Mental Illness Runs in My Family

“Now, I understand what you tried to say to me and how you suffered for your sanity and how you tried to set them free. They would not listen. They did not know how. Perhaps they’ll listen now . . . Like the strangers that you’ve met; the ragged men in ragged clothes; the silver thorn of bloody rose, lie crushed and broken on the virgin snow.. Now, I think I know what you tried to say to me. How you suffered for your sanity. How you tried to set them free. They would not listen; they’re not listening still. Perhaps they never will.”

-Don McLean

For at least four generations and probably more, mental illness has passed from mother or father to child in my family, like some families pass dimples or gaps in their front teeth.

Even with this legacy however, we rarely discuss the prevalence of mental illness in our family tree unless we are forced to ban together to help one or the other family member navigate through another mental health crisis.

This genetic trait comes with the added burden of constant concern and nagging anxiety as we hold our collective breaths as each child, niece, or nephew enters their late teens, the age when it normally appears, because those of us who escaped the gene know it is still possible for a mental illness to manifest in one of our own children—it has yet to skip a generation.

And so, as our children, grandchildren and soon great grandchildren enter their late teens we grow anxious if they feel sad and wonder, “Is this a normal down day. . . or . . . is something more serious taking hold?” If they burst with energy over something exciting, we question, “Is this only normal exuberance or a sign of something about to take hold?” The only way to know for sure—is when you know for sure.

For the children who escape the illness you question yourself when they fall in love and marry, silently asking, “Should I sit him/her down and talk about the possibility of passing mental illness along to their own children?”

Although scientists have known for a long while that many psychiatric disorders tend to run in families, current research shows “the association between genes and any psychiatric disorder is complex. As a result, there is currently no definitive test for genetic screening available that can predict whether someone will develop mental illness, like there is for sickle cell disease or cystic fibrosis.

To date based on my understanding of the research, it appears science does not fully understand what causes mental illness or why it is passed on in families. What is clear however is that it is not unusual for several types of mental illness to manifest in one family. This can include anxiety, severe depression, bipolar disorders and/or schizo affective disorder.

My grandparents, my parents, and their siblings were blind-sided, unaware of the genetic potential; but in all honesty, although having more information available about mental illness has enabled my generation and the next to react more swiftly when signs appear, too often the tendency toward denial serves as an

With California Reopened, Follow These Guidelines to Stay Safe

Phyllis Kimber Cox | Contributor

COVID-19 restrictions were lifted June 15, California is open, and things are getting back to normal in the state--that is certainly good news for businesses; however with so many still unvaccinated against the virus and growing uncertainty about virus variants, it is important to know what to do to stay safe.

More than 70 percent of the state's adult population has received at least one dose of the COVID-19 vaccine and 47.23 percent of adult residents are now fully vaccinated according to usfacts.org.

For those who remain vaccinated, it is not because there is a shortage of vaccine supply. Currently there are nearly 5.5 million doses available and ready to be administered. As a result the state continues its efforts to break through barriers of vaccine resistance and hesitance.

Status of Students

Children are required to wear masks in school and daycare settings. California did not require schools to reopen for in-person instruction during the current school year. As a result, the state experienced a notable decline in enrollment according to the California Department of Education 2020–21 Statewide School Enrollment Data.

Statewide K-12 enrollment dropped by more than 160,000 students from the prior year's enrollment. California has proven to be one of the slowest in the country when it comes to reopening schools.

More About Masks

Masks are no longer required outdoors and the fully vaccinated do not have to wear masks inside of business establishments unless owners require them to do so.

There are, however, still places where masks are required such as buses and other forms of public transportation or conveyance, including airport terminals. Masks are also still required in hospitals, medical facilities and other settings where there might be large groups of people.

In addition, people who are not vaccinated must wear masks inside businesses, restaurants and anywhere groups might gather. The unvaccinated may only remove their masks during meals and when alone.

Vaccination Verification

Employers must verify their employees' vaccination status. Fully

CAL/OSHA Issues New COVID-19 Protection Emergency Standards Subsequent to Reopening

Breanna Reeves | Contributor

California officially reopened on June 15, eliminating some COVID-19 safety requirements for fully vaccinated people. Following the state's reopening, the Occupational Safety and Health Standards Board voted to update the COVID-19 Emergency Temporary Standards.

