Elections 2022...Why We Have Work to Do

The earliest state primary of the 2022 Election really means in the near term. When approved cycle was held Tuesday, March 1 in Texas where despite strong resistance from Democrats in the state's legislature, the state has enacted a slate of repressive voting laws in an attempt to suppress the electoral power of its rising minority population.

Also, on March 1, President Joe Biden, during his first State of the Union address stated the obvious, "The most fundamental right in America is the right to vote - and to have it counted. And it's under assault. In state after state, new laws have been passed, not only to suppress the vote, but to subvert entire elections."

The president then declared, "We cannot let this happen." What? Not to be disrespectful but come on Joe, haven't 49 states introduced more than 440 pieces of legislation with provisions by the U.S. Senate and Brown Jackson, takes her place on a 6 to 3 court where ultra conservative Republicans hold the majority and with most of them in these lifetime positions being relatively young in age, it is likely it will be years before her vote may be able to sway the court away from conservative rulings—unless Biden has courage to expand the court, which by the way, has happened six times in the nation's history-but it is unlikely

In the meantime, Brown Jackson's judicial acumen and brilliance will be reflected in what most of us hope will be her profound and compelling dissents that will help build a roadmap for constructive, mainstream and inclusive judicial guidance in the future.

As the court stands today, to expect Brown

"I trust that you will so live today as to realize that you are masters of your own destiny, masters of your fate..."

-Marcus Garvey

restricting the right to vote, and haven't 19 states already passed 34 laws making it more challenging for minorities, students and seniors to cast their ballots?

A hollow request and convenient pivot

Biden then proceeded to ask the Senate to pass the Freedom to Vote Act and the John Lewis Voting Rights Act as well as the Disclose Act even as we know, his plea fell on deaf ears and passage of the legislation is not likely to happen with "brick wall" Republicans and two complicit Democrats--Senators Joe Manchin (D-WV) and Kyrsten Lea Sinema (D-AZ) who appear to have no concern for anything beyond filling their personal and political fortunes with corporate sponsorships and to garner more political favor with other financial power brokers.

For this reason, it was difficult to hear Biden's comments as anything beyond pandering from which he quickly pivoted to discuss his history making nomination of the first Black woman to the U.S. Supreme Court Ketanji Brown Jackson.

We celebrate and support Brown Jackson's nomination and yet know the reality of what it

Jackson will be able to persuade the six Republican justices to abandon their mission to further establish and embed White conservative order on a rapidly, demographically changing nation (with the help of racially confused Justice Clarence Thomas) is a hopeful but unrealistic expectation.

So, as much as we celebrate Brown Jackson's appointment it does not numb us, nor does it erase from our consciousness the administration's failure to protect the voting rights of those who saved Biden's campaign and buoyed him to office after White voters in Iowa and New Hampshire turned away from him during the early days of the 2020 primary.

More police funding no police reform

It was also during the 2020 Election cycle that Black people and their supporters raised their collective voices for justice and police reform. Biden said all the right things in 2020 but during his State of the Union the other day he was mute on the issue of police reform. We also have not forgotten his failure to pass the 2021 George Floyd Justice in Policing Act—a failure abetted by n March 1st Governor Gavin Newsom announced the City of San the center of civic pride with its storefronts, art gallery, restaurants and Bernardino has received a grant totalling more than $722,000 as part of the state's Clean California Grant local beautification program.

"This is just another step in our efforts to revitalize downtown," said Councilmember Theodore Sanchez who represents San Bernardino's 1st Ward. "Thanks to our Public Works staff for pursuing these funds, I look forward to attending events there with residents and visitors very soon."

The funds will be used to clean, restore and beautify the alleyway behind Fourth Street between D and E Streets.

What to expect

The restoration project in the arts district of downtown San Councilmember Theodore Bernardino will include construction of a stage as well as a new Sanchez represents San neon archway and a wall with murals to be painted by local Bernardino's 1st Ward. artists.

commercial buildings, including the Enterprise building which serves as a focal point for the city. In addition, many of the city's most important cultural events take place in the area such as the city's art walk which displays the talents of local musicians and artists.

The project will include new asphalt, and trees and shrubs will be planted. An upgrade to the irrigation system is also planned. Bike racks will be installed as well as tables, benches and an automatic gate. The city plans to utilize the revitalized area to provide arts, education and outreach programs to the city.

