KEEPING IT REAL

Hard Work

"Turnin' nothin' into something is good work and you get nothin' without struggle and hard work"

- NAS

Amazon workers protest for better COVID protection on the job in June. (Photo courtesy of NPR)

In the age of COVID-19 the term “hard work” took on a unique meaning. For most of this year “hard work” to many meant risking their lives as essential workers, while many others had to “work hard” to find new jobs in competition with the near 31 million Americans who are also unemployed; in addition to competing with the millions who may be looking for second jobs because they are underemployed.

Considering this landscape, Labor Day 2020 was tinged with unease. This was especially true for African Americans who remain unemployed at rates that, as usual, far outpace the unemployment rates of other groups.

Although the president likes to brag about all he has done for Black people, despite the realities of Black unemployment in the age of COVID and their widely disproportionate number of deaths from the virus, he still frequently touts the low pre-COVID unemployment rate though he has never acknowledged how, proportionate to other ethnic groups, not much changed in terms of equity.

In other words, when the Black unemployment rate dropped, the unemployment rates among other groups dropped even lower. Everything is relative even in the worst of times for everyone.

2020 is proving to be one of the hardest years for workers since the Great Depression and it continues to stress households across the inland region.

According to the U.S. Bureau of Labor Statistics, among African Americans the unemployment rate went from a low of 6.3% (3.6% Whites) in January nationally to a high of 16.8% in May (12.4% Whites) and ended July with an unemployment rate of 14.6% (9.2% Whites).

It is during this tumultuous moment we must be the most vigilant in working to ensure as plans are being made about the future of work in America, workers have a seat at the table. The future should not solely be structured by those who sit at the top but also include input from the workers, who play such a significant role in creating their wealth.

Drunk Driving: CHP Officer Shares Personal Story

On November 11, 2017, a drunk driver killed a family of three – close relatives of California Highway Patrol (CHP) Officer Mark Latulippe of San Diego. In the hope of saving lives, the CHP has released, "Falling: A documentary film from the California Highway Patrol." In this docudrama Officer Latulippe shares his heart wrenching journey that fateful day in 2017 and the devastating impact drunken driving had on his life and his commitment to prevent others from suffering a similar loss. The 14-minute film is more than worth the time it will take to watch it as it drives home how one wrong decision—the decision to drink and drive—can change the lives of so many.

San Bernardino County Residents: Get Tested for COVID-19

Saida Maalin | Contributor

As COVID-19 continues to be the focus throughout California, counties have experienced shortages in testing supplies.

San Bernardino County recently secured a contract with Fulgent Genetics. As a result, increased testing equipment is now available and the county is encouraging residents to get tested while they last.

Fulgent Genetics provides affordable and flexible genetic and diagnostic testing for patients to improve overall health. The supply of COVID-19 testing they provide is Polymersase Chain Reaction (PCR) which includes a short nasal swab. The company partnered with Healthvana, HIPAA secured mobile portal to process test results.

“All County residents who want to get this virus under control, see our numbers improve, and allow our businesses to reopen should get tested,” said Board of Supervisors Chairman Curt Hagman. “Now that our testing capacity has expanded and stabilized, we hope that every resident, regardless of whether they have experienced any symptoms, will make an appointment to get tested.”

Hagman stated the procedure is painless, free and available to everyone without a prescription.

Testing is available with appointments at ten locations including: Fontana, Hesperia, Montclair, Ontario, Rancho Cucamonga, Redlands, Rialto, San Bernardino, Victorville and Arrowhead Regional Medical Center in Colton. Test results will be between 48 hours and five days following the test.

Insurance is not required because testing is free, however you should be prepared to provide your insurance if you do have it.

Statewide safety guidelines remain in place and local businesses also remain closed due to the spread of the coronavirus. San Bernardino still remains on the state’s Monitoring List and in order for the county to get off the list residents are encouraged to get tested even if they are not showing symptoms.

“Increasing the number of people tested is essential to lowering the infection rate, getting the people of the County of San Bernardino back to work, and allowing recently reopened businesses to stay open,” said County Public Health Director Corwin Porter. “Testing gives us a better idea of community spread, the scope of infections, and helps us concentrate medical resources where they are needed most. And working in concert with our contact tracing team, we can better stop the spread of the virus.”

Everyone should do their best to comply with state and federal safety guidelines by wearing masks and avoiding big gatherings. Take the necessary precautions to keep yourself and your family safe.

To schedule an appointment visit www.sbcovid19.com/testing-sites.