Governor Gavin Newsom signed an executive order that solidified revisions to the COVID-19 Protection Emergency Standards originally put in place by the California Occupational Safety and Health Administration (Cal/ OSHA).

Effective June 18, new emergency standards eliminate social distancing requirements and provide new guidelines on face coverings. Other changes to the temporary standards include:

- Fully vaccinated employees do not need to be tested or excluded from work after close contact unless they exhibit COVID-19 symptoms.
- Employees are not required to wear face coverings outdoors regardless of their vaccination status with some exceptions.
- Employees are allowed to wear face coverings without fear of retaliation from employers.
- Employers must provide effective training and instruction to employees on how COVID is spread, contracted and prevention techniques.

Cal/OSHA standards also require documentation for fully vaccinated employees who chose not to wear face coverings indoors. Employers must record the vaccination status for any employee who is not wearing a face covering indoors and this status must remain confidential, according to the updated standards.

While Cal/OSHA has lifted some requirements, others are still in place such as requiring face masks in certain settings despite vaccination status.

According to the guidelines, “Face coverings are required indoors and in vehicles for unvaccinated employees.

As of June 15, those indoor settings where CDPH requires face coverings include public transit, K-12 educational facilities, health care and long-term care settings, correctional and detention facilities and shelters (homeless or emergency shelters and cooling centers).”

Retail stores such as Target and Trader Joe’s no longer require guests to wear masks or social distance regardless of vaccination status.

“Given the CDC’s updated guidance last week, Target will no longer require fully vaccinated guests and team members to wear face coverings in our stores, except where it’s required by local ordinances. Face coverings will continue to be strongly recommended for guests and team members who are not fully vaccinated and we’ll continue our increased safety and cleaning measures, including social distancing, throughout our stores,” according to a press release issued by Target Corporate on May 17.

The Emergency Temporary Standards has also provided guidelines to follow in the event an outbreak occurs in the workplace. Employers must implement protective requirements if an outbreak occurs and require physical distancing and barriers to be put in place if a “major outbreak” occurs. A major outbreak is outlined as 20 or more employees in an exposed group.

For the full list of the updated COVID-19 Emergency Temporary Standards, visit the website for the California Department of Industrial Relations.

A Reversal of Fortune: Bill Cosby Set Free

Bill Cosby was released from prison on Wednesday after a Pennsylvania State Supreme Court vacated his sexual assault conviction and judgment of sentence. One of the few high-profile cases during the #MeToo Movement by which sexual assault survivors have taken steps to name their attackers, this verdict was met with an array of reactions from survivors and supporters of Cosby.

“I have never changed my stance nor my story. I have always maintained my innocence,” Cosby tweeted on Wednesday after his release. “Thank you to all my fans, supporters and friends who stood by me through this ordeal. Special thanks to the Supreme Court for upholding the rule of law. #BillCosby.”

The court ruled that Cosby, 83, had been denied a fair trial and that any charges brought violated his due-process rights. The court ruling also referenced a 2005 agreement outlined by previous Montgomery County District Attorney Bruce Castor (Trump’s former impeachment attorney). In 2005 Castor published a press release citing “insufficient, credible and admissible evidence exists upon which any charge against Mr. Cosby could be sustained beyond a reasonable doubt.”

Current District Attorney Kevin Steele, who arrested Cosby in 2018, stated he was obligated to stand by his predecessor’s promise not to charge Cosby. The ruling does not confirm or deny Cosby’s innocence nor does it confirm or deny that the accused was not telling the truth. Part of Castor’s refusal to pursue a case against Cosby was because the sexual assault was reported a year after it occurred.

According to the ruling delivered by Justice David N. Wecht, “[Cosby] must be discharged, and any future prosecution on these particular charges must be barred. We do not dispute that this remedy is both severe and rare. But it is warranted here, indeed compelled.” Cosby cannot be retried on criminal charges. Four judges represented the majority that ruled in Cosby’s favor, while three others dissented.

Dissenting Opinion

Biden Pushes Effort to Combat Rising Tide of Violent Crime

Colleen Long, Jonathan Lemire and Michael Balsamo | Associated Press

President Joe Biden plans to lay out new steps to stem a rising national tide of violent crime, with a particular focus on gun violence, as administration officials brace for what they fear could be an especially turbulent summer.

