KEEPING IT REAL

Bearing Witness to Injustice: From Ron Settles to George Floyd, Nothing's Changed

At the risk of appearing redundant, I want to mirror what others have said in response to the recent series of deaths involving one Black woman and two Black men in three separate incidents at the hands of police or vigilantes, as well as the hundreds of other Black men and women murdered under the color of authority.

Those most recently gone too soon, #blacklivesmatter, #sayhername, include Ahmaud Arbery who was stalked, ambushed and shot to death by vigilantes in Georgia in February while jogging though his story did not gain national attention until early May.

In mid-May, EMT Breonna Taylor was shot to death in her bed by police in the state of Kentucky as they served a no-knock warrant at her home in the middle of the night. They were seeking a suspect who not only did not live there, but the person police officers sought was already in their custody.

And more recently, George Floyd was choked to death on the streets of Minnesota in the most inhumane way by a cabal of police, one of which performed the execution by placing his knee on Floyd's neck and bearing down with his full weight for more than nine minutes, smothering the life out of him while other officers abetted or stood guard during the execution.

What troubled me in addition to the inhumanity of Floyd's death was the maniacal expression on the face of the officer who deprived him of the breath of life.

"My, God!" I screamed in the depths of my being, as millions of others probably did when viewing the tortuous death of George Floyd's death for the first time. I must stop here, to applaud the courage of young 17-year-old Darnella Frazier who bravely stood her ground and recorded the tragedy, allowing the world to bear witness to what occurred.

The Black community is weary. It has grown tired of a double-standard-democracy that has not and is not treating Black Americans with the respect and full rights of citizenship paid for by their ancestors, while many who sit in judgement over them, are given theirs, for free. The nation has witnessed far too many unjustified Black deaths at the hands of police and White vigilantes. And like others of my generation—I've witnessed too many and walked in too many

California Senator Dianne Feinstein Cleared in Stock Trade Charges

Washington, D.C. - Last week the Justice Department dropped its investigation into stock trades by the husband of California Senator Dianne Feinstein in the days just before the coronavirus outbreak took hold in America. Feinstein was among a handful of senators including the head of the Senate Intelligence Committee Richard Burr, who may have violated the law, which prevents lawmakers from using insider information to their personal advantage. In this instance the trades were made subsequent to a Senate Intelligence Committee briefing about what was then, concerns over an impending impact of the coronavirus, in the period before the public was advised of its dangers. Feinstein repeatedly denied allegations she did anything wrong claiming the trades were made by her husband.

Barbershops, Hair Salons and Places of Worship Reopen with New Guidelines

Sacramento

On Tuesday, May 26, 2020 California Governor Gavin Newsom empowered 47 of the state's 58 counties, including Riverside and San Bernardino, to reopen Barber and Beauty Shops with some modifications.

The governor's surprise announcement came on the heels of notification from the California Department of Public Health (CDPH) that attested to the 47 counties having met the criteria for accelerated re-opening including hair salons and barbershops with modifications such as mandatory face coverings for both barbers or stylists and clients.

Limited activities in these facilities include requirements for both the worker and customer to wear face coverings throughout the service which are limited to haircuts, hair coloring, blowouts, weaves and extensions, braiding, lock maintenance, wig maintenance and hair relaxing treatments.

Salon operators are restricted from performing any services that involve touching a client's face. This prohibits such services as shaving, facial waxing, threading, eyelash services and facials.

Operators and patrons must maintain physical distancing of at least six feet except when providing haircutting and other close contact services.

In addition, owners must provide temperature and/or symptom screenings for all workers at the beginning of their shift and any vendors, contractors, or other workers entering the establishment; while workers and customers who are sick or exhibiting symptoms

Social Media and Local Business Support, Make the Difference in Surviving and Thriving

Redlands

In March, when everything shut down, Kadir Fakir and his sister Kamrun Parveen, founders of Cheesewalla, a gourmet grilled cheese shop in Redlands, were on edge.

"I would wake up every morning to look at my phone and see what was going on. I have 13 employees—they have no income. So, I was terrified that having to shut down, what the employees were going to do? What's my sister going to do? We weren't sure."

Luckily, the duo was initially able to operate, not at a profit, but at break-even, paying employees for the hours they were working.

By April, the team was happy to have a job and felt still being open was a blessing. According to Fakir, that was the best thing they did.

One of the greatest lessons in Cheesewalla's survival proved to be the value of social media and the support of the local business community.

