

As we're looking at what the needs are, we talked about where the helpers are coming from ... where the professionals are being trained and how they're being trained, and to look at how we might expand earlier in the process.

> - Gary Robbins Deputy Dir. of the Office of Aging told a story of having to threaten the doctors with a malpractice lawsuit if they didn't provide him with the medication he needed to manage his bipolar disorder, a condition associated with episodes of mood swings.

"I had a quadruple bypass, so they did not look at anything else. I also have chronic obstructive pulmonary disease (COPD), and I'm a diabetic. They focused on what they felt comfortable with, not what was actually going on with me," said Wilder.

In Riverside County, adults over 65 years of age comprise 45% of the disabled community.

Wilder has nine medical conditions. He said he thinks doctors focus on one or two of those and they ignore the rest, which is a problem.

The listening session fostered a call to action for more advocacy for older individuals as they navigate the healthcare system and struggle with negative stigmas, especially in regard to behavioral health services that may impact their quality of care.

One suggestion was to find more intergenerational approaches to getting seniors the help they need. Some people suggested encouraging younger individuals to volunteer to help seniors navigate telehealth services and other needs.

"As we're looking at what the needs are, we talked about where the helpers are coming from

... where the professionals are being trained and how they're being trained, and to look at how we might expand earlier in the process," said Gary Robbins, Deputy Director of the Office of Aging in Riverside County.

"Maybe that's making some changes to educational requirements around accredited programs. Maybe that's spending more time on our efforts with advocacy with our local colleges and universities and graduate programs to say, 'Hey, this is a need. It's a need that's coming quickly [and] we have to look at that pipeline."

Californians over the age of 50 have become the fastest-growing group in the state.

As a child Harry Belafonte's mother gave him some wise advice, "[N]ever go to bed at night knowing that there was something you could have done during the day to strike a blow against injustice and you didn't do it."

Today, many are giving testimony to how he devoted much of his life following his mother's counsel. A pioneering actor, singer, activist and humanitarian, Belafonte left a legacy for generations to follow.

Born in Harlem to parents of Caribbean descent-his mother was Jamaican, and his father from the island of Martinique-Belafonte died Tuesday, April 25 of congestive heart failure at his home in New York.

Although Belafonte was a celebrated entertainer, he will perhaps be best remembered around the world, as a humanitarian and for his activism, particularly in the realm of civil rights.

It's been reported that the man he most admired as a forerunner in Black entertainment activism, the late, great Paul Robeson, inspired Belafonte with a belief that artists should be the "gatekeepers of the truth."

It was purportedly Belafonte's belief in this instruction that led him to begin limiting his work in entertainment to devote his time and sincere efforts to activism in the 1960s, a devotion that continued for the rest of his life.

Belafonte did more than give lip service to the cause of liberation for Black America. As a friend and ally of the late Reverend Dr. Martin Luther King Jr., he is known to have risked both his life and livelihood in support of the movement this included raising funds and at times, personally transporting those dollars to support activists and civil rights protest activities in the deep south. He worked tirelessly, marching, meeting, advocating, organizing and participating in benefit concerts, while also inspiring and rallying his peers in the entertainment industry to donate and/or get involved.

Robeson, Belafonte became an inspiration in his own right to Black artists in the entertainment industry and many others across the country including California State Assemblymember Corey Jackson (D-60).

Jackson recalled how he first learned of Harry Belafonte while watching a Tavis Smiley hosted, State of Black America broadcast on C-SPAN in the early 2000's. "When he spoke, I thought to myself, 'Who is this guy?'" Jackson further noted how in that moment, he knew he continued on page 12

"We do have a subset that needs various types of assisted living, said Marcus Cannon, Deputy Director at Riverside University Health System Behavioral Health, This includes skilled nursing [and] Residential Care Facilities for the Elderly (RCFE).

