Bianco Beware—Other Media Outlets Are Highlighting Your Failures

Since 2020 the editorial team at Black Voice News and the IE Voice has waived a red flag about the dysfunctional leadership of Riverside County's Constitutional Sheriff, Chad Bianco.

At the same time, many local organizations coalesced and called for the state attorney general to intervene and investigate Bianco. Also, on Tuesday, January 25, California Attorney General Rob Bonta announced that the California Department of Justice is investigating and will independently review an officer-involved shooting (OIS) that occurred in Hemet on Tuesday, January 18.

Now, other publications including the Orange County Register and the San Bernardino Sun, have joined calls for Bianco to be investigated for his rogue leadership and the failures of the sheriff's department entrusted to his care by Riverside County voters following reports of unprecedented police shootings in the county last year.

Readers who follow this column have read about his antics, ad nauseum. Commentaries include an ever-growing list of unbelievable but true actions that makes any reasonable person wonder whether Bianco is really that obtuse or just blatantly doesn't give "two cents" about what many constituents in Riverside County think about his leadership. Does he really believe he is untouchable or has he wrapped himself so tightly in a shield of right-wing ideology that he thinks his position is impenetrable.

For some in the community it was not enough that he apparently ascribed to what appeared to be a quid pro quo having stood as a bulwark against most reasonable efforts aimed at local police reform even though he disingenuously took a knee during a demonstration in downtown Riverside during the Uprising of 2020. Local residents participated in the movement sincerely, demanding reform in the wake of George Floyd's unconscionable murder at the hands of Minnesota police. Was taking a knee that day just a folly on his part?

His lack of support for local change by the sheriff's department in the wake of those demonstrations begged the question of whether his resistance to change was his way of maintaining fiscal support from his campaign benefactors—police unions, who also resist most—but not all change—in the status quo.

Many have held their tongues regarding Bianco's failure to protect local jail inmates from the ravages of COVID-19 until the federal government stepped in and demanded change. Although many reported on the issue, few, if any offered an opinion.

While many also reported on his railings against state mandates designed to keep residents safe and curb the spread of COVID-19 during the worse periods of the virus's spread, few editorial pages raised concerns over what such actions could mean for the vulnerable, the aged and others who suffered and died in this county from the virus while Bianco remained cavalier about such protections. Wasn't he elected to keep the community safe? The same can be said regarding his publicly expressed and dismissive attitude related to masks and the COVID-19 vaccine.

For many it was not important enough to offer commentary on Bianco's overt penchant for nepotism as if hiring his daughter and promoting his brother—twice—over others who were purportedly more qualified and in the process taking the idea of nepotism to a new

Centering Trauma to Help Survivors of Domestic and Intimate Partner Violence Heal

Katie Licari | Staff

If you or someone you know are experiencing domestic violence, local and statewide resources can be found here or call the National Domestic Violence Hotline at 1-800-799-SAFE (7233).

Dr. Candace Burton, an associate professor of nursing at UC Irvine, teaches her students and clinicians about the importance of screening and trauma-informed practices to help survivors of intimate partner violence access resources and improve medical outcomes.

Burton said that screenings aren't more widely used because doctors and medical providers feel uncomfortable and unequipped to deal with intimate partner violence. "Screening is giving your patients permission to tell you something terrible through asking," said Burton.

Burton stressed that it's important for health care providers to consistently ask screening questions as a way to build trust with a survivor dealing with trauma. In the classroom, she has her students recite "every patient, every time" to reinforce screenings as a habitual part of patient interactions.

Intimate partner violence can have lasting effects long after physical signs of abuse heal. People who fight off an abusive partner may face criminal charges. Leaving an abusive relationship may mean a loss of stable housing. There can also be long-lasting physical health effects, ranging from depression to brain damage.

Traumatic brain injury (TBI) impacts how the brain works and can be caused by a physical force, like a punch in the face; a penetrating force, like a gunshot, or by cutting off oxygen to the brain through strangulation. Traumatic brain injuries can result in mild concussions to permanent disability and death.