"I was on the phone with different business owners, exchanging stories, asking what they're doing, what's working for them. Business owners would tell us the delivery services they were using, what platforms they were using to market."

Instagram proved to be one of the biggest lifelines because of the amount of people active on the platform.

Due to the health crisis and ongoing changes in operations, local Redlands businesses rallied around each other. As Fakir shared, "Everyone

African-American Valedictorians and Twins Make Class of 2020 History

The Class of 2020 will go down in history for several reasons, but in the San Bernardino City Unified School District (SBCUSD), there are a few top students who deserve an extra spotlight.

The SBCUSD Class of 2020 proudly boasts three African-American valedictorians from three different high schools. All three will receive a $1,000 scholarship from the Delta Rho Chapter of the National Sorority of Phi Delta Kappa, Inc.

Kyla Duhart is not only Indian Springs High School's first African-American valedictorian, she is also a student Board of Education member and a future SBCUSD math teacher. It's no surprise that several colleges and universities were eager to welcome Duhart, including Grand Canyon University and the University of California, Santa Barbara, but she is planning to attend Azusa Pacific University and earn her teaching credential.

Matthew Jackson is one of three San Geronimo High School valedictorians. Prior to attending San G, Jackson was a student at Rodriguez PREP Academy. In the future, Jackson will be

Local Doctor Creates Isolation Unit to Transport COVID-19 Patients

The COVID-19 isolation transportation unit created by Dr. Mark Comunale

San Bernardino

A local doctor is seeking Food and Drug Administration (FDA) approval for a Patient Isolation Transport Unit he created to move COVID-19 patients around.

Dr. Mark Comunale, head of anesthesiology at Arrowhead Regional Medical Center in Colton, has created a unit to easily transport and limit the spread of the infectious coronavirus disease.

In an interview with KABC-TV News, Comunale said he wants to protect the healthcare workers from contracting the virus.

"We've been able to work very closely with the folks at the FDA to get this hopefully to market in the next week or two," Comunale explained.

Ebola isolation procedures used during the 2014 outbreak required hospitals to create negative pressure rooms that use lower air pressure for Ebola patients. The type of isolation required for Ebola patients was equivalent to patients with the flu. This included putting the patient in a private room.

"When we had Ebola, I was watching them convert rooms into negative-pressure rooms, which is a lot of work. And in addition to that, you have to create an antechamber where you get your equipment on," said Comunale in an ABC-7 interview.

This technique inspired Comunale to create this unique unit for COVID patients. Creating the same concept to minimize spread by transporting patients around the hospital in a negative pressure unit that traps harmful particles within the space.

The chamber allows a unique negative pressure space to be created around the infected patient. It reduces the spread to not only hospital staff but families as well.

The unit is made of medical-grade vinyl, gloved access for medical staff to use along with personal protective equipment.

Once approved by the FDA, Comunale has a manufacturer in mind willing to produce 600 units a week.

Riverside Residents Donate Stimulus Check to Local Food Bank

Riverside resident Jim Judge and his wife donated their stimulus check to Feeding America

A Riverside couple did the unexpected with their government issued stimulus check by donating to feed others during this pandemic.

County residents are encouraged to donate to local food banks in the midst of this global pandemic as food insecurity continues to be an ongoing issue--being fought by caring individuals like Jim and Phyllis Judge.

"There are a lot more people in dire positions. If you don't need the money, donate it to a local food bank to help the needy," Jim Judge said.

As the nation faces many financial stressors due to COVID-19, the Judges took it upon themselves to be philanthropic with their checks and give back.

According to the Inland Empire Business Journal the couple is living off Jim's social security and their retirement incomes and are financially comfortable.

The Judges would like people who are capable of donating to Feeding America Riverside-San Bernardino (FARSB), the largest food bank in the Inland Empire. Their family was the first to donate during the pandemic.

FARSB delivers up to two million pounds of food per month and provides emergency relief and education to families.

The organization works with 250 nonprofits and serves 1.2 million people every year in Riverside and San Bernardino counties. Over 400,000 people in the Inland Empire don't have access to adequate meals.

The couple has lived in Riverside for 65 years and has donated $2,400 to feed up to 192,000 families.

Other couples followed suit like William and Robin DeKleine, and Michael and Amanda Bates--both couples donated their entire stimulus checks to a food bank and nonprofits for disadvantaged individuals.

"We are a retired couple with sufficient income to live comfortably. This is stimulus money that we don't need that can be better used by people who do," the DeKleine family said.