The worry over crime is real and believed to be fueled by the pandemic, which has created economic hardship, displacement and anxiety. But there are also tricky politics at play. The spike in crime has become a Republican talking point and has been a frequent topic of conversation on conservative media.

White House aides believe that Biden, with his long legislative record on crime as a former senator, is not easy to paint as soft on the issue, and the president has been clear that he is opposed to the “defund the police” movement, which has been effectively used against other Democrats to paint them as anti-law enforcement. But Biden also is trying to boost progressives’ efforts to reform policing. And while combating crime and reforming the police don’t have to be at odds with each other, the two efforts are increasingly billed that way.

In a speech on Wednesday, Biden unveiled a series of executive orders aimed at reducing violence, and he will renew his calls for Congress to pass gun legislation, aides said. Ahead of the speech, the Justice Department announced new strike forces aimed at tackling gun trafficking in five cities.

The White House also convened a meeting Wednesday with Attorney General Merrick Garland; the Democratic mayors of Baltimore and Miami-Dade County and the Republican mayor of Rapid City, South Dakota; the Democratic attorney general of New Jersey; the police chief in Baton Rouge, Louisiana; and community activists. White House staff members have also been in touch with legislators and congressional staff.

Seeking to Strike a Balance

“Yes, there needs to be reforms of police systems across the country. The president is a firm believer in that,” White House press secretary Jen Psaki said Tuesday. “But there are also steps he can take as president of the United States to help address and hopefully reduce that crime. A big part of that, in his view, is putting in place gun safety measures ... using the bully pulpit but also using levers at his disposal as president.”

In April, Biden announced a half-dozen executive actions on gun control, including cracking down on “ghost guns,” homemade firearms that lack serial numbers used to trace them and that are often purchased without a background check.

There is also new federal funding from the $1.9 trillion COVID-19 relief package directed toward municipal governments, allowing them to keep more police officers on the street. Aides said Biden would also urge a swift confirmation of his choice to head the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco, Firearms and Explosives.

But Biden is limited in his power to act alone. The House passed two bills requiring background checks on all firearms sales and transfers and allowing an expanded 10-day review for gun purchases. But that legislation faces strong headwinds in the Senate, where some Republican support would be needed for passage.

Strike Forces to be Deployed in Some Cities

Deputy Attorney General Lisa Monaco said Tuesday that she has seen double-digit increases in murder and violent crime nationwide.

“It is staggering. It is sobering,” she said at a violent-crime forum held by the Washington-based Police Executive Research Forum. “And it’s something that DOJ is committed to do all we can to reverse what are profoundly troubling trends.”

Monaco said the Justice Department would launch strike forces in Chicago, New York, Los Angeles, San Francisco and Washington, D.C., to help reduce violent crime by addressing illegal gun trafficking, building on an initiative begun last month.

If the federal effort sounds familiar, it is. Federal operations have often been launched to help cities facing spiking crime. President Donald Trump announced something similar

Mental Health, Suicide, and Black Youth

Phyllis Kimber Cox | Contributor

California teen Jo'Vianni Smith was only 15 years-old when she committed suicide during the early days of the COVID-19 pandemic in 2020, but even before the deadly virus took over our lives, disparities existed between the most vulnerable populations and the most affluent when it came to access to all forms of health care.

There are many reasons for these existing disparities, however they are being most deeply felt in a time of plague.

Last year, US. News and World Report pointed to a trio of crises that have shaken the Black community—in particular, the impact of COVID-19, the wobbly economy, and the death of George Floyd. These tripartite calamities left the community shaken:

“There’s a public health term, ‘syndemic,’ that means the convergence of multiple big-time stressors,” says Nadine Kaslow, a professor of psychiatry in the Emory University School of Medicine.

While suicide rates among Blacks and Asian Pacific Islanders are much lower than among First Nation and Alaskan Natives and Whites, the recent increases in suicidality among Blacks is genuinely concerning.

Contributing Factors

There are many factors exacerbating this syndemic including a well-founded historic mistrust between the Black community and healthcare providers as well as endemic levels of poverty and lack of access to quality healthcare. Top this off with the stigmatization of mental illness that continues to plague Black communities and you have the ingredients for a coming crisis.