There is scarce research examining the long-term health implications of intimate partner violence. A 2002 study analyzed data from three Philadelphia hospital emergency departments. Research found 38% of IPV victims screened in one ER were experiencing TBI injury; 30% of these patients reported losing consciousness at least once. The study concluded that there's a need for increased screening for TBI in patients experiencing intimate partner violence.

Intimate partner violence victims with TBI can experience dizziness, seizures and memory issues. A 2011 literature review from researchers at Johns Hopkins and the National Institute of Nursing Research, found that the length of an abusive relationship increased the likelihood and severity of negative health outcomes, including post-concussive syndrome (which is related to mild TBI), post-traumatic stress disorder and depression. 92% of intimate partner violence victims seeking services at crisis shelters were experiencing PTSD.

The medical community can improve outcomes for survivors by routinely screening for violence and abuse during visits and providing trauma-informed care, said Burton. Trauma-informed care is founded on six principles:

- Safety: Ensure the patient feels physically and psychologically safe.
- Trustworthiness and transparency: Organizational decisions are made transparently to foster trust.
- Peer support: Connecting with other survivors establishes safety and builds trust.
- Collaboration: Everyone in an organization, including non-medical and non-therapist staff, have a role to play in ensuring a therapeutic environment.
- Empowerment and choice: Trauma survivors, who have often been disempowered, are empowered through goal-setting and decision-making.
- Cultural competency: Recognizes and responds to the cultural, racial and social needs of survivors.

Wear a Mask and Stay Healthy During Flu Season

Phyllis Kimber-Wilcox | Staff

Flu season is here and with the Omicron variant causing increasing spread of the virus, hospitalizations and staff shortages have also increased.

“Omicron is spreading faster than any other COVID-19 variant,” said Dr. Sylvia Gates Carlisle, Operations Medical Director at Beaver Medical Group and Director of Practice Management Curriculum at UC Riverside Family Medicine Residency.

According to Carlisle, Blacks in California are among the least vaccinated groups in the state.

Dr. Jerry P. Abraham, Director of Kedren Vaccines in South Los Angeles stated, “If you’re not vaccinated, get your shot as soon as possible. If you are eligible, get boosted. It can help increase your immunity almost immediately. Now’s also the time for parents and guardians to help get their eligible youth vaccinated and boosted,” If you haven’t been vaccinated you can make an appointment by following this link.

Masks provide protection

Masks are an important way to prevent infection. Using well-fitting medical grade masks (N95, KN95) is recommended. “Masking helps stop the spread of COVID-19 as well as the common cold and flu, so it’s important for people to continue to mask up, regardless of vaccination status, to protect ourselves and those around us,” said Dr. Gates. It is also important to take the recommended precautions to stay healthy. Personal safety measures include frequent hand washing, wearing a well-fitting mask, getting tested and staying home when sick.

This week, free masks began arriving at CVS, Rite Aid Costco, Walgreens and Albertsons locations across the country. More than 400 million non surgical N95 masks are being made available (three per person) by the Biden Administration. The masks, which are approved by the National Institute for Occupational Safety and Health (NIOSH), are being released from the Department of Health and Human Services (HHS) Strategic National Stockpile. It is purported to be the largest deployment of personal protective equipment in U.S. history,

According to Dr. Sylvia Gates Carlisle, Blacks are among the least vaccinated groups in the state. (source: lagrant.com)

according to the White House.

By mid-February, masks will be made available to all health centers and health center programs that choose to order them according to HHS.