NEWS IN BRIEF

Filling a Hole in the State’s Economy

Riverside, CA – As the economy cautiously comes to life with trepidations about what the future may hold in a COVID world, economic forecaster Beacon Economics (BE) recently provided a rosy economic outlook predicting a strong recovery during the latter part of 2020 followed by a near full recovery in 2021. This prediction for California however stood in stark contrast to the outlook provided by the Congressional Budget Office which suggested it will take close to a decade for the nation to reach full recovery. Although more than 140K jobs were added to the state’s economy in July, BE did acknowledge the 1.7 million jobs lost in the state due to the pandemic, will take time to recover even after the virus is fully contained. “In 2019, the state’s economy added roughly 22,000 jobs per month,” the forecaster stated. “For each month that it takes to return to the pre-pandemic level of employment, the state is effectively losing a further 22,000 jobs per month, based on the 2019 trend.”

The Long Agonizing Destruction of the U.S. Postal Service by the Usual Suspects

Phyllis Kimber-Wilcox | Contributor

As with many things in the United States of America, the heavy lifting of creating and maintaining iconic institutions inevitably falls to those least valued; in the beginning of this nation it was enslaved Africans and, in this instance, the institution under discussion would eventually become the postal service.

An article on the Smithsonian Institute's National Postal Museum's website reported, "African Americans have been involved unofficially in the delivery of mail since the beginning of slavery in America. Slave masters used enslaved Africans to deliver mail and packages between plantations and towns.

In 1794, Postmaster General Timothy Pickering wrote regarding a mail route in Maryland that, '... if the inhabitants ... should deem their letters safe with a faithful Black, I should not refuse him ... I suppose the planters entrust more valuable things to some of their Blacks."

Not that enslaved Black people delivering the mail was not controversial. Most of the history of the antebellum South included complex machinations to prevent slave rebellions and to limit the movement of Black people.

In 1792, after the success of the Haitian Revolution—at the time San Domingue—controlling the physical movement of Black people became paramount to the slave owning class. In 1802, in response to the Revolution, Congress forbade the enslaved from carrying the mail in the South.

According to the Smithsonian, Joseph Habersham, Postmaster General of the United States at the time stated, "After scenes which St. Domingo has exhibited to the world, we cannot be too cautious ... plans and conspiracies have already been converted by [slaves] more than once, to rise in arms, and subjugate their masters ...

The most active and intelligent [slaves] are employed as post riders ... By traveling from day to day, and hourly mixing with people ... they will acquire information. They will learn that a man's rights do not depend on his color. They will, in time, become teachers to their brethren ... One able man among them, perceiving the value of this machine, might lay a plan which would be communicated by your post riders from town to town and produce a general and united operation against you."

This attitude, initially driven by the fear of rebellion, would persist even after slavery's end. The post-scription went so far, Black people had to be supervised by a White person just to lift or carry mail from conveyances to be sorted and delivered.

These restrictions were lifted after the Civil War once the American ex-slaves and their descendants gained electoral power and were able to run for and win office in exchange for support of Republican candidates. Something which in many ways, has been forgotten today is it was during this period, between the end of the Civil War and the end of Reconstruction, a time of unprecedented political, educational, familial and business creation, when American descendants of slavery reaped the most from their electoral participation in the political process.

It was this great rising before the long dark night of returning oppression fell on them--- in which they made real political progress in exchange for their vote. That darkness has a name---The Great Nadir. Before that happened, the U.S. Post office would remain unsegregated for forty years.

The Long Night of Black Retrenchment retrenchment

/rē'tren(t)SHmənt/ - noun reduction in the extent or quantity of something

It was during the lingering memory of this fractional moment of opportunity in 1891 when Minnie M. Cox was appointed to the role of Postmaster General for Indianola, Mississippi, possibly the first Blackwoman ever appointed to such a position.

That singular honor was granted to Cox by President Benjamin Harrison in exchange for her activism in Republican politics. The position paid very well. Minnie must have been competent because there is no record of complaint until the changing and shifting politics of the time made it possible to begin the Retrenchment of Black political power.