The grant

The statewide Clean California Grant Program is designed to provide funding for local projects to upgrade, clean and revitalize infrastructure (roads, streets etc.) and points of interest. Work on the project is scheduled to begin later this year.

Masks in Schools: Guidance Shifting from Requirement to Recommendation

(courtesy istock.com)

Breanna Reeves | Staff

As one of the last states with mask requirements in place for students, California officials have decided to ease indoor mask policies in schools and childcare settings, moving from "requiring" students to wear masks indoors while on campus, to "recommending" masks in schools.

California, along with Oregon and Washington, announced they will be updating their masking guidance beginning at 11:59 p.m. on March 11. Governor released a statement regarding the update, explaining that California will continue to adjust guidelines based on the latest data and science available.

"Masks are an effective tool to minimize regions throughout the state spread of the virus and future variants, especially when transmission rates are high," requiring masks on school camp said Newsom. "We cannot predict the future of recommending masks be worn.

the virus, but we are better prepared for it and will continue to take measures rooted in science to keep California moving forward."

On Monday, Secretary Dr. Mark Ghaly of California Health and Human Services discussed the logic behind the state's decision to relax the mask mandate in schools. The state monitored data trends over the last two weeks which allowed the health officials to make a decision regarding the mask mandate.

Over the last two weeks, California reported a 66% decrease in cases and case rates across the state and a 48% decrease in hospitalizations. Ghaly recognized that case rates differ across regions throughout the state, but as cases decline overall, the state will move away from requiring masks on school campuses to strongly recommending masks be worn.

According to Ghaly, health officials in the state "see ourselves getting lower and see less of community transmission."

As of March 1 masks are also no longer required for unvaccinated individuals, but are strongly recommended for all individuals in most indoor settings, according to the California Department of Public Health. However, masks are still required for everyone in "high transmission" settings such as public transit, congregate facilities and jails.

What's happening locally

While masks will no longer be required in school settings, the state is still reporting low vaccination rates among kids aged five to 11. Among this age group, 30% of children are fully continued on page 8

San Bernardino Townhall: Descendants of Tuskegee Experiment Victims to Discuss Vaccine Hesitancy

S.E. Williams | Executive Editor

Despite the decline of COVID-19 cases in some parts of California, organizations throughout the state continue to work diligently to increase vaccination rates in communities with high COVID-19 transmission and low vaccination rates.

Current California Department of Public Health data indicates that a significant number of Blacks and Latinos still need to be vaccinated, with Latinos comprising the highest number of cases and deaths in California.

The California Association of African American Superintendents and Administrators (CAAASA) has partnered with the San Bernardino City Unified School District (SBCUSD) to host vaccine clinics at schools within the area.

As part of the campaign, CAAASA will hold an in-person town-hall style meeting on Wednesday, March 9, from 6:00 p.m. to 8 00 p.m. at the Board of Education Building (Board Community Room), 777 North F Street, San Bernardino 92401. The town-hall will also be live streamed on the SBCUSD YouTube channel.

The event will feature Lillie Tyson Head, daughter of Freddie Lee Tyson, a United States Public Health Service Syphilis Study Victim at Tuskegee and Macon County, Alabama and President, Voices For Our Fathers Legacy Foundation; Eric Patterson, study victim descendant; Brenda Ross, MD, Assistant Professor, Maternal & Fetal Medicine, UC Riverside; Doc Ervin, Superintendent, San Bernardino City Unified School District; and Dr. Joshua Beckley, Senior Pastor, Ecclesia Christian Fellowship.

Correcting dis- and misinformation

Tyson Head has been delivering her message around the country, correcting some of the misinformation about the so-called Tuskegee study and said, "It is unfortunate that, because of the United States Public Health Service Syphilis Study (known as the Tuskegee Syphilis Study), African Americans continue to have limited trust in vaccines and their benefits. We must take this disease seriously, do whatever we can to increase vaccine awareness and share the message that 'by taking the vaccine, we are also taking a positive step toward decreasing the spread of COVID-19 within the overall community."

"We are honored to be part of the team helping to increase awareness and decrease vaccine hesitancy," explained Al Bonds, CAAASA campaign manager. "The health of each person impacts all of us. By protecting themselves, individuals are better equipped to protect family members, friends, social circles, and the community at large."