When discussing the shared experience of the Black community with impediments to mental healthcare the National Alliance for Mental Illness (NAMI) states “[A]nother part of this shared experience is facing racism, discrimination and inequity that can significantly affect a person’s mental health.”

In the past few years, there is an increasing awareness these burdens are falling more heavily on Black children and Black teens.

“Across the board, suicide rates among young Americans have risen; from 2007 to 2018, suicide rates for Americans ages 10 to 24 rose by 57 percent,” Time magazine reported. And while suicide rates have levelled off from 2018 through 2020 in line with the latest available data, suicide rates among Black girls make up a large portion of the past increase, an alarming sign.

While Black suicide rates have been lower than other demographic groups in the past, according to Time, each generation of Blacks are more likely to act on suicidal thoughts than the generation before it. In 2016 and 2018 suicides spiked among Black children ages five to eleven making this demographic group the one with the highest levels of suicidality. Black high school boys have more serious suicide attempts which require medical attention.

While suicide rates have dropped for White children, they have gone up for Black children. Black boys’ increase in suicide attempts have caused an increase in physical damage caused by those attempts and are an indicator of alarm.

Barriers to Mental Health Care

The barriers to Black mental health care are many, some factors are historic, while others are structural. Black people are viewed differently by healthcare providers as well as society in general. A study conducted by the Journal of Health and Social Behavior, reported on a phone-based field experiment of the impact mental help seekers’ race, class, and gender has on the accessibility of psychotherapists. Three hundred and twenty psychotherapists each received voicemail messages from one Black middle-class and one White middle-class help seeker, or from one Black working-class and one White working-class help seeker, all requesting an appointment.

The results revealed an otherwise invisible form of discrimination. Middle-class help seekers had appointment offer rates almost three times higher than their working-class counterparts. Race differences emerged only among middle-class help-seekers, with Blacks considerably less likely than Whites to be offered an appointment. Average appointment offer rates were equivalent across gender, but women were favored over men for

Inland Empire Black Churches Raise Mental Health Awareness With Resource Support

Breonna Reeves | Contributor

Healthy Heritage Movement, Inc., a local organization created to target and address health disparities within the African American community, is partnering with five local churches to provide access to mental health resources for the Black community.

The National Department of Health Services recognizes July as Black, Indigenous, People of Color (BIPOC) Mental Health Month, which is noted on the site as “National Minority Mental Health Month.” While rates of mental illness among Black people are equivalent with those of the general population, disparities exist in regard to access to mental health services, according to the American Psychiatric Association.

The report notes, “African Americans often receive poorer quality of care and lack access to culturally competent care. Only one-in-three African Americans who need mental health care receive it.”

Phyllis Clark, Executive Director and Founder of the Healthy Heritage

Movement, is working to address the mental health disparities within the African American community in the Inland Empire.

The Healthy Heritage Movement and local churches will launch Mental Health Resource Stations at each church to provide widely available access to mental health information and services. Participating churches include Castle Rock Christian Fellowship, Living Way Christian Fellowship, Cathedral of Praise International Ministries, Ecclesia Christian Fellowship and Rubidoux Missionary Baptist Church.

How Participating Churches were Selected

Clark commends the five churches for leading the way to reduce the stigma surrounding mental illness in the African American community and welcomes other churches to join the effort. Churches were selected based on location in Riverside and San Bernardino Counties. Surveys were used to ensure that a large demographic of women attend, the churches have facilities that can host classes and leaders who are willing to support mental health efforts in their community.

Phyllis Clark, Executive Director and Founder of the Healthy Heritage Movement

Ministers from the participating churches introduced the program to their members via announcements and also incorporated mental health topics into their sermons.