Julia Sanzberro and her husband donated to multiple charities that mattered to them by splitting up their check.

Not everyone is capable of donating their stimulus check. However,

Californians Join the Movement for Justice as Civil Unrest Escalates Nationally

S.E. Williams | Contributor

Tensions are high across the nation as Americans of all races rise in protest against the killings of Black people by the police and other vigilantes.

In recent days protesters have gathered in cities across the country braving threats of serious illness and/or death from the still present COVID-19 virus, in an overwhelming call for justice and an end to how police perpetrate violence against people of color, especially African-Americans.

Despite recent years of declining violent crime; despite the country being on lock down for more than two months and the crime rate declining even more—the number of questionable deaths of Black men and women at the hands of the country's police has remained on pace with 2019.

In recent weeks, the media has covered the senseless deaths of Black people at the hands of police even as the nation sheltered in place and more than 100,000 souls are dead from COVID-19—people of color have succumbed to the virus in numbers far disproportionate to their share of the population.

Tensions in the Black community were already high and rose higher with the murder of Ahmaud Arbery who was stalked, ambushed, and shot to death by vigilantes in Georgia while jogging. Though he was killed February 23, his story did not gain national attention until early May when a video of the killing was shared on social media.

“Over the last few days we have seen millions of people lift their voices in anger, rightfully outraged at how systemic racism is allowed to persist. Every single day, people of color are disadvantaged and discriminated against.”

- Governor Gavin Newsom

Then there was the murder of Emergency Medical Technician (EMT) Breonna Taylor who on March 13, was shot to death in her bed by police in the state of Kentucky as they served a “no-knock” warrant at her home in the middle of the night.

The person they sought did not live at the address and was already in police custody. No one has been arrested in her case except her boyfriend who, thinking the police were burglars, shot and injured an officer as he sought to protect Taylor. Despite her heroic service to her community in the midst of a deadly pandemic, she was disrespected even in death as the city’s mayor appeared not to think enough of her as a Black woman to even acknowledge her service as an EMT particularly in light of her tragic demise.

But it took the death of George Floyd who had the life choked out of him in the most inhumane way by a police officer who knelt into his neck literally smothering him to death. Floyd pleaded, “I can’t breathe.” He cried out for his deceased mother. The officers knew he was in distress, they had even called for paramedics—it took Floyd nine agonizing minutes to die. And the entire scene was captured on video by a young by-stander.

In response, anger has spilled out in communities all over America and sadly, with the anger has come episodes of violence, and California is no exception.

From Fontana to Los Angeles and from San Diego to Oakland and points in between, people have taken to the streets in large numbers joining their fellow Americans in demanding police accountability and an end to institutional racism.

There is also mounting concern nationally regarding the possible role extremists may be playing in helping to ignite violence and disrupt many orderly demonstrations.

On Saturday, California Governor Gavin Newsom assured constituents the state was actively monitoring violent extremist organizations ahead of expected activity Saturday evening.

“Over the last few days,” the governor began, “we have seen millions of people lift their voices in anger, rightfully outraged at how systemic racism is allowed to persist. Every single day, people of color are disadvantaged and discriminated against. Black and Latino men in particular, face mortal danger all across this country simply because of their race. Every person who has raised their voice should be heard”.

The governor also confirmed what other governors and mayors in the country have inferred. “In California and across the country, there are indications that violent actors may be attempting to use these protests for their own agendas,” he highlighted and continued. “We are closely monitoring, organizing by violent extremist organizations . . . To those who seek to exploit Californians’ pain to sow chaos and destruction, you are not welcome. Our state and nation must build from this moment united and more resolved than ever to address racism and its root causes.”

Sadly, during Friday’s demonstrations a man working security for the Federal Protective Services was shot to death in Oakland and another was wounded. Late Saturday night, the San Francisco Chronicle reported local authorities are searching for a white van they believe was involved in the shooting. ABC 7 News reported the deceased officer was 53-year old Patrick Underwood of Pinole, California.

Governor Newsom addressed the security officer’s loss stating, “This is a moment of pain for our state and nation. We are also mourning the tragic loss of a federal security officer and wounding of another in Oakland.”

After expressing his condolences and those of his wife Jennifer to their families, friends and colleagues he declared, “No one should rush to conflate this heinous act with the protests last night. A federal investigation is underway, and we should let that process play out.”

Although DHS officials have characterized the officer’s killing as an act of domestic terrorism, they also stressed it was too early to identify a motive.