He continued, "As those are becoming less available and less affordable, particularly our Medicare populations, that places strain and prevents people from accessing because services that gap. So, as those ca.gov) resources become more scarce and the supplemental security income (SSI) rates become more difficult to run a business on, that's certainly something we would want to highlight."

In 2021, California released its "Master Plan on Aging," which includes five goals that will improve the quality of life for seniors as they age. They include: housing for all ages and stages in life; health reimagined including access to the services needed for seniors to live at home and optimize their health and quality of life; a focus on inclusion and equity to eliminate isolation, discrimination, abuse, neglect, and exploitation among seniors; improving the quality of care and creating one million high-powering caregiving jobs; and affordable aging which includes closing the equity gap, and increasing elder economic efficiency.

Addressing this issue of affordable aging as a step to improving quality of life is essential in a state where 30% of all people in the U.S. experiencing homelessness live.

A study conducted by California State University, San Bernardino's (CSUSB) Department of Social Work, which featured 513 senior citizens who live in San Bernardino. found that 50% of respondents indicated having enough money to meet their needs frequently sometimes a problem and 49% also identified problems with paying for dental care.

In 2017, the number of seniors 55 years old and older who were unhoused was 30,251. In 2022, that number grew to 62,800. according to the California Homeless Data Integration System

"One of the things that we have to really be prepared for and keep in mind if we want to change the tide, [if] we want to change Sacramento, [if] we want to change the general public's outlook on older adults and aging [is] we have to specifically differentiate what are ageappropriate services, what are age-appropriate treatment and diagnosis," said Tony Ortego, the Older Adult administrator for Riverside University Health System.

"They [senior population] don't fall in line with regular or adult services, as adults would fall in line with certain services. They are a specialty population and we need to enhance and treat them as so."

people affected by mental illnesses.

The National Alliance for Mental Illness (NAMI) reported that one in five U.S. adults experience mental illness each year and one in six youth, aged six to 17, experience a mental health disorder each year. NAMI announced this year's theme, #MoreThanEnough, a campaign that seeks to empower "NAMI's #MoreThanEnough is a powerful message of hope and unity, emphasizing that people living with mental health conditions are deserving of the love, support and resources to help them lead fulfilling lives," said NAMI CEO Daniel H. Gillison Jr. in a statement.

addresses health disparities within the African American community, is hosting their comedy show and resource fair called "Laughing for the Health of It."

"We are thrilled to bring back 'Laughing for the Health of It' for a second year in a row, and we hope that this event will continue to raise awareness and end the stigma surrounding mental health in the Black community," Phyllis Clark, founder and CEO of Healthy Heritage, said in a statement. "Laughter is truly the best medicine and we're excited to provide a space for our community to come together, enjoy great comedy and access valuable mental health resources."

The event will feature four comedians at the Ontario Improv located in Ontario, CA as well as the opportunity for attendees to talk to mental health professionals and receive resources from 20 participating vendors who support Health Heritage's mission to end the stigma around mental illness in the community.

According to a 2022 report published by the California Health Care Foundation (CHCF), 2019 data showed that the average percentage of California adults with serious mental illness is 3.9%, however, in the Inland Empire, 7.5% of adults had a serious mental illness.

The event will take place on Sunday, May 21st, 2023 at 4:00 p.m. Tickets to attend the event are $25 and can be purchased online at https://bit.ly/HHImprovR23 or at the theater box office.

The comedy show and resource fair is sponsored by the California Department of Public Health, Marsell Wellness Center, Riverside University Health System of Behavioral Health,

Empowering Local Residents to Successfully Navigate the Healthcare System

Leticia Vaca Williams, licensed therapist, medical social worker and owner of the Urban Health Group Inc., begins her presentation about navigating the healthcare system as a whole and identifying what form of care is necessary for oneself on April 26, 2023. The discussion was hosted by the University of California, Riverside School of Medicine's Center for Healthy Communities (CHC). (Aryana Noroozi for Black Voice News / CatchLight Local) hat barriers/challenges have you experienced?" a large white poster on the wall asked. Four posters with the same question adorned the walls of the Bank of America Diversity Center at the Civil Rights Institute in Riverside, CA, where the Center for Healthy Communities (CHC) hosted their monthly community workshop on advocacy.