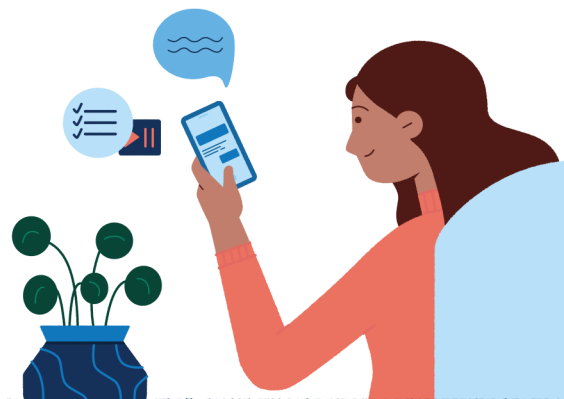

According to the Smithsonian, "In the fall of 1902, James K. Vardaman, the editor of

IN MY OPINION

When the Sun Goes Down: Celebrating Chadwick Boseman

It is with immeasurable grief that we confirm the passing of Chadwick Boseman.

Chadwick was diagnosed with stage III colon cancer in 2016, and battled with it these last 4 years as it progressed to stage IV.

A true fighter, Chadwick persevered through it all, and brought you many of the films you have come to love so much. From Marshall to Da 5 Bloods, August Wilson's Ma Rainey's Black Bottom and several more, all were filmed during and between countless surgeries and chemotherapy.

It was the honor of his career to bring King T'Challa to life in Black Panther.

He died in his home, with his wife and family by his side.

The family thanks you for your love and prayers, and asks that you continue to respect their privacy during this difficult time.

I received the text message in a family chat last Friday evening saying, "Chadwick Boseman has passed." Like everyone who was familiar with his work my heart sank and I think I felt the shift of a great spirit leaving us.

Chadwick Boseman brought so many historical figures and fictional characters to life for audiences around the world. He animated the stories of everyone from James Brown and Thurgood Marshall to Jackie Robinson and of course, King T'challa. It was his portrayal of Marvel's Black Panther that has dominated the headlines as we remember his life.

I recall talking to my sister about it. She began telling me about a woman she heard on the radio commenting on Boseman's death saying, 'we lost our king.' My sister went on to explain that Wakanda, Black Panther's homeland, was like the Zamunda of Coming to America. She said that these places and figures represented a sense of place and belonging to the Black community.

They represented a place where the chains were off—where we could be safe, happy, and even royalty. While I totally understood her point, I couldn't help but feel a little unsettled about the sense of sadness that seemed to plague the conversation.

As I reflected on her statements, I began to get emotional, even passionate. I've watched family members experience various types of cancer and other physical challenges. Seeing someone go through that process should make any human grateful and humble for every breath.

As we recently learned, Boseman was diagnosed with colon cancer four years ago. In that time, he continued to produce many of the films we've come to love including the action-packed Black Panther, and the Avengers movies.

I nearly had a visceral reaction as I thought about how difficult it must have been for him

Reimagining the Riverside County Sheriff's Department

Part 1 of 5: What is Driving Calls to “Defund the Police”?

“Defund the police” means reallocating or redirecting funding away from the police department to other government agencies funded by the local municipality. That’s it. It’s that simple. Defund does not mean abolish policing. And even some who say abolish, do not necessarily mean to do away with law enforcement altogether. Rather, they want to see the rotten trees of policing chopped down and fresh roots replanted anew.”

- Rashawn Ray, David M. Rubenstein Fellow

Require[d] to exhaust all alternatives before shooting,” local resident Tim Lovio questioned in response to the Riverside County Sheriff’s Department’s Use of Force policy.

“That didn’t happen when the police arrived at Matthew Tucker’s home,” he argued. “No type of alternative was used prior to shooting a known suicidal individual.”

Tucker, 18, was shot to death by Riverside County Sheriff deputies in May 2016 after his mother called for help, concerned her son was suicidal. Within two minutes of officers’ arrival at Tucker’s home and locating him in the garage with a knife, he was dead.

During a wrongful death trial in October 2018, Riverside County Sheriff’s Sergeant Michael Hamilton told jurors, “A suicidal subject can be a danger to themselves and others,” adding Tucker’s access to a knife made him a “deadly threat.”

When the Tucker family attorney asked Hamilton if he understood depression is a mental health issue which should require “considerate actions” when confronting such individuals, and questioned why he did not use a taser, another non-lethal weapon, or try to get the knife away from Tucker, Hamilton replied, “We don’t have exaggerated abilities to disarm someone, this isn’t Hollywood.”

Loner Art Bozo also commented on the Riverside Sheriff’s Department’s (RSD) Use of Force policy. “How about taking the authority to carry out death sentences completely away from the police?! You’re solving NO problems with this garbage!”

Another critic, Catie Stanley, weighed in sarcastically, declaring, “My hairdresser had to go to school longer than the police officers had to ‘train’ and I don’t expect my hairdresser to make life or death decisions on my behalf.”