Differences Between Cold, Flu and COVID-19

According to Dr. Abraham, the difference

“If you’re not vaccinated, get your shot as soon as possible. If you are eligible, get boosted. It can help increase your immunity almost immediately,” said Dr. Jerry P. Abraham, Director of Kedren Vaccines in South Los Angeles (source: lagrant.com) between cold and flu symptoms and COVID-19 are difficult to distinguish because they are all respiratory illnesses, it is important to pay attention to symptoms as many overlap,” he said. “With the common cold, you typically don’t have a fever unless you are severely sick. Overall, milder symptoms include a stuffy nose and sore

Race and Health Care: New Report Shares Insights on Black Californians

Antonio Ray Harvey | California Black Media

In keeping with its commitment to end health inequities, the California Health Care Foundation (CHCF) released the first phase of a three-part study documenting how race and racism shape the health care experiences of Black Californians.

The report, “In Their Own Words: Black Californians on Racism and Health Care,” was written by health services researcher Dr. Linda Cummings. The study synthesizes hour-long interviews with 100 Black Californians conducted from June to August 2021.

According to Katherine Haynes, a senior program officer serving on CHCF’s People-Centered Care team, “The project is to understand the interactions between racism, health and healthcare. (The first phase) is in-depth interviews that are really designed to gain a deep understanding of Black Californians’ perception of racism in this state’s healthcare system and its impact on them.”

Goals and objectives of report

CHCF’s main objective is to advance meaningful, measurable improvements in the way the health care delivery system provides care to the people of California, specifically individuals who are financially challenged and whose needs are not well served in the healthcare system.

EVITARUS, a Black-owned Los Angeles-based public opinion research firm, is conducting the three-phase Study for CHCF. The firm has extensive experience polling California’s diverse constituencies and maintains long-standing relationships with Black-led community organizations and media.

“Dr. Linda Cummings wrote the report and we did the research. We designed the study, performed the data collection as well as the data analysis that supported Dr. Cummings and her findings,” according to Shakari Byerly, EVITARUS Managing Partner. “It was a thorough recruitment process and screening of those that indicated an interest in participation. The participants also received an honorarium (of $125) for their participation.”

Experiences with Black physicians

Findings from the first phase cautioned that just having a Black physician did not automatically result in better care. Negative experiences with Black physicians and other health providers of color can be an obstacle to health care, too.

“It is the subtle microaggressions that happen within the healthcare field. So, I am resistant to get help unless I feel comfortable with the person who may or may not look like me,” a 33-year-old Black woman from the San Francisco Bay Area stated. “But I also have been discriminated against a lot from Black physicians as well.”

Cummings wrote that more than half of the respondents said that, at some time in their lives, they had been unhoused, without a stable place to live, or stayed with a family member or friend because they did not have a place of their own.

Notably, the study highlighted that the participants took their health care seriously. “The respondents really spoke about how they were taking action to pursue health, advocating for themselves, in the healthcare system and taking steps to protect themselves from harm in the healthcare system,” said Haynes.

Nearly all the respondents (93%) had some form of health insurance. The majority were covered through employer-sponsored plans at 40% or Medi-Cal at 26%, the study reports.

Bridges That Carried Us Over Project: Documenting Black History in the IE

Do you have historic photos of Black community life in the Inland Empire?

We are especially interested in photos that capture civil rights organizations and protests, Black churches, businesses and social organizations (Masons, clubs), and photos of historic neighborhoods (like Mead Valley, eastside Riverside, westside San Bernardino, Stuart Street in Redlands, etc.)

Bring photos to the following events:

- Feb 19: Perris Valley, Mead Valley, Riverside (Mrs. Moses' Birthday Celebration) 10:30a – 1:30p
- Feb 25: CSUSB Pioneer Breakfast
- Feb 27: New Hope Baptist Church

said becoming a mother was a pivotal moment in becoming a survivor. “What changed for me was my son,” said Shiuli.

After giving birth, she was resting in bed in the recovery room. Her boyfriend began yelling and berating her. Several nurses in the ward were so alarmed with how he treated her, they called a social worker. The call changed the trajectory of Shiuli's life. She left her abusive boyfriend and moved in with relatives. Her social worker connected her with resources to heal from the abuse.