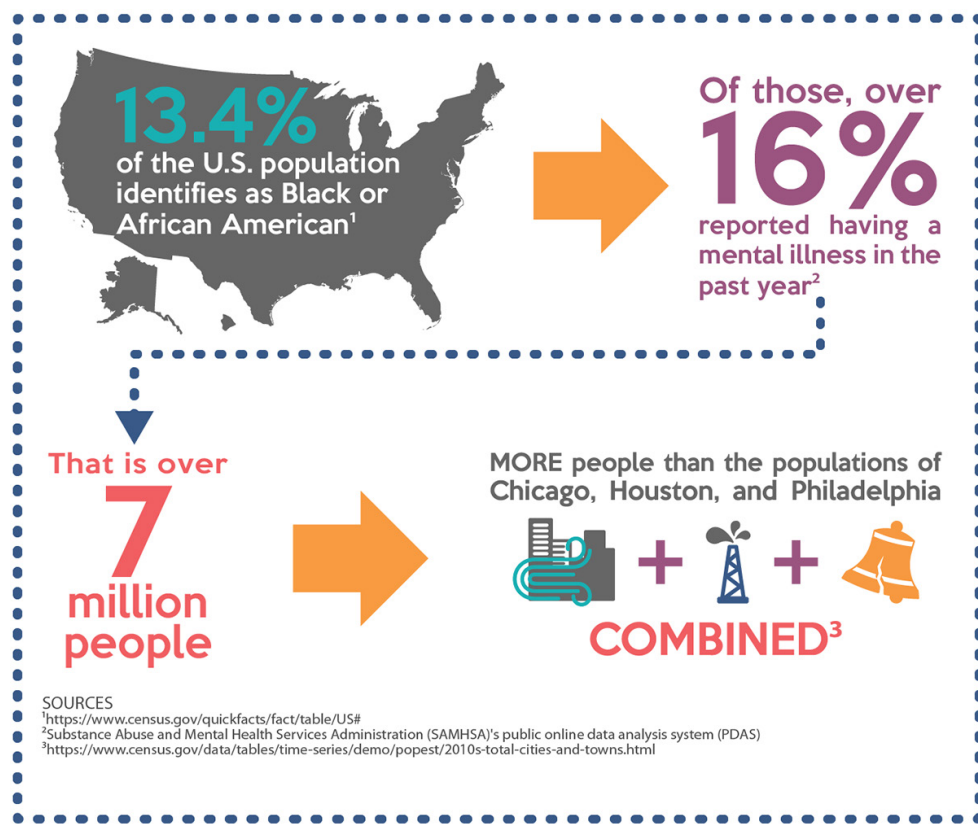

The programs are also offered online and are open to the general public. Any church interested in participating can reach the Healthy Heritage Movement at (951) 293-4240, (951) 682-1717 or visit www.healthyheritage.com.

The program is funded by the California Reducing Disparities Project. Healthy Heritage is one of 35 programs being funded through this project under the California Department of Public Health, Office of Health Equity. Additional sponsors include the California Reducing Disparities Project, Inland SoCal United Way, Nurturing You Women’s Health & Wellness, J.W. Vines Medical Foundation and the City of Riverside.

Future Initiatives

The Healthy Heritage Movement is committed to launching several initiatives over the next few months to reduce the barriers preventing African Americans from accessing mental health services and to help the community heal from what has been a traumatic year.

One key initiative includes a Summer Series of Healing that will feature Black psychologists and wellness coaches discussing mental wellness, healing and self-care. Another initiative will focus on producing a detailed African American Mental Health Resource Guide which will be available in the fall.

Broken Crayons Still Color

Currently underway is the organization’s most recognized program, Broken Crayons Still Color Project, which has served 240 Black women in the Inland Empire since its inception in 2018. The 8-week program was written by Dr. Gloria Morrow and is currently taught by Dr. Candance Elaine, a Certified Clinical Therapist and Personal Transformation Coach.