There are, of course, arguments on both sides of this issue. Consider the expression of Patriot Mike who insisted, “So, someone comes at an officer with a knife or gun and you expect them to do all that first? Am I reading that correctly?”

In addition to Matthew Tucker’s death among others over the years, the 8 minutes and 46 seconds caught on camera it took a Minneapolis police officer to snuff the life from George Floyd combined with the unyielding history of Black and Brown people being brutalized at the hands of law enforcement appears to have finally brought this nation, including the inland region, to this moment of reconsideration regarding public safety.

Today, the Riverside County Sheriff’s Department faces the same scrutiny and calls for change as police agencies across the region, state, and elsewhere in the nation.

The term “Defund the Police” is now the phrase of the day. Though considered a loaded and highly charged slogan by some, it has captured the imagination of the nation and forced dialogue on an issue that has festered for generations. In the process, it has challenged municipal leaders everywhere to think about the possibility of “re-imagining policing.”

The goal of this societal demand is to change the paradigm of not only what “public safety” means in the United States of America; but also how it should be facilitated in a 21st century nation where shifting demographics demand a renewed approach that is both equitable and transparent.

The movement to defund the police is advocating for the elimination of how law enforcement continues to treat Black and Brown people with purported disparity especially regarding the use of force.

The movement is demanding officers view, respond to, and treat people of color they interact with as tax paying citizens; to see them as mothers, fathers, sisters, brothers, youth and children, to see and treat them as people. It’s also calling for our local governments to fund more mental health and social workers to interact with the public in some cases or spend more on known crime prevention programs and strategies.

Members of the movement are saying, “See us as human beings, worthy of life, entitled to be considered innocent until proven guilty.” Stop responding to minorities as criminals first, as being undeserving of basic human dignity and consideration.

Vonya Quarles, Co-Founder & Executive Director of Starting Over Inc., expressed her concerns in this regard as it relates to the care and treatment of inmates in Riverside County jails.

Starting Over Inc., is a nonprofit organization taking a 360 approach to reentry for former inmates by assisting them in securing a variety of community based services to smooth their transitions. Those can include connecting them with transitional housing, healthcare, post conviction relief and more.

Quarles is particularly concerned about the health and wellbeing of inmates during the current pandemic.

Commenting on the role of the Sheriff’s Department she stressed, “[A]s a Black woman, mother and directly impacted community member, I believe sheriffs, like any other government entity should be held to the constitutional guarantee of Equal Protection. This applies to everyone and even more so during the pandemics of now, the longstanding one being racism, and the recent one being COVID-19. Black people are disproportionately impacted by both.”

Quarles has worked with the #releaseriverside campaign in their call to release people trapped inside the county jails during Covid.

Supporters are adamant such efforts are warranted, she explained. Recent data shows as of September 2 there were 384 COVID-19 cases and two deaths in county jails.

“We see the Sheriff stand on an ideology that says he will not release people because to do so would endanger public safety...but getting past the rhetoric, we know that 99% of them are all coming home at some time anyway.”

While others in the community are seeking to recall Riverside County Sheriff Chad Bianco, Quarles highlighted how, “Bianco’s depth of callousness and disregard for Black lives is troubling; but acknowledged he stands in a long line of law enforcement leaders who have done the same, which signals to many of us, that the problem is not just Bianco, but it’s also structural and systemic.”

During an interview with the IE Voice and Black Voice News in June, Black Lives Matter-IE cofounder Aziz Wali expressed his frustration with the Riverside County Sheriffs for what he described as the department’s lack of transparency and challenged Sheriff Chad Bianco who took a knee during a Floyd protest advising, “So, if you can take a knee down on the ground, you can take a knee to policy and structures that truly have been affecting us for so long.”

Advocates for change are asking municipalities, states and the nation to consider shifting funding from police activities that do not serve the needs of local communities—at least in part—and consider investing instead, in constructive programs supportive of community safety and away from the escalating militarization of our law enforcement agencies.

Such community-based safety programs can include more youth services and other programs aimed at closing the myriad of equity related disparities experienced by local minority groups.

Many consider such goals as lofty while others say such changes are long overdue. Regardless, the implementation of any changes in social order such as those being called for in the inland region and across the country.

It is not surprising many would focus like a laser on money and the amount of funding being allocated to policing agencies. Funding should be considered when evaluating the efficiency and efficacy of any organization and as such, is fair game when probing for greater understanding of how the expansive budget of the Riverside County Sheriff’s Department undergirds the behaviors within the agency deemed historically harmful to Blacks and other minorities and which have resulted in the current demands for change.