Shiuli's experience at the hospital highlights the importance of screenings for intimate partner and domestic violence (which also includes the abuse of children) by clinicians. Despite the impact they can have, these screenings are not a universal standard in health care.

Trauma-informed Pathways to Healing

Trauma-informed care improves outcomes for survivors of trauma and intimate partner violence. According to Burton, interest in implementing trauma-informed practices has increased during the pandemic. The trauma and burnout of health care workers stemming from COVID-19 has opened up conversations about trauma in patient care.

The foundation of trauma-informed care is acknowledging that there is trauma to deal with and addressing it head on. Certain groups, particularly from marginalized communities, are more likely to have experienced trauma because of racial, social or cultural dynamics. “There is a greater likelihood if [the patient] is from a marginalized group that they have experienced intimate partner violence or abuse of some kind because predators tend to prey on people who are more vulnerable,” said Burton.

Government Working to Improve Equity in Distribution and Use of COVID-19 Treatment Options

Breanna Reeves | Staff

Over the last two years, the pandemic has exposed and uncovered inequities that exist in the American health care system. Throughout the pandemic, concerns regarding disproportionate access to COVID-19 testing, vaccines, masks and COVID-19 treatments have been brought to the forefront.

A study that examined racial and ethnic disparities among people who received COVID-19 treatments was recently released as part of the Center for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC) Morbidity and Mortality Weekly Report. The study found that between March 2020 and August 2021, there was a lower use of monoclonal antibody treatments among Black, Asian, Hispanic and other races who tested positive for COVID-19 relative to white patients.

Monoclonal antibodies are molecules created in a laboratory that act as substitute antibodies in the body and in the case of COVID-19, attempt to block or neutralize the virus that causes COVID-19 to attach to human cells.

Research noted that the overall use of monoclonal antibody treatment was “infrequent,” but found that Hispanic patients received monoclonal antibody treatment 58 percent less often than did non-Hispanic patients. Black patients received treatment 22 percent less often than white patients and Asian patients received treatment 48 percent less often during November 2020 - August 2021.

The study surveyed 41 health care systems that participated in the National Patient-Centered Clinical Research Network. There were several limitations to the report such as the short period of time by which the survey was conducted, it only examined 41 health care systems and did not identify the underlying causes for the observed disparities.

Despite the limitations, Dr. Cameron Webb, Senior Policy Advisor for COVID-19 Equity on the White House COVID-19 Response Team, explained that although the findings are not nationally representative, they are instructive and give insight to what is happening in regard to COVID-19 and disparities. According to Dr. Webb, an updated study is needed since the use of monoclonal antibody treatments significantly increased after August 2021 which is when the research cuts off.

“But even that notwithstanding, we’ve done a lot to build equity into the monoclonal antibody treatments, but also with these new oral antiviral (pills) because of the three monoclonals, only one of them is effective against Omicron,” said Dr. Webb in an interview with Black Voice News/ IE Voice.

Dr. Webb also pointed out that the study only captures data from people who received monoclonal antibody treatment in healthcare settings, but didn’t account for government-run infusion sites that were set up.

The treatments were initially approved for Emergency Use Authorization by the Food and Drug Administration (FDA) beginning in November 2020. Since then, availability of the treatments have increased across the U.S. as COVID-19 cases increased.

There are several kinds of monoclonal antibody treatment options available to individuals who are identified as immunocompromised and have other medical conditions. These treatments are intended for people who experience mild-to-moderate symptoms and who may be at higher risk for progression to severe COVID-19. The National Institute of Health released guidance for prioritization of treatment.

Earlier in the pandemic, there were three kinds of monoclonal antibody treatments that were effective against circulating variants: Regeneron (combination medicine of Casirivimab and Imdevimab), Lilly (Bamlanivimab and using the other two products, according to Dr. Jennifer Chevinsky, deputy public health officer at Riverside University Health System.

