KEEPING IT REAL

Lynching May Finally Become a Federal Crime

"Southern trees bear strange fruit. Blood on the leaves and blood at the root. Black bodies swinging in the southern breeze, strange fruit hanging from the poplar trees. Pastoral scene of the gallant south. The bulging eyes and the twisted mouth. Scent of magnolias, sweet and fresh, then the sudden smell of burning flesh. Here is a fruit for the crows to pluck, for the rain to gather, for the wind to suck. For the sun to rot, for the tree to drop. Here is a strange and bitter crop." - Abel Meeropol

W hat became one of the most iconic images depicting the horrors of lynching in America had its origin in an incident that occurred on a sweltering night in August 1930 when a crowd gathered outside a jailhouse in Indiana--a photograph of what the all-White mob wrought that frightful evening was captured for posterity through the lens of town photographer, Lawrence Beitler.

It was the searing images captured in Beitler's photograph that inspired songwriter and poet Abel Meeropol to pen the word's to "Strange Fruit" which Billie Holiday interpreted with such mournful passion.

And, it was this same image I recalled Photo by Lawrence Beitler when I learned last week that African American Senators Kamala Harris (D-CA), Cory Booker (D-NJ) and Tim Scott (R-SC) had joined forces and led their senate peers in the unanimous passage of the Justice for Victims of Lynching Act.

Although the senate passed a similar measure during last year's session, it was never taken up in the House. This year, with Nancy Pelosi leading the House of Representatives supporters of the measure are hopeful. If it passes the House and is successfully signed into law by the president, lynching will finally become a federal crime.

According to the Equal Justice Initiative there were more than 4,000 lynchings during the 19th and 20th centuries. Yet, despite continued acts of this racist form of terrorism, between the years 1882 and 1986, congress attempted and failed to pass anti-lynching legislation more than 200 times.

Last week's progress on this important legislation seemed aptly appropriate during Black History

For 80 years, the haunting lyrics penned by Meeropol as sung by Holiday, has evoked profound images of the terror and intimidation of lynching that hung like a pall over the nation's African American community.

Holiday also proved how the power of contemporary music like jazz, etc. could be used to tell the stories of racism. She courageously showed how protest songs--which had played a covert role during the dark years of slavery—would, from that time forward, play a prominent and overt role in the civil rights movement and beyond.

The story behind the iconic image captured by Meeropol in August 1930, is forever frozen in time as are the lyrics to Strange Fruit, the song it so palpably inspired. It is also equally as important, we never forget the lives of the young men whose ghastly deaths—as captured in image, poetry and music—is remembered but whose names are rarely mentioned.

That fateful night in August 1930, Thomas Shipp and Abram Smith, and their friend, 16-year-old James Cameron, were arrested and charged with the armed robbery and murder of a White factory

Celebrating Our Public Lands—A Community Discussion

Redlands

The Hispanic Access Foundation has invited the community to participate in a community round table discussion on public lands.

The roundtable discussion is scheduled for Monday, February 25, from 6:00 p.m. to 8:00 p.m. at the Ayres Hotel in the Casa Loma Room, 1015 W. Colton Avenue in Redlands.

Access to public lands provide a variety of benefits across several sectors. The event sponsors are encouraging members of the community to come out, learn and celebrate the diverse benefits of public lands with the help of a wide range of expert panelists from the following fields—health, veterans, business, and education, in addition to leaders of energy companies, parks and environmental justice groups.

Attendees will enjoy opening remarks by elected officials and Por La Creación Faith-based Alliance Pastor, Rolando Morelli.

The event will also feature four separate panel discussions on several topics: Public lands benefit mental and physical health; Public lands help local economies; Public lands help child development and bring communities together; Public lands protect water, people and the environment.

The Hispanic Access Foundation (HAF) is a 501(c)(3) non-profit organization that connects Latinos with partners and opportunities to improve lives and create an equitable society. The organization works with and through strategic partnerships with faith and community organizations to increase access to vital information and community resources.

To participate in the community discussion RSVP to Jenny Brandt at jenny@hispanicaccess.org or Tamara at ctamara@hispanicaccess.org.

Atmospheric Rivers, Torrential Rain and Swift Water Rescues

San Bernardino

A ccording to NASA, atmospheric rivers can be credited with the abundant rain- and snowfall that has drenched the state in recent weeks.

Atmospheric rivers are described as long, narrow regions in the atmosphere that carry columns of water vapor. These rivers are helping to pull large swaths of the state out of its extended drought.