The campaign is funded by a grant from Sierra Health Foundation and hopes to attract persons in zip codes with poor vaccination rates,

Voting Down The Ballot

Black CA Voters Move Momentum Across the Ticket for Lasting Change

Mariah Brown | Contributor

lack Californians are called into action to vote down the ballot through national to local elections amid new 10-year redistricting maps.

The new maps will take effect in the upcoming statewide June primary elections for the appointment of congressional and state legislators amid approximately 300 local races. At the same time, propositions and measures are up for verification for voting later in the year and are on the radar of many Black voters determined to vote on legislation that will improve inequitable conditions worsened by the COVID-19 pandemic.

Stakes are upped for steady Black voter turnout at the polls for voting down the ballot to tackle issues including homelessness and school budget shortages. Voting outcomes to close the gap on social and economic disparities laid bare in disadvantaged communities will require a dual-track strategy to enact laws in a state with fierce contention from corporate special interest groups and Republican legislators, according to Eric Schickler, co-director of UC Berkeley's Institute of Governmental Studies.

"There are issues where the state legislature is captive to other interest groups, hindering responsiveness," he said. "In that instance, putting [ a proposition] on the ballot could yield success."

Political stakeholders are conducting a ballot analysis of the dozens of propositions, collecting voter signatures for verification by the June 30 submission deadline for voting in November. The California Secretary of State Shirley Weber will qualify the proposed legislation that collects the required estimated 700,000 signatures and has encouraged campaigners to submit their signatures by April.

Propositions in circulation thus far touch on lower taxes, minimum wage, abolishment of public employee unions, and criminal justice reform to name a few. Issues on the priority list for organizations supporting Black voters are homelessness and hospice.

"There are a lot of bills for transitional housing. Rent is through the roof," said Kirk

Community Coalition of Los Angeles, a statewide public policy organization. "We're looking at ballot initiatives to see how organizations can support and raise awareness among community members and how they can do their part."

The legislative proposals not only introduce Samuels, director of civic engagement at new initiatives but seek to overturn laws with

A couple of propositions in circulation this year are aimed at repealing a California law targeted at stopping wage theft - the refusal to pay wages or benefits legally owed to an employee – by allowing workers to file lawsuits to recoup both unpaid wages and a portion of penalties paid for violating the law. And the other wants to block legislative efforts to improve the state's housing crisis, amending the California Constitution to leave several zoning and development

Black communities and especially hit their school districts hard – struggling with the digital divide due to lack of widespread access to the internet.

The last election for statewide propositions was in November 2020. In Oakland, public school teachers bet on the failed Proposition 15, a funding initiative for respite to alleviate longstanding budget shortages by taxing commercial and industrial properties for education and local government funding.

Phyllis Auburn* in Oakland's Unified School District, spoke with Black Voice News at the height of the pandemic in 2020 and said to continue education efforts, many teachers pulled from their personal budgets to provide students with up-to-date books and computers in addition to carving time to assist students' families get rent-relief and healthcare. While philanthropic efforts have temporarily alleviated these woes since then, they have not addressed the systemic inequity of accessing necessities in the crisis, like broadband internet and other tech-enabling resources.

"Oakland schools have a long history of being underfunded and it's an open wound festering with COVID-19," Auburn said. Only 12% of low-income students in Oakland had a computer or reliable internet at home before the pandemic, according to Oakland Divided School District. "Now [during the pandemic] everyone has paused to see the inequity and our white affluent communities are not experiencing the same issues."

Cash is the Advantage

Supporters and opponents combined spent an estimated $140 million on campaigns for Proposition 15. Estimates show the upped commercial property taxes would have generated an estimated $11.5 billion per year in funding for public schools and local governments. The ballot measure was defeated, with 52 percent opposed and 48 percent in favor.

Despite Proposition 15's narrow defeat, it signaled a shift. The COVID-19 crisis highlighted inequities that have worsened leading to an uptick in voters exercising their frustration at the polls with their vote, according to Samuels, of the Community Coalition of Los Angeles, which supported Proposition 15 from its inception.

"It was inspiring to have come so close," Samuels said. "We're challenging corporations. We plan to continue to mobilize people in the community in the same way in 2022."

Corporations have the large budgets to sow enough doubt among massive voting bases through advertising – who often will vote in opposition to their interests because of misinformation, Schickler said. "Propositions have tended to have a more status quo bias. And if voters are uncertain they'll vote against it," he said. "A measure will start out looking like its running ahead [...] voters become undecided and then it's voted down."