The CDC COVID-19 Data Tracker estimates

“But even that notwithstanding, we’ve done a lot to build equity into the monoclonal antibody treatments, but also with these new oral antiviral (pills) because of the three monoclonals, only one of them is effective against Omicron”

Etesevimab) and Sotrovimab. These treatments are administered through injections into the vein or muscle, or through an infusion.

However, with the onset of Omicron, which is highly transmissible and more aggressive than previous variants, only Sotrovimab is effective against it, so there has been a shift away from that Omicron now accounts for 99 percent of COVID-19 cases which has prompted the FDA and health facilities across the U.S. to stop the use of Regeneron and Lilly monoclonal antibody treatments.

Another monoclonal antibody treatment is Evusheld. Evusheld is an investigational drug, not yet approved by the FDA, but was given Emergency Use Authorization (EUA) in December. Evusheld is a pre-exposure preventative medication for those who are at the highest risk of severe disease as a result of COVID-19.

“(Evusheld) is anticipated to protect them for around six months. And the important part of it [is] it’s not in replacement of the vaccine, but it’s in addition. So, it’s people that perhaps got the vaccine, but they may not still [be able to] mount as much of an immune response because of the condition that they have. And this additional treatment can help provide protection for them,” explained Dr. Chevinsky.

In Riverside County, there are two regional Evusheld locations: Desert Regional Medical Center and Eisenhower Medical Center.

In addition to monoclonal antibody treatments, there are other treatment options such as an oral antiviral treatment and Remdesivir. Oral antiviral treatments are pills that can be taken if an individual tests positive for COVID-19 and is effective if taken within five days of having symptoms. There are two types of antiviral treatments: Pfizer’s Paxlovid and Merck’s Molnupiravir, which can only be obtained with a prescription from a doctor.

Remdesivir is an additional treatment option that is administered through the veins and is completed over three consecutive days. The treatment requires a patient to come in one day, then return home and do so for the following two days. These treatments are regulated through hospital facilities who order the medication, so it may not be offered at all hospital facilities in the county.

Dr. Chevinsky explained that the challenge with the oral antiviral pills and the monoclonal antibody treatment Sotrovimab is that these products are allocated from the federal level to the state and then to the local level. There has been a shortage with both products, but for different reasons. The antiviral pill is a newer product that only became available for emergency use last December for the treatment of mild-to-moderate coronavirus disease.

Riverside County is still experiencing an increase in COVID-19 cases and a slow rate of vaccinations and boosters. Riverside has reported 2,393 new cases on January 25 and 1,069 current hospitalized patients, including

COVID-19 Treatment Options

Monoclonal Antibody Treatment

- One IV infusion of Sotrovimab
- Must receive this treatment within 10 days of having symptoms
- Given after testing positive for COVID-19 to those who are at higher risk for progression to severe COVID-19

Evusheld

- Monoclonal Antibody treatment given as a pre-exposure prevention to COVID-19
- One dose, given as two shots in one sitting
- Not for the treatment of COVID-19; given in addition to COVID-19 vaccine
- For individuals who are immunocompromised or who may have other health conditions such as diabetes or asthma

*Evusheld is an investigational drug and is not yet FDA approved.

Intravenous Treatment

- Remdesivir is a treatment administered through the veins that is completed over three consecutive days
- Used in the treatment of COVID-19 for those with mild-to-moderate COVID-19, and who are at high risk for progression to severe COVID-19, including hospitalization or death
- Can also be administered for the treatment of COVID-19 in non-hospitalized adults and pediatric patients (12 years of age and older)

Oral Antiviral Treatments

- Two pill options: Paxlovid and Molnupiravir
- Must be prescribed by doctor
- Must receive this treatment within the first five days of having symptoms

168 Intensive Care Unit (ICU) patients.

According to Dr. Chevinsky, monoclonal antibody treatment sites in the county are going through all of the products week by week. “And this is what we’ve seen for a number of weeks now is that we’re maxing out the product every single week because of the need. We definitely are in a supply situation where the resources are tight around there.”