Clearly rejecting calls to defund the police, in late June the Riverside

Local and state spending on police per capita

County Board of Supervisors did just the opposite and approved a $6.5 billion budget for the fiscal year 2020-21.

USAFACTS, the non-partisan, not-for-profit organization that tracks resources of numbers and trends in government spending, reported in June, “Local governments spent on average $340 per person on law enforcement in 2017.” During the same period per capita spending on law enforcement in Riverside County was 545.25 similar to the $541.73 per capita spent in San Bernardino County.

USAFACTS further highlighted how these budgets also reflected policing priorities and as such, differed in counties with different demographics. It noted, “Understanding the amount and portion of the spending that law enforcement makes up can help inform an understanding if that spending is too much, too little or just the right amount.”

Funding, though pivotal, is also only part of what must be considered in an honest exploration of the patterns and practices, critics say are exploited by those who wear the uniform while applying the law with implicit and explicit biases when dealing with suspects of color.

Such biases—conscious or otherwise—create the culture of any police agency and spills into the communities they serve. In this unprecedented moment, the RSD is one among many being called upon by constituents for increased transparency and potentially fundamental change in how it interacts with the communities it serves.

Many in the Black and Brown communities and others are questioning the RSD’s sizable budget and how it has stayed relatively consistent despite annual drops in violent crime in recent years. While others question deputies’ salaries and whether, and by how much, those salaries exceed the median income of local taxpayers who fund those salaries.

Others question whether the RSD’s relatively new Sheriff, Chad Bianco, can demonstrate the leadership acumen needed to guide the department through these troubled times. Before the uprising over the death of George Floyd at the hands of Minnesota police, Bianco’s involvement with Riverside’s Black community was limited at best.

There are also questions about what percentage of deputies working in the county live and pay taxes in the county. There are lingering concerns over the cadre of Riverside County deputies who fail to adequately reflect the demographic make-up of the county on one hand, while among those who have managed to secure a position with the department on the other hand, some have raised legitimate concerns regarding disparate promotional opportunities for minorities and/or women.

The historic and continuing role local police unions play in Riverside County and elsewhere thought to possibly impede the progressive discipline of deputies; insert themselves into investigations involving a deputy’s use of force, as well as what some perceive as the out-sized role they often play as barriers to process changes advocated for by legislators as well as the constituents they are being paid to serve—whether it’s advocating against body-worn cameras, calls for records transparency, the timely disclosure of information related to use of force incidents, etc.

And, when it comes to contract negotiations, many question why municipal leaders reach contractual agreements with police unions that lock taxpayers into accommodating salary increases even during periods of economic distress when municipal leaders are forced to make budget cuts in other areas, at times laying off other employees and/or reducing services to taxpayers.

These are all reasonable questions to which the public has a right to seek answers. However, these are not the only union-related concerns. There is also a need for heightened focus on the hundreds of thousands of dollars donated to various political campaigns and questions regarding whether the candidates whose campaigns they help fund are truly objective when making decisions involving the Sheriff’s Department.

There are also concerns over what many consider the mutually dependent relationships between the Sheriff’s Department, the District Attorney’s office, the Coroners’ office (when warranted) and possibly the county’s overworked public defenders, especially when it comes to investigating and charging officers in cases where the alleged misuse of deadly force is involved.

Among other issues to be explored regarding the Riverside County Sheriff’s Department is its history of aberrant and abusive behavior toward inmates/suspects, and the hundreds of thousands of dollars paid in settlement fees related to incidents involving sheriffs and suspects. The community wants to understand why such inmate/suspect abuse/mistreatment continues to occur, who is held accountable for such actions, and what tangible changes (in hiring, training, supervising, monitoring work performance and feedback) have occurred to prevent such abuses in the future.

Over the next several weeks, the IE Voice and Black Voice News will explore these issues in detail, illuminating hard realities to help inform the community about what is driving activists’ calls for reimagining public safety.

Governor Signs Bill to “Save Local Journalism”

Antonio Ray Harvey

With a 69-4 vote, the Senate passed Assembly Bill (AB) 323. It proposed granting ethnic media outlets, mid-size publications, and daily newspapers an additional year to pursue alternative and sustainable distribution models that don't involve contract drivers. It allows them to come into compliance with the state's controversial AB 5 labor law.

AB 323, known as the “Save Local Journalism Act,” was signed into law by the governor on Friday, September 4.

“AB 323 provides a bridge for our local newspapers to continue informing readers and their communities...[T]he bill passed with overwhelming support and will be heading to Governor Newsom,” Rubio said via her Twitter account Aug. 31.