Earlier this month, a team of researchers led by Scripps Institution of Oceanography at the University of California San Diego created a scale to characterize the strength and impact of atmospheric rivers. The scale assigns five categories to these rivers using the amount of water vapor they carry and their duration in a given location as criteria. The intent of the scale is to describe a range of scenarios that can prove beneficial or hazardous based on the river's continued on page 18

Generation Go! San Bernardino

ore than 100 San Bernardino County high school students got a jump start on their careers last week as they began internships with more than 20 county departments as part of an initiative titled Generation Go!

The countywide program established under the auspicious of the County Workforce Development Board, provides work-based learning opportunities to high school students. A key component of the effort is to prepare county youth to enter the workforce with the skills needed to compete today and in the future.

County officials including Board of Supervisors Chairman Curt Hagman, County Chief Executive Officer Gary McBride and Deputy Executive Officer Reg Javier offered words of encouragement to the students during their orientation last week. McBride, for example spoke about how he began his career with the county at a young age in an entry-level position.

Generation Go! is an essential element of San Bernardno County's Vision2Succeed strategy targeted at preparing county residents for current jobs in addition to the jobs the county official want to attract.

The county is continuing to seek local businesses willing to provide work-based learning experiences as part of a high school curriculum. Targeted industries include:

NEWS IN BRIEF

Colleges/Hospitals Can Affect Home Prices and Rents

Riverside – A recently released study by a team of computer scientists at UCR confirmed that colleges and hospitals do affect home prices and rents, however the impact is not always positive. According to the researchers, around these institutions tend to rise and fall faster than average and as a result, increase the risk for investors.

One of the questions researchers sought to answer was whether the presence of a university or hospital would have a stabilizing effect on prices in the event of a crisis like the 2008 housing market crash. "What we found is actually the opposite," shared Vagelis Hristidis, professor of computer science and engineering at UCR's Marlan and Rosemary Bourns College of Engineering. He continued, "Investing close to a university or hospital may not protect you from price volatility."

Researchers cautioned any correlation between housing price volatility and the presence of a university or hospital does not imply a cause, however they suspect real estate in these areas may be most attractive to investors rather than homeowners, and the volatility may result from investors being, "The first to leave when there's a crisis, and the first to buy when there's an opportunity," Hristidis explained.

Protect Yourself From Heart Disease During American Heart Month

ebruary is Heart Month, the perfect time to learn about your risk for heart disease and the steps you need to take now to take care of vour heart.

Heart disease—and the conditions that lead to it—can happen at any age. High rates of obesity and high blood pressure among younger people (ages 35-64) are putting them at risk for heart disease earlier in life. Half of all Americans have at least one of the top three risk factors for heart disease (high blood pressure, high cholesterol, and smoking).

Heart disease is the leading cause of death for men and women in the United States. Every year, 1 in 4 deaths are caused by heart disease. The good news? Heart disease can often be prevented when people make healthy choices and manage their health conditions. Leading the Way-California Files Lawsuit Against President's Emergency Declaration

Washington D.C.

On President's Day 2019 a coalition of 16 states led by California Attorney General Xavier Becerra filed a lawsuit in the U.S. District Court for the Northern District of California to block the National Emergency Declaration proclaimed by President Donald J. Trump last Friday.

The Declaration was based on the president's highly charged explanation that the order was needed to defend against a "security crisis" along the nation's Southern Border. Among the states joining California were New York, Nevada, New Mexico, New Jersey, Oregon, Colorado, Minnesota and others.

"It's kind of awkward to say that on Presidents' Day we're going to be suing the president of the United States, but sometimes that's what you have to do," Becerra told a CNN reporter Monday morning.

The president's long promised declaration first surfaced when it became apparent, he was losing public support during the partial government shutdown he launched last December—a shutdown that dragged on for 35 days.

Friday, in the wake of congress having reached a compromise budget agreement to avoid a second shutdown the president agreed to sign the legislation and simultaneously signed the emergency order.

Although the president's base supports his action many in the country do not—including some legislators in his own party.

During a question and answer session in the White House rose garden on Friday the President seemed to undermine his own emergency premise for the order when he proclaimed, he was only doing this to get the wall built sooner.

California Attorney General Xavier Becerra

Monday's lawsuit reads in part, "Contrary to the will of Congress, the President has used the pretext of a manufactured 'crisis' of unlawful immigration to declare a national emergency and redirect federal dollars appropriated for drug interdiction, military construction, and law enforcement initiatives toward building a wall on the United States-Mexico border."

California and the other members involved in the lawsuit believe the president's emergency declaration represents a flagrant disregard of the country's fundamental separation of powers.