COVID-19 treatments are reserved for people who are at a higher risk such as people in older age groups and those with underlying health conditions like heart disease or cancer. Each treatment option has a specific assessment and criteria that allows medical professionals to examine which treatment is the best option for individuals.

Riverside County uses Sotrovimab across four sites throughout the county. People can seek monoclonal antibody treatment, even without a physician referral, if they call ahead of time at the following centers: Riverside University Health System Medical Center (951-486-6520), Desert Oasis Healthcare (760-969-6555), Eisenhower Medical Center (760-834-3516) and First American Wellness.

“All the regional centers that we set up, the idea behind them...was an equity focus in mind — wanting to remove barriers, so that regardless of what plan a person has in terms of insurance, even if they don’t have an insurance, that they were able to access any one of these sites without any out of pocket costs,” said Dr. Chevinsky.

In an effort to fill geographical gaps, Riverside added additional “equity sites” in communities that may not have access to local pharmacies like CVS or Rite-aid that have antiviral medication on hand, but still need access to COVID-19 treatments.

Dr. Webb addressed that with all the efforts to address gaps in access and availability to COVID-19 treatment and other resources, the pandemic has highlighted that “not enough people have access to the care that they need.”

“I think what it’s also teaching us is that not all communities are affected in the same way. And the communities that are disproportionately affected, we’d do well as a government to provide outsized resources to those communities. It helps everybody by keeping our communities safe,” said Dr. Webb.

Riverside Launches New Learning Program for County's Youngest Learners

(source: unitedwaydallas.org)

Phyllis Kimber Wilcox | Staff

As part of its Literacy by the Fifth Grade Initiative the Riverside County Office of Education in partnership with Footsteps2Brilliance Inc. has created a new digital learning platform for students preschool aged through fifth grade. The new platform, offered in both English and Spanish and designed to make learning interactive and fun, can be accessed through any digital medium.

The platform includes everything from pre-reading activities and read-to-you stories to alphabet recognition songs and grammar rules games for the youngest learners in Riverside County. These new, interactive tools will boost early learning and foster love of reading.

as they play through free apps available now on smartphones, tablets, and computers, at www.myf2b.com/riverside.

“It is a well-known adage that students who learn to read by 3rd grade, will then read to learn for the rest of their lives. But, if students aren’t confident readers, they will struggle to learn as they approach middle school, and become a dropout risk in high school,” said Riverside County Superintendent of Schools, Dr. Edwin Gomez.

Diversity within the Black community

The mix of participants also reflected the ethnic diversity of Black Californians. The majority of respondents identified as Black or African American (83%), Black and multiracial (6%), African (5%), Afro-Caribbean (4%), Afro-Latino (1%), and Black-Native American (1%), Byerly said.

“Everyone identified as Black, but we recognize that people come from different backgrounds,” Byerly said. “It supports our research design to make sure that we show a full range of our community in California.”

Byerly also shared that 62% of the participants said they have experienced “some type of discrimination” based on their background while getting healthcare for themselves. About 59% said they were treated unfairly while getting healthcare for a family member, she added.

Phase II of the Listening to Black Californians study examines “structural issues” in the health care system gleaned from focus group discussions with Black Californians and key health care stakeholders,” Haynes said.

The third and final phase of the study will be a statewide survey of Black California residents. It will be crafted to evaluate the extent to which the Phase I and Phase II findings are represented in the general Black Californian population.

“The second phase with 18 focus groups, was completed right before the winter holidays. The third phase, we hope, will have over 3,000 Black-Californian participants,” Hayes said. “The final report is expected in the summer of 2022.”

Reparations Task Force to Host Public “Listening Sessions”

Antonio Ray Harvey | California Black Media

To ensure Black communities across the state voice their thoughts and concerns and provide input, the California Task Force to Study and Develop Reparations Proposals for African Americans is partnering with six “anchor organizations” to host public listening sessions.