Community Coalition is replicating proven strategies to land other propositions and measures on the election ballot for June, including leveraging virtual platforms to collect signatures, lobbying politicians across counties, and phone banking Black voters in South Los Angeles to inform them about voter registration, early voting and propositions. All these tactics were used to get proposition 15 on the ballot,

Kirk Samuels, Director of Civic Engagement Community Coalition of Los Angeles and included mobilizing over 200 community members to get involved and advocate for tax equity and racial justice to inform about the potential legislative impact on resources for improving those issues.

"It's not just about pushing for legislation but leveraging resources to areas where they're most needed or under threat in our communities," Samuels said.

Growing the Black Vote

The Black vote in California has been building in local elections since unprecedented turnout in the general election of 2020 as voter education efforts aim to create pathways to make it easier for Black community members frustrated at futile legislation to take action at the polls.

Black California voter turnout in the 2020 general election saw an unprecedented uptick when droves of Black voters showed up to the polls despite shelter-in-place orders because of outrage over economic issues Coronavirus laid bare and police brutality in the wake of the highly publicized killing of George Floyd. Calls to address these longstanding issues rang loud and clear, according to Tyler Okeke, a youth board member of statewide alliance Power California.

"Voting down the ballot is critical in the age of Black Lives Matter and will set the stage for how we move forward and have control over our daily lives," said Okeke.

Many members of the Black community chose to take their protest from the street to the ballot box on election day to vote Donald Trump out of office, and a prime reason was the administration's inaction to address police violence. Proposals in direct response to the issue flooded communities, including one in support of defunding the police and redirecting spending for community investment and wellness programming, with an estimated 73 percent of residents in support, according to a survey from UC Berkeley's Institute of Governmental Studies.

The Black community at large has become accustomed to facing adversity in elections and voting, Samuels said. "We have persevered and endured hardships but the resiliency of our community proves far stronger than the obstacle COVID-19 presents," he added. "This is reflected in the massive demonstrations that took place over summer 2020 and the unprecedented amount of early voting that took place."

Schickler said the obstacle in the upcoming election year will center on maintaining voter turnout witnessed in 2020 with concern that in 2022 a ton of exhaustion awaits for a lot of voters with Congress having failed to pass either the George Floyd Justice in Policing Act or the Freedom to Vote: John R. Lewis (Voting Rights) Act.

"The energy built up in 2020 carried at least into early 2021, in some of the local races is going to be a real challenge sustaining it," he said. (87 words)

A "Wait and See" For Redistricting

How the new redistricting maps will impact political outcomes remains to be seen.

Black voters are the minority in many of the new districts – which were intentionally constructed to avoid the concentration of Black voters in any one particular district to improve the chances of seating representatives in alignment with Black issues in the Congress, Senate, Assembly and local levels statewide, according to James Woodson, policy director for the California Black Census and Redistricting Hub, who participated in guiding the California Citizens Redistricting Commission's decision.

They are launching the CA Black Power Network in 2022, a statewide Black organizing and power-building network of Black-led grassroots groups to develop a policy agenda that will activate Black voters around key issues for the 2022 primary and general elections.

The commission maintained opportunities in many Black-represented Assembly and Senate seats, including Los Angeles, San Diego, Oakland, and Sacramento. In addition, increases in the Black citizen voting-age population in certain Assembly districts in the San Bernardino, Riverside, Contra Costa, and Stockton areas present an opportunity to seat responsive elected officials in those districts.

Black voters and non-voters alike are unsure what the redistricting process will mean for their communities in the upcoming election, however are assured their action will mean something as they've seen with Proposition 15 and propositions that passed in 2020, including Measure J, a legislation carving ten percent of the Los Angeles County budget to address racial injustice through community investments to youth development, small businesses, job training, housing support and alternatives to incarceration.

2022 Redistricting: Map of California's Newly Aligned U.S. Congressional, State Senate and Assembly Districts

The new redistricting maps and their political outcomes remain a mystery until the June primary elections. Black voters are the minority in many of the new districts — which were intentional to avoid the concentration of Black voters in any one particular district, according to stakeholders involved in the redistricting process.

tangible, equitable change.

Overwhelmingly African Americans and Latinos are registered Democrats at approximately 73 percent and 58 percent, respectively. Fewer of the two racial groups are registered Republicans at approximately 5% and 16%, respectively, according to the Public Policy Institute of California.