Late Saturday night as protests in Los Angeles continued to be fraught with looting and destruction, the governor declared a State of Emergency in the city and deployed the National Guard in an attempt to restore order and prevent any further damage to life and businesses.

Bad actions were not restricted to demonstrators. In states across the country including California, New York and others there are video recordings of police acting badly including an incident in New York where an officer drove his vehicle directly into a crowd, in Los Angeles where rubber bullets were shot at a group of peaceful protesters, and in at least three separate incidents in recent days the police have intentionally targeted the media.

San Bernardino Received State Approval to Reopen

Saida Maalin | Contributor

San Bernardino County submitted a plan to the State and last week was given authorization to move into a later stage of Phase 2 by reopening retail shops, hospitals, restaurants and other higher risk workplaces.

“We know our businesses are hurting, and we know business owners are doing everything they can to prepare to open safely,” said Curt Hagman, chairman of the Board of Supervisors. “We are with you on wanting to reopen as fast as possible, and we’re going to work around the clock until you can.”

The county’s plan to move further into Phase 2 included a readiness check which ensured the county met the required state criteria to prevent and lower risk of the novel coronavirus.

Governor Gavin Newsom previously introduced a four stage plan considered a Resilience Roadmap for businesses in the state to establish they’re COVID compliant.

Part of the requirements for moving further into Phase 2 required the county to show COVID-19 cases were low enough to be contained; that essential workers are protected, the area’s testing capacity is adequate, and there is adequate hospital capacity.

More information regarding “readiness criteria” can be found on the California Department of Public Health website.

CELEBRATING THE CLASS OF 2020

 KYLA DUHART INDIAN SPRINGS HIGH SCHOOL	 RANDY MEDLEY JR. CAJON HIGH SCHOOL	 MATTHEW JACKSON SAN GORGONIO HIGH SCHOOL

Building One Community

Editor's Note: Dr. Tomás Morales, president of California State University San Bernardino, penned this letter to the university campus and gave us permission to share his poignant reflections with the wider community.

Dear Campus Community —

We have a problem in the United States. It is not a new problem—it has been with us since the nation's founding. It tore us apart in a bloody Civil War and it is tearing us apart now. It is intrinsic to our lives, whether we have the privilege of ignoring it or have the pain of enduring it. And that problem is structural racism, which pervades every corner of our society. It affects health, quality of life, where and how people live, and it is killing our fellow Americans and those who seek refuge here.

Let us collectively come together to express our grief and send our condolences to the family of George Floyd. Of Breonna Taylor. Of Ahmaud Arbery. They are just the latest African Americans who have lost their lives on account of this tragic and seemingly indelible strand of our history. Let us also lend our support to the African American members of our community who have suffered trauma because of these deaths or similar threats and incidences in their own lives. They have never been able to look away. It is time for the rest of us to stop looking the other way.

We say their names. But these three deaths do not stand alone. The rise of attacks on our Asian American communities as a result of COVID-19, the increasing levels of anti-Semitism, the growing number of anti-Muslim hate groups along with the upsurge of Islamophobia, and the intensification and escalation of anti-immigrant intolerance which pervade our country today must be rejected. White supremacy must be rejected. Bigotry must be rejected. Hate must be rejected.

No one in this country should be putting their very existence at risk by attempting to go about their daily life because the color of their skin, the clothing they wear, or visible marks of the religion they practice is marked as "other."

We must as a university community live our core values of inclusivity, innovation, integrity, respect, social justice and equity and therefore we must reject the killing of Americans of color, the racist profiling of people of color and continue to support all the communities we serve. That includes the actual people on this campus. It is each of you reading this. And when I say diversity is who we are, it is who we are.

Until we lift up and address the needs of those of us and our neighbors who are hurting or harmed by this systemic racism, we cannot move forward.

Because we move forward together or not at all.

It is not enough for us to say we are against racism. We need to become anti-racist. This means examining the biases that each of us carry and then acknowledging them, taking responsibility for them, and daily striving to change them. Because those biases are barriers, preventing us from meaningful engagement with one another as fellow human beings.

I continue to be committed to engaging the campus community in a variety of ways. Please watch your email in the coming days for opportunities to connect, discuss and learn in order to assist us to move through these times.

Earlier today, Bernice King stated, quoting her father, Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr.: "True peace is not merely the absence of tension; it is the presence of justice." Let us gather, in virtual community, and say, Enough. Because it will take each and every one of us, working hand-in-hand, to build a better future.