On one poster Briana Rice wrote about how navigating the healthcare system was difficult for her as a person who has an invisible disability. An invisible disability is recognized as a neurological, mental or physical condition that may not be visible from the outside.

Rice is the creator of the Love and Light Movement (LLM), an Inland Empire-based movement dedicated to fostering positive impacts in local communities through adventures and traveling.

"In 2021 I was in a car accident and I was rear ended by a semi-truck. I'm so grateful that I'm healing, but as I stand today, I still have a traumatic brain injury and a spinal injury," Rice shared. "With that, I have had a long healing journey, but I'm in a place where I can live a functional life, but with accommodation."

In addition to leading Love and Light, Rice is a biologist and journalist who uses her platforms to share how luxury travel has contributed to making her life better as someone traveling with a disability.

"I also want to be an advocate and a face for Black people or others with traumatic brain injuries or disabilities, who are afraid to stand up and say, 'I'm not okay.' What I find is a lot of people with brain injuries, especially because it's invisible, they're kind of embarrassed to share it."

According to "Listening to Black Californians," a study funded by the California Health Care Foundation (CHCF), "Nearly nine in 10 women (89%) speak up a great deal or quite a bit, compared to eight in 10 men (81%). Eighty-eight percent of respondents with a disability and 88% with a mental health condition speak up a great deal or quite a bit about their concerns during a visit."

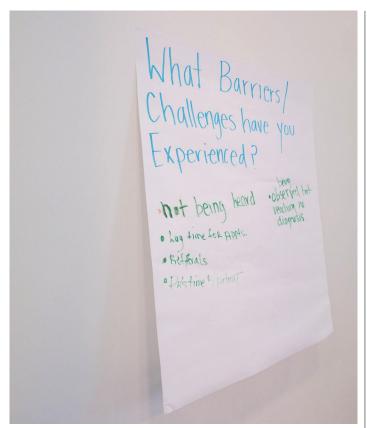

But speaking up and advocating for oneself is not without difficulties, especially for some Black people. It took Rice five months of urging and pushing doctors to reexamine her before doctors agreed to take steps to image her. Doctors found that she did, in fact, have a brain injury and injury to her spine.

"I've had people that thought I was maybe asking for time off [of work] or asking for medications. Give us the due diligence because part of my disability was so bad because I wasn't believed at first," Rice said.

Navigating the health care system can be more manageable

As Rice responded to answer the question about barriers, other participants who attended the Center for Healthy Communities' workshop on how to navigate the healthcare system also shared similar sentiments of not being heard or lack of equitable treatment in some cases.

Leticia Vaca Williams, medical social worker and owner of Urban Health Group Inc., led the workshop on how being prepared can make navigating the healthcare system less challenging.

A poster hangs for audience members to record their experiences with barriers navigating the healthcare system on April 26, 2023. After Vaca Williams finished her presentation she facilitated conversation with the audience about these experiences. Many shared that themselves or someone they know had negative experiences that kept them from seeking frequent primary and preventive care. (Aryana Noroozi for Black Voice News / CatchLight Local)

Using a preventative approach to care, Williams shared the following four ways that will help make navigating the healthcare system more manageable: know the options, make your own information known, advanced planning and finding helpers.

The first step to understanding how to navigate the healthcare system is knowing what options and services are available to patients. There are essentially four main options of care across a patient's lifespan that range from preventative care (routine check ups), crisis care (a sudden change in health status), care management (ongoing treatment and management) and end-of-life care (hospice care).

Williams explained that knowing your options and what services are available to you in the healthcare system can be beneficial not only to the patient seeking services, but to their family who is supporting them as their emergency contact.