AB 323 will also require state agencies to contract with community and ethnic news outlets to promote their public awareness campaigns in order to reach underserved communities throughout the state.

AB 5 was enacted to enforce a 2018 California Supreme Court ruling commonly called the “Dynamex Law.” Originally, the legislation mostly focused on what some lawmakers regarded as “abuses” by large companies like Uber, Lyft and other rideshare and app-based delivery companies. They say those corporations rely on a workforce of contractors, but do not provide those workers any employment benefits and other labor protections mandated by California law.

In the Assembly chamber before the floor vote, Assemblymember Lorena Gonzalez (D-San Diego), who authored AB 5 and voted “no” on AB 323, gave an impassioned testimony.

“I cannot condone or support an unsustainable business model that operates at the expense of low-wage workers,” Gonzalez told her colleagues.

But critics say the intention of AB 5 was lost in its language and enforcement, charging that it cast too wide a net, and that it ended up hurting some contractors – including artists, dentists, writers, salespeople, musicians, translators, and others. Those are people who generally prefer the independence and flexibility of being freelancers or sole proprietors, they argue.

Since AB 5 passed about a year ago, legislators have created several carve-outs to exempt some of the affected professional categories, allowing them to continue to work as independent contractors under the law. But many remain impacted.

In October of 2019, Gov. Newsom signed AB 170, a law that gave newspapers in California a one-year extension (until the end of 2020) to reclassify the contract drivers who deliver their newspapers as W-2 employees -- or come up with a new way to distribute their newspapers to subscribers.

AB 323 extends that sunset date that currently exempts newspaper carriers from the restrictions of AB 5 to the end of 2021. Until then, those publications will not have to meet the three-part criteria, commonly known as the “ABC” test, which the state uses to determine if workers are employees or independent contractors.

By offering a buffer for carriers, AB 323 is also aimed at strengthening and stabilizing California's community news organizations while protecting their ability to provide all Californians with important information about news and events in their communities.

“We are living through times of unprecedented unrest and change, and the need has never been greater for specialized outlets that facilitate improved civic engagement and better cross-cultural communication,” said Regina Brown Wilson, Executive Director of California Black Media. “Assemblywoman Rubio's leadership and the unwavering support of AB 323's coauthors and supporters make it possible for our outlets to continue their mission to better inform our communities.”

The bill encourages the Department of General Services (DGS) to be responsible for ensuring that state agencies include local news organizations in their advertising and public awareness campaigns. DGS is the business manager for California, providing procurement and business solutions for local and state agencies.

“The First Amendment and our independent press are critical to the open exchange of diverse ideas and perspectives. My colleagues and I bring varied viewpoints to the Capitol, but as shown by the overwhelming bipartisan support for AB 323, we are united in our support for our local news outlets and the citizens they serve,” Rubio said in a written statement.

to put his body through that level of arduous activity and the mental fortitude it required for him to maintain it. These are not the actions that one can take without a deep sense of purpose.

Boseman was deeply private about his condition and to all accounts, a champion, and a fighter. Ryan Coogler, Director of Black Panther, said that even he didn't know the details of Boseman's condition. With that said, as everyone scours pictures of him through the years and we all try to employ our hindsight to see when the physical changes began to show, every image seems to show his spirit undeniably authentic and unchanged. He produced major blockbuster films while going through countless surgeries and chemotherapy. We were all witnesses to a real-life hero.

Reading Boseman's social media timeline, it doesn't take long to see he wasn't trying to be a celebrity. Instead, he was constantly working to refine his artistry.

During his commencement speech at his alma mater, Howard University, Boseman described an experience when he was let go from a project after he began to question some of the stereotypical narratives around the character he was asked to play. In his response to this experience Boseman referenced a Bible scripture saying, "I planted the seed, Apollos watered it, but God kept growing it." (1 Corinthians 3:6).

He remarked that perhaps the questions he asked set the producers on guard and created space for a less stereotypical role for the Black actor that stepped into the position after him.

In that same speech Boseman referred to seeing Muhammad Ali in his elder years on the yard of Howard University saying, "I realized something new about the greatness of Ali and how he carried his crown. I realized he was transferring something to me on that day. He was transferring the spirit of the fighter to me." He referenced scripture again, from the book of Jeremiah saying "I know the plans I have for you, plans to prosper you and not to harm you, plans to give you hope and a future."