Democrats have largely controlled the Congress, Senate, and Assembly for the past 40 years while equitable solutions to address systemic issues both racial groups grapple with, such as worsened housing insecurity, although their allegiance has not resulted in education, health care, immigration and a path to citizenship and access to health insurance are largely absent.

Policies in the state have fallen short in addressing these inequities, particularly housing. Los Angeles housing costs are well past the tipping point, according to data from Endhomelessness.org. Median-income residents spend more than 45 percent of their incomes on rent. This trend has been building for years. In 2017, the number of people experiencing homelessness in the city and county of Los Angeles was the second largest nationwide and boasted one of the highest homeless rates in California.

The Inland Empire ranked second in the nation, tied with Tampa, Florida, for experiencing the highest year-over-year rent increase through June of last year, up 15.1 percent. Also in 2021, a person earning the average weekly wage of $902 would need to work 61 hours per week in San Bernardino County and 56 hours in Riverside County to afford a one-bedroom unit at HUDestimated Fair Market Rent while spending no more than 30 percent of their income on housing costs.

danced around legislation addressing affordable housing development. Whereas down the ballot, there hasn't been much focus on grooming qualified candidates for key positions or the introduction of legislative measures to improve circumstances in communities in flux. California is the fifth largest economy in the world, according to federal data and yet opportunities to stimulate economic activity in California enclaves that need it the most are snubbed.

Mark Gonzalez, California Democratic Party Chair of the Los Angeles County Chapter, said bureaucratic and staid leadership has been a roadblock to achieving systemic change for issues such as housing affordability and racial justice. Upcoming Democratic seats call for fresh leadership. New thought is becoming "relevant and prevalent in achieving real change," he said.

Candidates, COVID-19 and Systemic Inequality

The current voting institution has fallen short in meeting Black Californians on the congressional level and is why down-the-ballot voting for propositions and elected officials is a priority in 2022 primary and general elections.

Upcoming races include mayoral, sheriff, board supervisors, city council, school board, judicial seats and more. Candidates elected will decide on policies about policing, local zoning laws for housing affordability, and education, Schickler said.

The decisions made by city governments affect the everyday person in California and their day-to-day lives significantly. "It's important to know their stance toward police, housing, and schools. Especially for communities of color in a state like California, it is very crucial," he said.

In the current climate of the COVID-19 crisis, there is heightened sensitivity in many Black communities due to the continued suffering that has worsened living conditions. Disproportionately Black people are at greater risk of getting sick and dying from COVID-19 but do not have adequate access to economic, physical, and emotional health support, according to data from the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention.

"Nothing is going to get rid of that pain than taking action to change their realities," Samuels said. The Community Coalition has been creating forums for access to elected officials to provide clarity on legislative measures. "People are a lot more sensitive to the issues of our time and now we can respond in a like manner for solutions," he said.

A Long Way to Go

In predominantly Black enclaves including the San Francisco Bay Area and San Bernardino, outcomes of local elections have varied but echoed the same sentiment: there is a long way to go before Black voter turnout in down-ballot elections can reflect the changes needed to improve conditions.

The pandemic has caused irreparable damage in many communities. Surfeit small and big businesses have closed in San Bernardino and as a result, residents are bearing the brunt of increased sales taxes to recoup losses in revenue from shuttered businesses in a community already resource-strapped with increased expenses, according to Cheryl Brown, a former California Assemblymember and longtime San Bernardino resident.

In November 2020, San Bernardino Measure S was approved authorizing a sales tax of 1 percent, replacing an existing tax of 0.25 percent. The estimated $40 million per year generated was for general city services and increased the total sales tax rate in the city to 8.75 percent. Community members have expressed outrage over the measure because the majority of city employees do not live in San Bernardino. Most notably, public safety officials are paid exorbitant salaries in comparison to the median income of $39,000 annually for residents.

"We have less money to spend as our gas, food, clothes, and taxes went up, increasing the cost of living because of less money in the system, putting a strain on our already strained community," Brown said.

To bring forth lasting change, it will require the consistent effort of Black voters and organizers in support of them to foster processes for communities to track, dialogue, and gather. Voting rights have come under fire as Republican opposition is rolling back protections of the Voting Rights Act as communities of color find their voice in petitioning and advocating for legislation, as observed in the 2020 election.

Political organizers say the best way to combat never ending threats to the democratic process is to vote and spread the word. "Everyone must do their part," said Samuels.