"The landscape of healthcare is all over the place for the most part. A lot of people find themselves in the gaps. This, my friends, in the emergency department, is where a lot of people fall into. So, how many people know someone who went to the emergency department in the past year?" Williams asked participants. Several people raised their hands.

Equipping oneself with the knowledge about which hospitals have emergency departments, what insurance plans are accepted or which city has a trauma center can help reduce feelings of frustration and stress. By creating a plan, patients can make their information and preferences known before it's too late.

In addition to knowing what options are available in the healthcare system, Williams highlighted that the next step to taking a preventative approach to navigating the healthcare system is making your information known through documentation. She encouraged participants to scan a QR code that led to a quiz called "How Prepared are you for a Medical Emergency?"

The quiz asked questions like "do you have a Medical Emergency Plan?" and "do you have an emergency contact person who knows ALL of your CURRENT (past six months) medical history?"

On average, attendees who participated in the guiz received a score of 40 percent. Some shared that they haven't shared such recent information with their emergency contacts for a variety of reasons such as maintaining personal privacv.

"There's still a lot of historical ways that we think about our personal data and know what's Audience members listen as Leticia Vaca William begins her discussion about navigating the healthcare system on April 26, 2023. Her presentation was tailored to helping the audience better understand the healthcare system as a whole, from primary care to emergency to end of life services and how to advocate for and navigate necessary care in the preventive stages before a crisis event. Jackson recalled how he first learned of Harry Belafonte while watching a Tavis Smiley hosted, State of Black America broadcast on C-SPAN in the early 2000's. "When he spoke, I thought to myself, 'Who is this guy?" Jackson further noted how in that moment, he knew he would like to meet Belafonte some day. would like to meet Belafonte some day.

Jackson then fast-forwarded in time to when he was chair of the Black Student Union at Cal State University, San Bernardino and the school scheduled an event featuring Belafonte as speaker. "It was my responsibility to pick him up from the Beverly Hills Hotel [and drive him to CSUSB]. We hit it off so much that he invited me and some other students to join him for a Youth Summit," he confided. The summit was held on the site of the Onondaga Nation near Nedrow, New York in 2004.

"We talked about issues of the day and how to stay involved. The conversation was definitely important," Jackson stressed. "Danny Glover, one of his [Belafonte's] greatest mentees was also there." During the summit there was discussion about the importance of using one's celebrity for social change. He further noted how Belafonte really understood and talked about the importance of understanding the inside and outside game [of politics]...that you need both.

There was however, one thing Belafonte shared with Jackson that left a lasting impression. "He told me his greatest regret of his generation was not passing on the wisdom, knowledge and tactics of the activism and nonviolence of the 50's, 60's and 70's." In other words, how to build and sustain a successful movement.

"He said it was his generation's job to open the door so their children would not have to worry about the activism, that their children would benefit from the [economic and other progress attained]."

going on. We like to deal with it on our own, but if there's an emergency...you want to make sure folks have enough information," Williams explained.

Creating a Medical Emergency Plan is one way to gather your information and create a personalized plan for emergency contacts. The plan allows a person to include information regarding past and recent medical history, personal needs in the event of an emergency, medications and details about medical insurance.

"This is great. As I'm going through this right now, in real time — I just lost my son last summer and I'm still going through all of his stuff — passwords are really important because everybody does everything online. The phone being locked is one thing, and then every account and everything has a password, so if we could include passwords in this," Phyllis Clark shared. Clark is the founder and CEO of the Healthy Heritage Movement, Inc. (HHM), an organization created to address health disparities within the African American community.

There's value in planning ahead

Michelle Burroughs, director of the CHC, shared that prior to her mother getting ill, her mother was adamant about preparing an Advanced Health Care Directive. When Burroughs moved her mother to California to live with her and take care of her, her mother updated her documentation for her new provider.