Boseman closed the speech saying:

"You would rather find purpose, than a job or a career. Purpose crosses disciplines. Purpose is an essential element of you. It is the reason you are on the planet at this particular time in history. Your very existence is wrapped up in the things you are here to fulfill. Whatever you choose for a career path, remember the struggles along the way are only meant to shape you for your purpose."

After really reflecting on this man's life, there is no way I can allow myself to be a victim in my mind nor can I yield to a narrative of remorse, because he didn't. We didn't lose a king we gained an ancestor and a guiding light that encourages us to choose the road less traveled, to be relentless and to bring forth the world that is pounding on our hearts to be created.

Thank you, Chadwick, for sharing with us the fighting spirit Ali entrusted in you. We are facing a new era in our evolution. Thank you for showing us how to truly live with purpose. We will hold your memory safe and strong in our hearts as we do the work of building a new kingdom. - Selah and Amen

San Bernardino County Officials Ignore Recent CDC Guidelines Regarding Asymptomatic People

San Bernardino, CA - The Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC) recently advised asymptomatic people no longer need to get tested for COVID-19. The stealth change was quietly made to the agency's online guidelines without a formal announcement. The revised policy reads "You do not necessarily need a test unless you are a vulnerable individual or your health care provider or state or local public health officials recommend you take one. the Greenwood Commonwealth and a White supremacist, began delivering speeches reproaching the people of Indianola for “tolerating a negro [sic] wench as a postmaster.”

His motive for these speeches was not only to spread his White supremacist message but also to expel Cox from her postmaster position with the hopes of obtaining it and the position’s salary for himself. The White townspeople of Indianola began calling meetings and voted to order Cox to resign from her office by January 1, 1903 although her commission did not end until a year from that date, in 1904. While she refused to step down prior to the end of her term, Cox made it known she would not be a candidate for reappointment.

The idea of Cox's eventual departure did not pacify the community. She was physically threatened, and the eventual scandal made the newspapers of the time. The President, Franklin Delano Roosevelt, intervened several times, including suspension of the Post Office and the rerouting of mail. All to no avail.

Cox and her family were eventually forced to flee for their lives. These events were sanctioned by the President.

The Perfect Victim

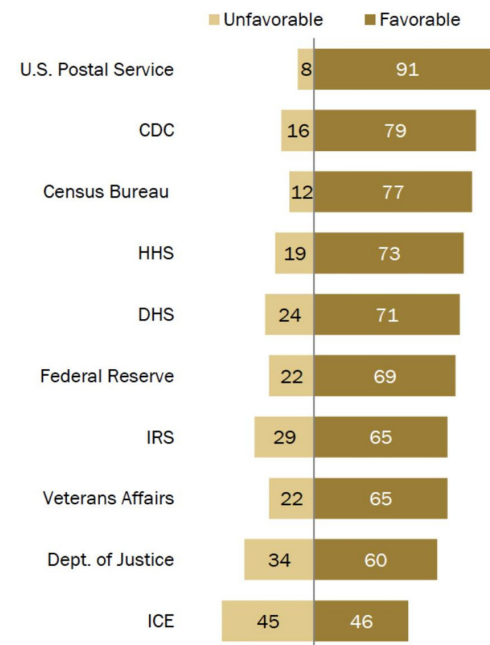

The Post Office is in many ways the perfect victim. It is one of American's favorite governmental services. In a recent study conducted by Pew Research Center the reasons why it is held in such esteem were elaborated. “And while the public holds positive views of several federal agencies, ratings of the Postal Service continue to stand out: An overwhelming 91% say they have a favorable view of the mail delivery service.”

An article for The Institute for Policy Studies entitled, "How Congress Manufactured a Postal Crisis — And How to Fix it " stated, “In 2006, Congress passed a law that imposed extraordinary costs on the U.S. Postal Service. The Postal Accountability and Enhancement Act (PAEA) required the USPS to create a $72 billion fund to pay its post-retirement health care costs, 75 years into the future. This burden applies to no other federal agency or private corporation.

In recent weeks, numerous articles have focused on the current attacks on the nation's 14 VOICE | SEPTEMBER 10, 2020 | theievoice.com most beloved service. The President's choice for Postmaster General, Louis DeJoy, has become embroiled in today's political scandals. Mail delays, whistleblowers reporting the removal of sorting machines necessary to help ensure vote-by-mail runs smoothly in November and Congressional testimony form the outlines of this dysfunction.

The usual fingerprinting and shocked exclamations are made but make no mistake about it, the attacks on the Post Office are long standing.