NEWS IN BRIEF

Cranston Fire Suspect Sentenced

Riverside – Last Thursday, 33-year-old Brandon N. McGlover pled guilty to setting a series of wildfires last July, including the devastating Cranston Fire that destroyed at least five homes and charred approximately 13,000 acres. He was sentenced to 12 years, four months in prison. McGlover pled guilty to two counts of burning a structure or forest land while seven other counts were dismissed as part of the plea agreement between both sides.

Following the guilty pleas at the Southwest Justice Center in Murrieta, McGlover was sentenced by Judge Kelly Hansen to 12 years and four months in state prison – the maximum sentence for the two counts and the admission of the allegation. Judge Hansen also ordered McGlover to pay restitution to all the victims.

UCR African Student Programs Hosts Emory Douglas, Minister of Culture for the Black Panther Party for Self-Defense or Black History Month the University of California Riverside's (UCR) African Student Programs (ASP) is hosting on almost a daily basis, programs for the university's Afrikan-Black-Caribbean constituency.

On Wednesday, February 13th, the ASP hosted the Minister of Culture for the Black Panther Party (BPP) for Self-Defense, Emory Douglas. Douglas presented on his legacy of revolutionary art and expounded upon the ways art is a form of resistance and transformative praxis. Douglas detailed his growth through artwork, from the political content to the mediums that he used over time.

From 1967 until the BPP was disbanded in 1980's Douglas worked with the BPP as the Minister of Culture. He has made a huge mark where art meets political resistance. Douglas was the illustrator for the Black Panther Newspaper, in which he would create work around political topics, events, or encapsulate deep, nuanced community struggles within one image. "My art is about informing the people and enlightening them" he asserted.

For example, though he was not the first person to refer to the police as "pigs," it became a trademark association within his work. In the beginning, he would draw a pig almost every week in the paper with the badge number of the police officer who was abusing their power. After a while, it took on a life of its own and he would draw the pig on its hooves and give it an outfit.

Douglas' art served the community in multiple ways. He created drawings for the BPP newspaper and his own recreational pieces, as well as for the community where needed. If a local business owner needed an advertisement drawn or a musician needed an album cover, he would do it for them.

It was about serving the interests of the community and creating pieces that people could find themselves in and find understanding or comfort. "[One of Africa's foremost anticolonial leaders] Amilcar Cabral once said you have to be able to speak in a way that a child can understand you," he asserted. "I contemplated that you even have to draw in a way that a child can understand you."

In the interview portion, UCR esteemed faculty member, John Jennings, and an undergraduate student, facilitated a conversation about Emory and the role and impact of the artist in the movement.

Emory explained that the art is not his, but it is for the people. "It was not a "Me Art, but a "We Art" based on collective participation. It was about the community being able to identify and see themselves, their family in the images. [When that happens] it becomes bigger than

Douglas' legacy reminds us of the importance of the artist in radical movements, and how they are able to fashion a language that transcends national and cultural affiliations because these struggles present in America, are found everywhere. He explained, "If you create art that creates Black joy, then it transcends the community because people can see in the art things that they're trying to achieve and accomplish. When I went to Argentina... it came to me that what they could see in the art is what they were dealing with. Can you [create] art in a way that transcends and inspires others? You're speaking a common language."

Independent Contractor or Employee?

2018 Dynamex Ruling Continues to Roil CA Businesses - Part 1

n 2018, nothing shook up the operations model for businesses in the state like the controversial California Supreme Court ruling in Dynamex Operations West, Inc. v. Los Angeles County Superior Court (Dynamex).

The ruling touched workers in almost every aspect of the state's so-called gig economy—businesses based on short-term contracts or freelance type work as opposed to permanent jobs. Almost every industry touches the gig economy from construction to transportation to manufacturing, retail, agriculture, professional/business services, beauty/barber shops and the list goes on.

Black barber/beauty shops owners and operators like others impacted by the ruling, are working to understand what it means to their business models and whether complying with new tests posed by the Dynamex ruling for independent contractors will be too cost prohibitive for them to continue in business.

Since the turn of the 19th century and before, Black beauty salons/barber shops have held a unique place in the African American community—often serving as the center for discussion on politics and community concerns. For many, they also represent an entrance for many into the world of entrepreneurialism.

Their products and services are strongly supported by Black consumers so certainly any issue that impacts the barber/beauty shop business model is of interest to the African American community at large. According to Black Dollars Matter: The Sales Impact Of Black Consumers report, Black consumers spend $473 million on total hair care each year. Most beauty and barber shops use independent contractors as part of their business models.