"In the midst of it, I was not the healthcare person — that flew out the window. In my mind, I was going to fix her. I was going to make her healthy, so that was all I was fixated on. I didn't want to talk about advanced care directives and all that stuff, but she was intentional," Burroughs explained. "And thank goodness...it was a gift. I didn't realize it was a gift until that time came when it's like, 'What are her wishes? She can't speak for herself."

Williams explained that having proper written documentation ready and available is important to ensure that a patient receives the care they want and deserve. It also ensures that doctors and providers are abiding by a patient's Michelle Burroughs, Director of UCR's Community Engagement & Outreach for the Center for Healthy Communities spoke about her own experience navigating the healthcare system as well as that of supporting her family members in doing so themselves on April 26, 2023. wishes through a legally-binding document.

"When it comes to LGBTQ+ [people], there's a lot of discrimination that happens, especially with the folks who are partnered and not married, there may be some barriers to having your partner really involved in your care. You want to make sure it's documented," Williams said.

Having such documentation decreases the likelihood that a patient's wishes will be ignored and it can hold healthcare providers accountable to provide the desired care.

"Even with all this planning, you may experience some discrimination from folks who have biases toward certain folks," Williams addressed.

Results from the Listening to Black

Californians' survey found, "Over eight in 10 Black Californians believe it is extremely or very important to ensure there are financial consequences and other accountability measures when incidents of racism or discrimination occur."

Eighty percent of respondents also supported that providers and other health care professionals receive implicit bias training.

During the workshop, attendees participated in scenario-based skits between doctors and patients, and pointed out what went well and what went wrong in the skits. One common theme in the skit was patients feeling brushed off by doctors and medical personnel.

Fire Hazard Severity Zones in Riverside and San Bernardino Counties has produced a series of maps depicting Fire Hazard Severity Zones. The maps for Riverside and San Bernardino Counties are pictured here. Although the definition of "Hazard" is based on the physical conditions that create a likelihood and expected fire behavior over a 30 to 50-year period and although the assessment does not consider mitigation measures, it is important to know where your place of residence sits in relation to the red zones identified on these maps.

There are also parts of the inland region that lie within what is considered Wildland Urban interface areas that according to the National Center for Biotechnology Information, "warrant more attention during the wildfire season."

There is more information on Wildfire Severity Zones at osfm.fire.ca.gov and learn how to prepare for wildfire season at fire.ca.gov/ prepare.

With the world's continuously changing climate and the devastating impacts of wildfires in the state in recent years, it is more important than ever that we know the wildfire risks in our community and be prepared in case of emergency. This includes having an exit route in case it's needed.

Of course this is just my opinion. I'm keeping it real.

the student tour band has since performed at local and county events. The district is committed to the growth and development of this program with the support of the board of education, superintendent, district leadership, school administrators, staff, families, and the community.

Overall, the Moreno Valley Unified School District's recognition as a "Best Community for Music Education" highlights their dedication to providing a comprehensive education that includes music and the arts.

Despite progress of the Civil Rights era however, subsequent generations continued to face barriers and Belafonte felt his own generation did not do enough to pass on the knowledge of how to do the work of nonviolent activism as a way to prepare them for the struggle.

Jackson again noted how this is what Belafonte shared with him as his greatest regret. To dramatize its importance, Jackson pointed to the the 2020 death of George Floyd and how that incident finally sparked and reignited the activism of Belafonte's era.

His mark on entertainment

Before his important work as a activist and humanitarian, Belafonte's efforts as an entertainer were acclaimed. In 1954, he won a Tony Award for his lead role in the Broadway musical, Almanac. He was also the first to have a 'certified million-selling album by a solo artist for his 1956 album, Calypso. And, in 1960, Belafonte became the first Black man to win an Emmy, receiving the prestigious award for his TV special, Tonight with Harry Belafonte.