WDB Offers Strategies for Job Seekers and Local Businesses San Bernardino

The County's Work Development Board (WDB) recently expressed confidence San Bernardino County will make it out of this global pandemic due to the Inland Empire's amazing location, young consumers and a growing economy that existed previous to the pandemic. The WDB has played a crucial role in developing strategies to educate and help local businesses while also helping residents prepare for well paid careers.

As the pandemic rolls on, employees have lost jobs, small businesses are struggling and the need for social distancing continues, the county is simultaneously seeking to regain economic stability. WDB is aware of the role it will play in the county's recovery efforts.

Acknowledging the Inland Empire had a good business climate and reputation before COVID-19, WDB believes this foundation will allow the economy to bounce back.

The Innovation and Opportunity Act created in 2017 was implemented locally by WDB, public partners, customers, education, labor, economic development and community based organizations created workforce training partnerships, initiatives and programs to support area residents seeking employment opportunities and businesses seeking qualified employees.

WDB officials report the inland region is typically viewed by businesses as a competitive economic market in the areas of technology, manufacturing, trade and healthcare.

The agency offers many services for job seekers and businesses to accommodate the area's competitive status in these industries. Residents who previously availed themselves to WDB services have received training and landed well-paid careers.

Businesses are provided online and phone resources in addition to other tools amid COVID-19 such as a free human resources hotline, recruitment resources for job applicants, demonstrations against the injustice of it all.

My first demonstration against police brutality occurred long ago when I joined a march against the Signal Hill Police Department in the City of Long Beach demanding justice and accountability for the death of a 21-year-old college football player named, Ron Settles, a promising running back who played for Cal State Long Beach in 1981.

Settles was taken into custody by the Signal Hill police for allegedly speeding on his way to work one day. Two hours later, he was found hanging in his cell, dead.

During that era, the Signal Hill police were accused more than 40 times of excessive violence and/or false arrests. In the Settles case, the public would later learn he was repeatedly beaten in the head during his intake, yet officers claimed he committed suicide by hanging himself.

Blacks and others did not believe the police officers' story and their doubts were soon confirmed when a coroner's report stated Settles had, "died at the hands of another."

Settles was one among hundreds of Black men who lost their lives at the hands of police across the country that year. The story of what happened to him at the hands of Signal Hill police that day, may never be known. There were no police body cameras or cell phones to record the event and the truth was never revealed by the officers involved beyond their insistence, Settles was uncooperative. No one was ever charged with his death.

I was a young mother when Settles was killed, concerned about injustice, saddened by his murder, and worried about what the future might hold for my own 10-year-old son.

In response, I joined the protests demanding police accountability and justice for the Settles family. On Saturday afternoon of the first demonstration while my husband worked, I took my two children and we made our way to the Signal Hill Police Department—my daughter was still in a stroller on that day more than 41 years ago.

During the protest, a woman next to me motioned to look up as we stood in the courtyard in front of the police station. I did and was suddenly gripped with panic, terror, and fear.

I watched as police stood shoulder to shoulder on the rooftops of city buildings surrounding the courtyard with high powered rifles trained down upon us.

Despite my fear, I stayed. Not for myself, but for Settles family, for my ten-year-old son and the sons of other Black mothers. And, unknowingly, I stood for the two grandsons my own son and his wife would bring into my life years later. I stood because I knew if we as a people do not stand for us, who will?

After that day however I never took my children with me. It was too dangerous. I share this story of an example of why we as a people grow weary. I now understand what my heroine Fannie Lou Hammer meant when she said in 1964, "I'm sick and tired of being sick and tired."

Despite the dangers and negative incidents marring their efforts to send a message, I am proud of the young people standing today. I will not waste my keystrokes apologizing for the destruction occurring in the streets by some, and instead stress what we know, violence rarely leads to a constructive solution. However, I must say for the record, if the FBI could identify the September 11th hijackers within hours, it is hard to believe they cannot identify who is creating the trouble in these protests.

In the meantime, we must not lose focus regarding why people across the country are protesting—a Black man was viciously murdered with brutal and excessive force by police in broad daylight—Floyd had no weapon and the officers were merely investigating an alleged "nonviolent" crime related to a counterfeit $20 bill.

To date, only one of the four involved has been arrested and charged, not with first or second, but third-degree murder. That is not enough. They should all be arrested, charged, tried, and although innocent until proven guilty—convicted.

Regarding the case that moved me to action years ago, I remain filled with the same passion for justice that propelled me to the streets in the early 1980s.