As part of the Dynamex ruling the California Supreme Court adopted what some have called a more onerous test (the ABC test) for determining whether individuals are employees or independent contractors. In the process, the court abandoned the previous test (Borello) which the state had applied since 1989.

Although the Dynamex case appeared limited, i.e., it was based on claims under California wage orders which governs an employers' duty to pay the minimum wage and to compensate for overtime hours worked, the supreme court decision it had much broader implications—it imposed stricter tests (ABC vs Borello) for independent contractors.

Where the Borello test, called for the evaluation of multiple factors to determine whether an individual was an independent contractor, not all the factors had to be met to establish independent contractor status. The principal factor of the Borello test was whether the "person to whom service is rendered has the right to control the manner and means of accomplishing the result desired."

The other factors that could be considered under Borello included (1) right to discharge at will, without cause; (2) whether the one performing the services is engaged in a distinct occupation or business; (3) the kind of occupation, with reference to whether, in the locality, the work is usually done under the direction of the principal or by a specialist without supervision; (4) the skill required in the particular occupation; (5) whether the principal or the worker supplies the instrumentalities, tools, and the place of work for the person doing the work; (6) the length of time for which the services are to be performed; (7) the method of payment, whether by the time or by the job; (8) whether or not the work is part of the regular business of the principal; and (9) whether or not the parties believe they are creating a relationship of employer-employee.

As noted above, last year the Dynamex ruling determined that the "ABC test", not the Borello test, will now determine whether a worker is classified as an independent contractor.

The consternation caused by the ruling is rooted in what some perceive as the significantly higher burden the ABC test imposes on companies. Under the ABC test, workers will be presumed to be employees unless a company can prove all three of the ABC factors.

The ABC's include (A) that the worker is free from the control and direction of the hiring entity in connection with the performance of the work, (B) that the worker performs work that is outside the usual course of the hiring entity's business; and (C) that the worker is customarily engaged in an independently established trade, occupation or business of the same nature as the work performed.

Unlike under the Borello test, with the ABC test, a hiring entity's right to control is not the most important factor in determining whether an independent contractor relationship exists—it is just one of three (ABC) factors and all three must be met.

As unsettling as the Dynamex case has been to many California businesses, the same or similar laws are working successfully in at least twenty other states, though only Massachusetts has adopted a version stricter than California's ABC test.

According to some analysts, as many as two million workers across the state might be affected by the Dynamex decision. The ruling is supported by labor and to extent, it is viewed as a win for workers who labor without benefits.

Others, however, have expressed concern over the potential for unintended consequences.

"...we conclude that in determining who definition, a worker is properly considered to whom the wage order does not apply, commonly referred to as the "ABC" test, variety of contexts to distinguish employ

UNDER THE FAIR LABOR STANDARDS ACT

Employee or Independent Contractor?

The Fair Labor Standards Act (FLSA) provides minimum wage and overtime pay protections to nearly all workers in the U.S. Some employers incorrectly treat workers who are employees under this federal law as independent contractors. We call that "misclassification." If you are misclassified as an independent contractor, your employer may try to deny you benefits and protections to which you are legally entitled.

Please refer to Fact Sheet 13 for more information on the factors used to determine whether you're an employee or an independent contractor.

Employers may not misclassify an employee for any reason, even if the employee agrees. contractor under the FLSA merely because you work offsite or from home with some flexibility over work hours. ether, under the suffer or permit to work ed the type of independent contractor it is appropriate to look to a standard, that is utilized in other jurisdictions in a ees from independent contractors."

1ex Ops West, Inc. v. Los Angeles County Superior

For example, if some businesses choose to eliminate independent contractors versus making them employees if they do not meet the ABC model—it is most likely low-level employees will be the ones most impacted.

It is also easy to see how many businesses truly benefited under the Borello model, i.e., the more workers businesses successfully classified as independent contractors, it reduced or eliminated the need to pay workers' compensation, social security, federal and state employment taxes or payroll taxes, etc.

The arguments for and against the Dynamex ruling are compelling and it certainly has the potential to impact some industries greater than others. In almost every instance, independent contractors and employers are being forced to reconsider their current business models and weigh them against the ABC test. This is particularly true for hair stylists, tattoo artists, taxi and limo drivers, people who make a living as contractors, not workers paid by the hour, who set their own hours and determine how they chose to work with business owners.

There is one area where those who support and those who oppose the court's Dynamex ruling agree—that the state legislature has the power and can play a role in determining the way forward on this important economic issue.

Although this supreme court ruling has rattled segments of the state's business community, in the state of the state address earlier this month, when Governor Newsom spoke about issues related to business and labor he said, "This, respectfully, is much bigger than Dynamex."