Born in poverty, Belafonte once shared how poverty was his mother's midwife. "She had her children in poverty. But she also found a road to bring us a sense of purpose, and she taught us how to be valiant in the face of oppression."

Belafonte admitted he was not quite sure precisely when social and political activism became his mission but stressed how hard it was to be born into poverty and not "develop some instinct for survival and resistance to those things that oppress you."

He advocated that dissent is central to any democracy and cautioned that "Movements don't die, because struggle doesn't die."

a lot going on, but as a patient and being on the receiving end of that - there is a way to communicate with people," said Nakita Hooper, an outreach and community resource specialist. Hooper explained that part of working in the medical field and providing services to patients is community service. Combined with existing attitudes or assumptions about patients, the lack of compassion when interacting with patients can lead to someone choosing to not get care.

As attendees like Hooper and Clark shared their perspectives on how to improve on etiquette, first-year medical students from UCR's School of Medicine shared some insight into the world of medicine and healthcare. As part of UCR's Program in Medical Education (PRIME) cohort, these medical school students are being trained to specifically address the healthcare needs of the African, Black, and Caribbean (ABC) communities of the Inland Empire.

Arturo Chavez, a first-year medical student enrolled with PRIME, noted the feedback regarding how the medical field needs to change in order to produce more empathetic physicians. Prior to medical school, Chavez was a highschool teacher for 16 years, a position he said led him to developing "soft skills" like communication.

"All of these kinds of things that force you into being a person — that makes you into a better doctor. So medical schools are seeing that it's no longer just a numbers game," Chavez said. He said test scores are no longer the deciding factor, but experience now plays a huge role in the process of being admitted into medical school.

"It's also who you are as a person and what you bring, those are the soft skills, these personal skills that you bring into play."

PRIME students are trained to work with and serve historically underrepresented communities. Part of the program requires students to engage with community members by engaging in "Community Circles" where students will share more ways in which people can advocate for themselves.

Tobacco pollution lays waste to equity and justice.

While California has achieved one of the lowest tobacco use rates in the nation, we still remain Big Tobacco's largest market in the US. Roughly 12 billion cigarettes out of the six trillion made annually worldwide are sold in California. So, what happens to these products after they've been sold?

Unsurprisingly, Big Tobacco claims no responsibility for the tobacco pollution its products generate. They desperately want us to believe that cigarette butts and vapes found on the ground are simply a litter problem caused by the people who use their products, and the solution is as simple as ashcans and beach cleanups.

Because Big Tobacco intentionally and aggressively targets lowincome communities and communities of color, a higher number of stores in these areas sell tobacco than in other places. And the more stores that sell tobacco, the higher the level of tobacco pollution-exposure for residents. Tobacco waste particularly builds up around where these products are sold and used.

As more research reveals how Big Tobacco pollutes our environment with its toxic products, it becomes a more urgent and serious community threat. All Californians are harmed by tobacco pollution — whether they use tobacco or not — much like toxic secondhand smoke exposure. And many of those most impacted can't control the environment they live in, like children, who are especially vulnerable to exposure. Tobacco pollution is associated with elevated levels of lead in children's blood. It may also load certain neighborhoods with unacceptably high levels of nicotine, benzene, and heavy metals. And these devastating impacts can last for decades after tobacco products have been sold.

Research also shows that tobacco pollution builds up around high schools at different levels depending on the socio-economic makeup of the students at the school. There are a higher number of vape shops closer to schools in communities with more Asian and African American/Black students. Vapes have all the same environmental problems as cigarette butts — plastic pollution and toxic chemicals leaking into the environment — plus, because they're electronic devices, they leave behind electronic waste, which is notoriously difficult and costly to dispose of.

Communities of color and low-income communities bear an unreasonable burden of health impacts from pollution of all kinds — from substandard housing containing lead and asbestos to industrial pollution and air pollution. Tobacco waste adds to already unacceptable levels of pollution. Bottom line: No one, and no place, is safe from Big Tobacco.