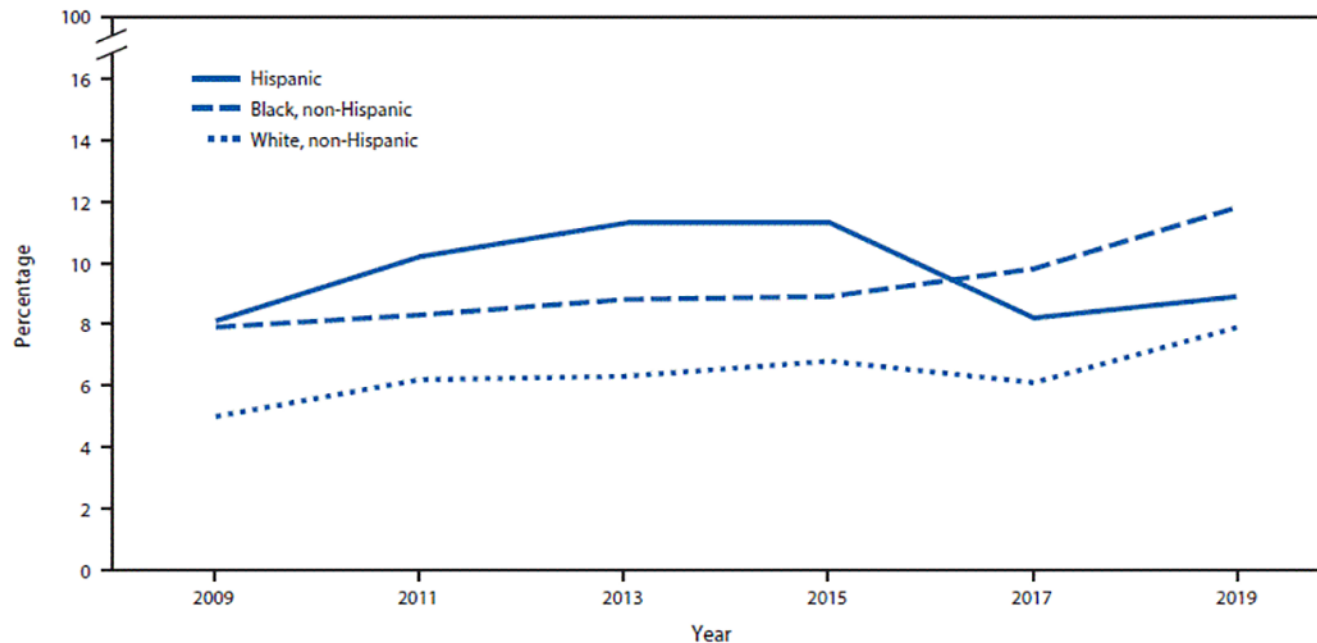

Dr. Gloria Morrow

The Broken Crayons Still Color Project teaches women effective strategies to cope with anxiety, depression, PTSD and substance-use disorders. Participants also learn about prevention, early detection and intervention. The program is being hosted virtually due to COVID-19 and is currently being offered through July 10, 2021. Those interested can visit www.BrokenCrayonsProject.com to sign up for upcoming classes.

appointment offers in their preferred time range.”

According to a study by the Journal of Community Health, “Black youths are two times more likely to die by suicide compared to their White counterparts,” says Arielle Sheftall, a researcher at the Center for Suicide Prevention and Research at Nationwide Children’s Hospital in Columbus, Ohio, and one of the authors of the 2019 Pediatrics study, The Changing Characteristics of African American Adolescent Suicides, 2001-2017. The report noted how Black children ages 13 to 15 years of age have disproportionately high suicide rates. In addition, from 2001 through 2017, suicide rates for Black males increased by 60 percent and for Black females by 182 percent.

Why is this happening and what can be done about it?

The Black Voice News spoke with Dr. Annelle Primm with the Steve Fund regarding the increased rates of suicide among young Black people. She specializes in serving the mental health needs of young people of color from adolescence to adulthood and helped author the report titled, Ring the Alarm: The Crisis of Black Youth Suicide in America,

“Over the last several years data has emerged showing an alarming increase in suicide rates of Black children and teenagers over the past generation and for teenagers in particular, while the rates of suicide attempt have been going down for all of the other racial groups.” According to Primm however, African Americans were showing the opposite trend, with increases over the last decade or so.

15-year-old Jo'Vianni Smith took her own life in April 2020.

In addition to the trend already in place prior to the pandemic and prior to the racial reckoning, she explained, “There are concerns there have been increases above and beyond that. “I’m seeing some reports now saying the nation on the whole, which was bracing for significant increases in suicide as a result of the pandemic people have not seen.”

The data is still coming in, Primm explained, that would look at this past year but there have been some reports of increasing rates of suicide in certain parts of the country.

Another concern regarding COVID-19 and the disruption in the educational experience for students universally, but in particular, Black school-age children, is that it was extremely unfortunate not only for whatever negative effects the disruption will have on education and academic achievement into the future, but it is also concerning that whatever little mental health support was being offered in schools where Black and other children of color attend, “Those supports were absent when children had to stay home,” she explained.

Primm stressed the need to increase awareness around the warning

last year when he and then-Attorney General William Barr launched Operation Legend, named for a boy who was shot to death in Kansas City, Missouri. In that effort, hundreds of investigators were deployed to nine cities with rising crime, prioritizing the arrest of violent criminals.