Why You Should Care

As well as being consistently one of the highest rated governmental services, the U.S. Post Office happens to be one of the largest employers of Black people and veterans—Black people who fell off a wealth gap cliff long before COVID-19 was in the air and veterans who have never, ever received their due long before COVID-19 began to plunder economies.

Pew Research Center reported on June 16, 2020, the outlook for government employees in general is alarming.

“In the public sector, officials responded to the COVID-19 pandemic by furloughing workers at shuttered facilities and trimming payrolls in the face of substantial projected budget shortfalls. Colleges, school districts, and other areas of state and local government have shed approximately 1.5 million jobs since March, but most have been furloughs or temporary layoffs, according to the U.S. Department of Labor. In all, employment for the sector has fallen to its lowest levels since 2001, eclipsing the declines that followed the Great Recession.”

What is happening to the Post Office is a long, slow, public assault - which has, like everything else, been accelerated by COVID-19. In that light, the shock and dismay is somewhat puzzling—this one is not a mystery and the butler did not do it in the parlor with a candlestick.

If you would like to help save the Postal Service, the nonprofit organization Public Citizen hosts a website with information on the Postal Service Protection Act, a proposal authored in the U.S. House of Representatives to counteract the Postmaster General's changes to the Postal system as well as other information.

These are difficult days and amid this turmoil, this chaos, there is an order unfolding. We must watch for the signs and understand how it will impact our local communities and most vulnerable groups in the workforce which usually consists of Blacks and other people of color.

Will industries like retail stores ever regain the mall traffic they lost, will warehouses accelerate their transition to robotics to reduce humans in the workspace, will restaurants ever be the same? The questions and the impact on various industries is yet to be revealed. What is known, however, is the economic footprint of America will look different when the nation exits the pandemic.

Although the nation's COVID-19 reality remains a cautionary tale, during an interview with The New Yorker in May, the former political director of the AFL-CIO, Michael Podhorzer was somewhat optimistic about what the future may hold, reminding readers that in the wake of two disturbing periods in American history—the Great Depression and World War II—there was an era of real gains for labor.

Just as the nation has witnessed a coalescence of Americans across every demographic including race, religion, age, sex and sexual orientation to demand change in the arena of public safety and social justice pushing almost daily in places across the country, challenging communities everywhere to reimagine policing, this same energy can be harnessed to demand changes for the American worker.

These demands should begin with a wage that does more than merely allow people to stay alive and instead pays them commensurate to the essential services they provide for their fellow Americans—a wage that would enable families to thrive. All workers should have access to paid family leave, mandatory, annual paid vacation time, improved childcare, and transparency regarding how decisions are made in hiring and promotions, and a portable health plan until the nation moves to universal health care.

Certainly these are lofty goals but who could have imagined an America where citizens of all races are not only “woke” to the trauma of living in Black skin in this country but have taken up the mantra of “Black Lives Matter” and joined the movement for change.

So many millions of low-paid workers risk their lives to allow others to stay in, work from home more often than not, earning more for their efforts than the “essential” workers who deliver mail or food or groceries or other packages to their doors or ring up their groceries at the market or their prescriptions at the drugstore.

The fact that this nation at all levels of government call them essential, that their employers are making money hand over fist and despite hollow platitudes about how essential they are were quick to cut the addition and minimal COVID bonus they were receiving on their check as soon as the opportunity presented itself even though not much has changed regarding the dangers they face.

If we truly value those we have identified as essential workers, we must join their fight for fairness now and in the future. One of the ways we can begin is by supporting Proposition 22 on the November 3 ballot.

Proposition 22 protects the rights of app-based rideshare and delivery drivers like UBER, Lyft and others to choose flexible work as independent contractors while providing new benefits and protections including a minimum earnings guarantee, access to health care benefits and insurance against illnesses and injuries acquired on the job.

These workers, like so many others, deserve a job with dignity that pays fair wages and allows them a broader life than living paycheck to paycheck. This must be made true especially for those risking their lives during this global health care crisis. The rapper Tupac said, “Death is not the greatest loss in life. The greatest loss is what dies inside while still alive. Never surrender.”

Despite the obstacles these workers face, health risks for themselves and their families, the low wages, inadequate health care and so forth, they show up every day to provide for themselves and their families.

As I marked this year’s “hard” Labor Day, I thought more deeply about those essential workers who have enabled me to stay safe during these long COVID months and in the process made my life more bearable and I will continue to depend on them going forward. I am grateful to all of them and support every movement for legislative change and other efforts designed to keep them safer and affords them a better quality of life.

Of course, this is just my opinion. I’m keeping it real.