Each organization will help the task force hear various perspectives of Black Californians as it assesses the state’s involvement in slavery and Jim Crow discrimination. The committee expects that process to inform the work they do when developing recommendations for compensating African Americans for past and ongoing race-based injustices.

The Coalition For A Just and Equitable California (CJEC) is one of the host organizations. A state-wide network of organizations, associations, and individuals united to push reparations for the descendants of enslaved men and women, the CJEC will participate in 12 sessions involving Black Californians from different social and economic backgrounds.

“We’ve been at this since 2019. We worked hard for this assignment and it’s really a testament of waking up, networking, and organizing Black folks around the state,” Chris Lodgson, a founding member of CJEC, told California Black Media.

“What we are expected to do as part of that process is produce at least two listening sessions and the task force will support them. These sessions will allow Black Californians to think about what reparations should look like and how it should be implemented,” Lodgson continued.

Along with CJEC, the Black Equity Collective, Afrikan Black Coalition, Black Power Network, Congregations Organized for Prophetic Engagement (COPE), and Othering and Belonging Institute are the anchor organizations helping to plan the sessions.

Lodgson said CJEC will “coordinate” with the other five anchor organizations to prevent “doubling efforts” and provide a cross-section of opportunities and ideas from the sessions.

“At least two Task Force members are expected to attend each listening session,” Lodgson said.

“We really want to talk to people in our community that get overlooked the most,” Lodgson said. “People who are unhoused, formerly incarcerated, from the foster care system, street organizations, et cetera, are the people we want to hear from. Their thoughts matter, too.”

At its first two-day meeting of 2022 on Thursday, Jan. 27, and Friday, Jan. 28, task force members explained in more detail the rationale and process of the listening sessions.

During the upcoming meetings, task force member Dr. Cheryl Grills will highlight the task force’s “Community Engagement Plan, providing more information about the listening sessions.

The January 27th meeting also featured testimony from experts during the “Discrimination in Technology,” “Community Eligibility,” and “Public Health” segments on Jan. 27.

During the task force’s second meeting last July, Grills introduced the idea of the listening sessions.

Black communities in the southern, northern, and central parts of the state (where many Black farmers reside) are expected to be involved in the process.

“Black folks exist in an ecosystem and the system includes a diverse, cultural base of people, social class, education levels, etc.,” Grills said. “So how do we make sure that those people, who are a part of the ecosystem, are impacted? They need to be at the table.”

Grills was appointed to the National African American Reparations Commission (NAARC) earlier this month. She is a professor of Psychology at Loyola Marymount University, former national President of the Association of Black Psychologists, and founder/director of a non-profit program evaluation organization called Imoyase Community Support Services.

NAARC is a distinguished assembly of activists, scholars, civil rights, human rights, labor, and faith leaders. The organization devised a 10-Point Reparations Program to serve as a guide and frame of reference for the growing reparations movement in the country.

“Dr. Grills has been amazing. She’s done a great job in leading our community engagement effort,” Lodgson said. “She’s been largely responsible for looking for groups to be anchor organizations, bringing together resources, and facilitating the conversations.”

On Friday, Jan. 28, the California Task Force heard testimonies from experts discussing mental health and physical health.

California’s Assembly Bill (AB) 3121, titled “The Task Force to Study and Develop Reparation Proposals for African Americans,” created a nine-member commission to investigate race-based inequity in education, labor, wealth, housing, taxation and more.

The commission is also charged with analyzing the state’s involvement in slavery, segregation, and the historic denial of Black

Shiuli is a night jasmine flower.

For students and clinicians who don't feel equipped to handle trauma or intimate partner violence, Burton encourages them to practice a "warm referral." After a patient discloses a traumatic experience, such as intimate partner violence, the doctor makes the call for resources and support with their patient. A warm referral is similar to what Shiuli's nurses did for her when they called a social worker on her behalf as opposed to giving her the information to act on alone.

Breaking the Cycle

The trauma-informed care program Shiuli's social worker connected her with is provided by the Corona-Norco United Way. The organization serves northwest Riverside County, which includes the cities of Eastvale, Corona, Norco and unincorporated communities in the surrounding area.