I am inspired by the passion and commitment of the young people taking to the streets today demanding a better future for themselves and generations to come. This is the legacy of Black people in America. Must it continue to be our destiny?

It has been forty years since racists police viciously stole the life of young Ron Settles and in the African tradition, I continue to call his name—"Ron Settles." I also say his name in honor of the thousands who have suffered similar fates at the hands of police over the past four decades, in recent weeks and months, and over the past 400 plus years, for that matter.

Martin Luther King Jr. said he was once asked, how long it would take for the nation to be fair and just to Black people. He replied, "Not long, because no lie can live forever." Yet, he too recognized that power concedes nothing without a demand.

Taking to the streets to demand justice during a worldwide pandemic is a risk these young people appear willing to take in hopes of a better tomorrow. They should not have to risk their lives to demand their right to life—#blacklivesmatter, #sayhername.

Of course, this is just my opinion. I'm keeping it real.

NEWS IN BRIEF

Outreach to Inland Empire Immigrants

Riverside, CA – Across California there are nearly two million undocumented immigrants. They, like so many others, are at risk during these difficult times. Unlike citizens however, they were ineligible for the $1200 stimulus payments provided to individuals by the federal government. In response to the federal government's failure to provide humanitarian support in this regard, California Governor Gavin Newsom allocated $75 million to support those residing in California earlier this month. Under this program which launched May 25, 2020, immigrants without documentation are eligible to receive payments up to $1,000 per household. The money will be available until the funding is exhausted. Following is a list of locations in the inland region where those eligible for assistance can apply. They include the San Bernardino Community Service Center, (888) 444-0170, (909) 521-7535 www.sbcsinc.org, covering Inyo, Riverside and San Bernardino; TODEC Legal Center Perris, (888) 863-3291 www.TODEC.org, also serving Inyo, Riverside, San Bernardino.

of COVID-19 must be encouraged to stay home. All customers entering the establishment must be screened upon arrival and their appointments should be cancelled or rescheduled if they have any signs of illness.

Nail salons and/or services remain closed and/or restricted at this time.

“Together, Californians have limited infections in our state, and because of that work, many counties may make a decision to restart modified hair and barber services,” said Dr. Sonia Angell, State Public Health Officer and Director of the California Department of Public Health.

Angell, however, was also quick to note how COVID-19 is still present in California communities and residents—are still at risk.

“As we venture outside our homes, it is critically important to keep physical distance, wear face coverings in public, and wash hands frequently to help protect yourself and those around you,” she concluded.

The governor’s announcement on Tuesday followed the governor’s announcement last weekend which included guidelines and authorization for reopening places of worship. San Bernardino County Board of Supervisors Chairman Curt Hagman commented about the announcements stating, “San Bernardino County businesses and residents worked very hard and made tremendous sacrifices to make this moment possible.”

Hagman concluded with a word of caution, “The COVID-19 virus is still very present throughout our county. With places of worship, dine-in restaurants, stores, and malls now suddenly open, it is more important than ever that we practice physical distancing, wear face coverings in public, and frequently wash our hands to protect ourselves and those around us.”

Additional information about the state’s COVID-19 guidance is available here. For more information about reopening California and what individuals can do to prevent the spread of COVID-19 is available at covid19.ca.gov.

Fakir credits shared social media and promotion among the local businesses with bringing him new followers and customers despite the quarantine. “Small businesses definitely thrive in our community. All our regulars were coming in a lot more just because they knew the importance of shopping local. I think they knew, if they didn't come to us, we would have had to shut down,” said Fakir.

As the County progresses through its reopening phases, Fakir said every industry must be ready for change and that business will need to stay on top of new rules and regulations.

However, for business to thrive, Fakir can't stress enough the value of social media marketing.

“I think people have seen how well it's worked for us. Use it. It's something free.”

Fakir’s other business advice is to stay on top of what resources are available out there, including programs such as the County’s COVID Compliant Business Partnership Program.

The good news is business is getting better. He added, “Since things have opened up, we can't even keep up with the demand. Every day has been slammed. People are getting back into the flow of things, wanting to get out a little bit more.”

We Count For What Matters

For every person left uncoun ted, California could lose up to $1,000 per person each year for the next ten years. That's $1,000 less per person per year for the next 10 years for health care services, parks, and roads that support our local communities. Exercise your right. Secure services and resources that matter to your community. Count today online at MY2020CENSUS.GOV or by phone at 844-330-2020. Questions?