Trump, though, laid blame for the spike in crime on protesters who demonstrated against police brutality following the killing of George Floyd in Minneapolis. He claimed that Democrats were allowing crime to run amok in their cities. But despite pockets of violence in both Democratic- and Republican-run cities, the protests were mostly peaceful. A Harvard Radcliffe Institute study found there were no injuries reported in 97% of the events. Still, Republican leaders continue to echo Trump's claims.

Crime is Rising but Still Better than Five Years Ago

And while crime is rising — homicides and shootings are up from the same period last year in Chicago; Los Angeles; Minneapolis; Portland, Oregon; Baltimore; Baton Rouge, Louisiana; and Houston — violent crime overall remains lower than it was a decade ago or even five years ago. And most violent crimes plummeted during the first six months of the pandemic, as people stayed indoors and away from others.

Crime started creeping up last summer, a trend criminologists say is hard to define and is likely due to a variety of factors such as historic unemployment, fear over the virus and mass anger over stay-at-home orders. Public mass shootings have also made an alarming return.

“Many of us — if not most of us — are seeing a rise in crime, while at the same time, we’re hearing calls for reform,” Baltimore Police Commissioner Michael Harrison said of cities in remarks at the police forum. “And some of those calls are to the extreme of dismantle and defund ... while all of the same time we’re sworn to protect the people.”

Interest in guns, too, is on the rise. The number of people stopped from buying guns through the U.S. background check system hit an all-time high of more than 300,000 last year amid a surge of firearm sales. And several states have passed laws barring federal gun control laws from taking effect.

Louisville Metro Police Chief Erika Shields said lax gun laws and the presence of illegal guns on the streets are compounding the violence.

“When everyone can have a gun, they tend to,” she said. “And it just leads to more illegal guns on the street.”

The Justice Department recently announced a sweeping investigation into the Louisville police over the March 2020 death of Breonna Taylor, who was shot to death by police during a raid at her home. A similar investigation was launched into the Minneapolis police force.

Will Biden’s Action Impede Criminal Justice Reform

The rise in violence comes against the backdrop of a national debate on policing and as a police reform bill is being crafted in Congress. Psaki on Tuesday dismissed suggestions that a presidential event focused on cracking down on crime would undermine that legislative effort.

As a senator, Biden wrote several major anti-crime packages, including a 1994 bill that contained provisions now viewed by some as an overreaction to the crime spikes in the 1980s and 1990s. Critics say those bills helped lead to mass incarceration of Black Americans, and Biden’s involvement became a flashpoint in his 2020 campaign.

Biden has expressed second thoughts about some aspects of the legislation, and he has acknowledged its harmful impact on many Black Americans. But he and his allies still hold out the law’s provisions to address domestic violence, ban assault weapons and finance community policing.

release issued by former District Attorney Bruce Castor contained an unconditional promise that the Commonwealth would not prosecute Appellant (Bill Cosby) in perpetuity,” Justice Thomas Saylor said in his dissenting opinion.

Cosby served three of his 10-year sentences in a maximum security prison outside of Philadelphia. Cosby was initially charged and sentenced in 2018 for drugging and sexually assaulting a woman in his home in Philadelphia in 2004.

In 2015 New York magazine published a portrait of 35 women who accused Cosby of sexual assault.

A Range of Reactions

When Cosby was convicted in 2018, lawyer Gloria Allred, who had been contacted by alleged victims of Cosby, said she was shocked by the verdict.

“I was very pleasantly surprised with the guilty verdict. Shocked, actually, because I have been practicing for 42 years and it has become so normal for women not to be believed when they allege they were assaulted, particularly by a rich, famous, powerful celebrity,” Allred explained in an editorial published in The Guardian in 2018.

Cosby’s conviction was rare, but marked an important decision and moment in the #MeToo Movement during a time in which other high-profile men were facing charges such as Harvey Weinstein and Jeffrey Epstein.

“The three Bill Cosby accusers I represent and I are disgusted that he is a free man today. He is not released because he is innocent,” Lisa Bloom, lawyer and daughter of Allred, tweeted. “He is released because a prosecutor promised him years ago that he would not be brought to justice, without even making a deal for him to do time.”