Elections 2022, continued from page 3

the same two Democrats who killed voting rights legislation and that he probably spent more time with last year than he did his own wife, though he rarely met with the Progressive Caucus or the Congressional Black Caucus.

Despite this omission the president spoke loud and clear about his support for the nation's police and of course, he did not miss an opportunity to take a swipe at the concept of defunding the police" mantra even though he knows full well its intent is to realign police funding. He criticized the 'defund the police' mantra as he had from the beginning—rather than take the narrative away from Republicans and fearful Democrats and making it clear what it really means and fight aggressively for a realignment of police funding, the nation remains on the historic pattern and practice of using a rise in crime rates to justify an open wallet policy toward policing.

Last year $350 billion in COVID-19 funding from the American Rescue Plan was earmarked to fight crime and on Tuesday, he spoke of even more funding.

Even though the Biden Administration failed to pass Build Back Better legislation and the promises it contained including universal preschool, inhome care for seniors, and pulling millions of kids out of poverty by extending the American Rescue Plan's Expanded Child Tax Credit, among other key provisions largely because Republicans and those same two Democrats felt Congress had given Americans enough assistance; and even while millions of children have fallen back into poverty and working mothers continue struggling unable to return to work because they cannot afford child care, the president added insult to injury on Tuesday when he exuberantly announced, "We should all agree: The answer is not to Defund the police. The answer is to FUND the police with the resources and training they need to protect our communities."

Quite frankly, I, for one, do not agree.

In reviewing Biden's budget for Fiscal Year 2022 the Brennan Center for Justice, "found some $1.3 billion earmarked for reform-related grants," which are among the main tools the federal government has historically used for pouring police funding to state and local agencies. "The number represents a 78 percent increase from the previous year."

In addition, Biden's budget includes $388 million for a hiring program run out of the Office of Community Oriented Policing Services. This is double last year's funding. In fairness, the Biden budget does include $100 million in new Community Violence Intervention initiative grant funds within DOJ and $100 million within the Centers for Disease Prevention and Control (CDC).

Regarding police reform, like voting rights and the provisions of Build Back Better, it is obvious that despite Biden's promises, he needs strong support in the House and Senate to make progress on all of these issues of importance to Blacks and other communities of color.

This year we have another unprecedented opportunity to work for meaningful change in the Inland Empire.

We can reimagine policing in Riverside and San Bernardino Counties

Riverside's Sheriff Chad Bianco, former Oath Keeper Extraordinaire who squandered more than $4.6 million of the COVID-19 relief funding on furniture, door keypads, cameras and bulletproof windows for the Sheriff's Department even as his deputies continue shooting down citizens in remarkable numbers.

San Bernardino voters on the other hand will finally have an opportunity to select their own replacement for retired Sheriff John McMahon who left office last summer. This is because once again, the San Bernardino County Board of Supervisors in partnership with an outgoing Sheriff has strategically hand-selected a retiring sheriff's replacement this time with Shannon Dicus. This is a pattern for San Bernardino County where the ruling elite takes the opportunity to put their choice for sheriff in place and in the process ensures all the advantages of an incumbent-in essence taking the choice away from voters. This is not surprising in a county where the leadership does not reflect the demographics of the people they represent.

This year we have an opportunity and responsibility to make change at the local level beginning with who each county selects to serve as sheriff as well as those who serve as County Supervisors. We need to ask hard questions of the candidates. We need to show up at the polls and not give the far right the gift of sitting this election out—because we are disappointed that everything has not gone our way ... we learned in 2010 and again in 2016 how disastrous that can be.

What became clear over the last year is that more of us must show up in 2022 than in 2020 to elect national, state and local representatives in even greater numbers who are willing to fight for the change we need. We can exercise our collective power here in the inland region by electing sheriffs who see themselves as servants of the community not tyrants who believe they are above reproach like Chad Bianco or entitled, like Shannon Dicus, who stepped into his job as sheriff as if it were his birthright.

A wise man once said, "Take advantage of every opportunity." The political disappointments of 2021 should serve as fuel propelling us to work harder, to press more intently for change. I offer my criticism of Biden not because I believe we should give up on him but instead because we should continue to press him and his administration to deliver on the promises he made.

Let's not be discouraged but rather encouraged. Were our long quest for equity in the areas discussed not so closely at hand, the change we seek would not be met with such staunch resistance. We must persevere.

Of course, this is just my opinion. I'm keeping it real.