"Abuse is an actual choice. It is not a sickness or an illness," said Dr. Alia Rodriguez, Corona-Norco United Way's CEO. "Physical abuse is very painful and traumatic, but when the bruises and bones heal, there is still the mental gaslighting to deal with."

The organization offers a 12-week program tailored to each individual seeking assistance. It includes peer-support groups, goal-setting for the future, career services and help enrolling in government assistance programs. For Shiuli, learning about intimate partner violence was critical to her recovery. The program, which is available to domestic abuse survivors and their families, helped her recognize the red flags abusers tend to have.

Corona-Norco United Way also offers programming for survivors' children. Kids are taught how to cope with the violence they've been exposed to and may have also experienced first-hand. The focus is on learning how to healthily articulate and express emotions, how to avoid being a bully and how to avoid abusive partners when they're older.

People learn what is normal in a relationship from behaviors and dynamics in their parents' relationships, said Rodriguez. "We are very passionate about breaking the cycle for kids," she continued.

Shiuli said completing the program has helped her break the cycle of abuse for herself and for her now 1-year-old son.

"I feel more inner strength because, when I look at my son everyday, I want better for [him]," Shiuli said. "My home shouldn't be a battlefield. It should be peaceful, especially for a newborn. That was the strength I tapped into."

**Shiuli requested we use a pseudonym to protect her safety.*

Editor's note: The terms "intimate partner violence" and "domestic violence" have purposefully not been used interchangeably in this story, as there are nuanced differences between the two. Although not universally recognized as separate by law enforcement and other entities, intimate partner violence is committed within the confines of a romantic relationship. Domestic violence, however, includes abuse against both adults – significant others or other family members – and children.

"The pandemic has only heightened the urgency to focus on reading proficiency, so we are excited to be offering all Riverside County families and school districts a comprehensive literacy support tool that already engages millions of students every day in over 100 districts across the United States [including San Bernardino]," Dr. Gomez continued.

As a part of the initiative the superintendent has challenged students to read five million words by April 2022. The Literacy by the Fifth Grade website provides additional resources for teachers, parents and students as a part of the program.

throat...cough, fever, fatigue and muscle aches are common to both flu and COVID-19. Loss of smell is a classic indicator of having COVID-19 and is rarely seen with the common cold and flu."

level, barely warranted a mention even though it is a clear violation of the county charter as well as state and federal guidelines.

Many also remained silent as Bianco, again, in clear violation of local, state and federal regulations, pranced around the county, speaking at Republican political gatherings while dressed in full uniform as if he were on official sheriff department business.

Although many reported on revelations late last year pertaining to his membership in the right-wing extremist group the Oath Keeper as well as his marble-mouthed explanation surrounding it. The Oath Keepers are being investigated for its role in attempting to overthrow the U.S. government in January 2020. Yet, few, if any, local publications have offered editorial commentary on how such a membership could be reflective of Bianco's personal ideology or its racist implications.

Now, data reveals the Riverside County Sheriff's Department under Bianco's stewardship ended the year 2021 with the highest number of citizens killed by Riverside County deputies in recorded history. I know we will hear the usual defense about rising crime, but rising crime is no excuse for Riverside deputies who purportedly shot about 30, apparently, unarmed citizens.

Poor leadership is one way to define Bianco's work since he took office, incompetent could be another. If however what we have witnessed is the result of neither, I shudder to think that what we are experiencing under his leadership of the sheriff's department might be intentional.

As noted, organizations across the county have cried out for an investigation into Chad Bianco and the Riverside County Sheriff's Department. The Black Voice News and IE Voice editorial team has remained critical of Bianco and called out his failures at nearly every opportunity.

We celebrate and welcome the voices of other publications willing to not only shine a light on his failures but also raise their voices on behalf of the community by joining calls for an official investigation.

Of course, this is just my opinion. I'm keeping it real.