Long-time friends and supporters of Cosby expressed victory at the verdict, including Cosby’s on-screen wife from “The Cosby Show,” Phylicia Rashad.

KEEPING IT REAL

initial barrier to acknowledging the problem and seeking help. And so, we remain silent even among ourselves. Banding together in times of a mental health crisis and then moving on with our lives as best we can—yet always with a level of trepidation about how to best support the family members who move in and out of episodic events.

With every major crisis we pray we can manage through and not have to involve the police though there have been more than one occasion when we had no option—we could only pray. And we pray for the wisdom to pull those at times in peril though the stress and dangers associated with suicide ideation. Others who have walked this path know the toll it takes on an extended family.

I take no comfort in knowing other families live this same reality. In the Black community in particular, Mental Health America reports 16 percent of African Americans deal with a mental illness. Recognizing in many instances, mental illness in the Black community is brought on by the demographic and societal stressors pressed upon African Americans. It leaves me wondering how much more the families who have a genetic predisposition to mental illness are further impacted by these stressors.

July is National Minority Mental Health Awareness Month also known as Black, Indigenous, and people of color (BIPOC) Mental Health Month. I share my family's story in the hope it will encourage other families not to be ashamed or afraid to seek help. We share openly about generational hypertension, heart disease and other health issues without fear of criticism for our genetic predisposition.

When we share our stories about mental illness, we help build compassion and understanding for those who “suffer for their sanity.”

Too often when a family experiences a mental health crisis for the first time they do not know where to turn. For a list of services in California, visit <https://www.dhcs.ca.gov/services>. Click here for mental health services in Riverside County, or here for services in San Bernardino County. The Suicide Prevention Lifeline is available 24 hours a day, seven days a week at 1-800-273-TALK (8255) or Live Online Chat. The National Association of Mental Illness (NAMI) Helpline is open Monday through Friday, 7:00 a.m. to 5:00 p.m. at 1-800-950-NAMI (6264) or info@nami.org.

Understanding and awareness of mental illness can go a long way toward helping to heal families and our community. It is the only way to reduce and eliminate the stigmatization and shame that accompanies mental illness.

Of course, this is just my opinion. I'm keeping it real.

vaccinated employees may not be required to wear masks in most workplaces. Masks, however, are also still required in long-term-care facilities, homeless shelters, emergency shelters, cooling centers, correctional facilities and detention centers.

There are concerns by unions and others that these requirements may impinge upon individuals' freedom to medical confidentiality. There are also concerns that removing mask mandates may be premature and expose workers to further unnecessary risks.

Employers are still required to provide masks and other safety equipment to unvaccinated workers, prompting concerns from employers over the cost of continuing to supply this equipment to their employees.

Despite the state's progress on vaccinations, California has fallen short of vaccinating the 70 to 80 percent of the total population required to be vaccinated to reach herd immunity.

For this reason, in addition to uncertainty regarding the potential future impact of COVID-19 variants, all working people should check the California Department of Public Health COVID-19 guidelines for face coverings and/or CDC Covid 19 guidelines for appropriate instructions on how to stay safe in the workplace.

signs of mental health distress. Those signs include depression, anxiety, toxic levels of stress and trauma. "We need to increase access to mental health support systems in schools which are historically understaffed."

Many times, these are the only places underserved communities can access this kind of care because of the myriad of issues people can come up against including not having the proper kinds of insurance. Community organizations such as Primm's try to bridge the service gap, but the need is great.

Primm also spoke about working to remove the stigma that still exists around mental illness and seeking treatment when we notice the warning signs in loved ones, friends, and family.

If you or someone you know is struggling with thoughts of suicide, the National Suicide Prevention Lifeline is staffed 24 hours a day, seven days a week and can be reached at 1-800-273-TALK (1-800-273-8255). BIG TOBACCO'S RACIST USE OF THE M-WORD

This ends now.
WeAreNotProfit.org

© 2021 California Department of Public Health

Menthol cigarettes are the tobacco industry's racist weapon of choice in Black communities.

Big Tobacco has flooded communities of color with menthol and even floated rumors that it somehow makes cigarettes less deadly. This manipulation caused massive death.

So enough with the death of our people.

Death to the racist ways of the tobacco industry.

Death to the lies and deceit that they've spread.

And finally, death to the use of the M-word.