Newsom continued, "California needs a comprehensive statewide strategy to uplift and upskill our workers, to ensure that technological advancements in AI, blockchain, big data, are creating jobs, not destroying jobs." The governor further expressed his belief in the need to reform institutions so that more workers have an ownership stake in their sweat equity.

Appearing to kick the Dynamex can down the road so to speak, the governor committed to create a commission of labor and business leaders devoted to developing ideas to "expand worker opportunity" without hurting innovation or flexibility.

While the governor kept his distance, at least temporarily, some legislative observers believe the fight over the Dynamex ruling's ABC test may be one of the biggest issues addressed by the legislature this year.

The urgency was apparent subsequent to the supreme court ruling last year when contract workers and employers both urged legislative action to address the court's decision before the end of the legislative session. Assembly Speaker Anthony Rendon chose not to act on the requests because there was not enough time remaining in the legislative session.

Two opposing bills are already being considered in the current session. One measure backed by the union calls for the Dynamex decision to be codified into law while the other seeks to overturn it.

Assemblywoman Lorena Gonzalez Fletcher (D-San Diego) is sponsoring legislation by the California Labor Federation, AB 5 (introduced as a placeholder), to codify Dynamex and its application in state law. Gonzalez Fletcher told a reporter for the Sacramento Bee, that putting the decision into law "offers a quicker resolution than fighting in court for years over its implications for issues like workers' compensation and unemployment insurance."

The other legislation, AB 71 was introduced by Assemblywoman Melissa Melendez (R-Lake Elsinore). AB 71 seeks to reinstate the rules in place before the Dynamex decision by determining for purposes of state law, that deciding whether someone is an employee, or an independent contractor shall be based on the Borello test that applied before the California Supreme Court adopted the new ABC test.

These bills are probably just the beginning. It is almost certain more Dynamex-related legislation will be introduced and considered as industries lobby for their own special relief from the supreme court ruling.

In addition, there have already been at least two recent Court of Appeal decisions related to Dynamex. In the first decision, the ABC test was ruled inapplicable to joint employer analysis and in the second decision the court held the Dynamex ruling was limited to claims arising under the Industrial Welfare Commission Wage Orders and did not apply to statutory claims or other areas of the law.

Linda Darling-Hammond-First African-American Woman to Lead California's State Board of Education

Sacramento

G overnor Gavin Newsom recently named Dr. Linda Darling-Hammond to head one of the state's most powerful institutions, the California Board of Education making her the first African American woman to lead the 11-person board.

Dr Darling-Hammond is President and CEO of the Learning Policy Institute, a research institute that works with policymakers, researchers, educators, community groups, and others, to advance evidence-based policies that support empowering and equitable learning for each and every child.

In order to assume her new role with the state, Darling-Hammond stepped down as Chair of the Commission on Teacher Credentialing effective immediately.

"I am excited to help the state continue its positive progress toward a more equitable and empowering education system. Sadly, though, this means I will be leaving the Commission," she explained in a recent statement adding, "It has been a great privilege and pleasure to work with both Commissioners and staff on the important agenda we have taken on - strengthening educator preparation programs to support 21st century teaching and learning that focuses on the whole child, redesigning licensure and accreditation, and enabling investments in educator learning. I look forward to collectively helping California achieve even greater strides in the years to come."

Darling-Hammond also serves as the Charles E. Ducommun Professor of Education Emeritus at Stanford University where she founded the Stanford Center for Opportunity Policy in Education and the School File # R-201902282 p. 2/21, 2/28, 3/7, 3/14/2019 worker, and the rape of his female companion. A large White mob gathered outside the jail that same night. They allegedly broke in with sledge hammers and crowbars, pulled the men from their cells, and lynched them.

Cameron, who somehow survived the incident recounted to NPR in 1994, how the mob first grabbed Shipp and Smith before coming back for him and placing a noose around his neck.

"After 15 or 20 minutes of having their pictures taken and everything," Cameron continued, "They came back to get me. Just then the sheriff, and he was sweating like somebody had throwed a bucket of water in his face, told the mob leader, 'Get the hell out of here, you already hung two of 'em so that ought to satisfy ya.' Then they began to yell for me like a favorite basketball or football player. They said, 'We want Cameron, we want Cameron, we want Cameron."

"And I looked over to the faces of the people as they were beating me along the way to the tree. I was pleading for some kind of mercy, looking for a kind face. But I could find none. They got me up to the tree and they got a rope and they put it around my neck. And they began to push me under the tree. And that's when I prayed to God. I said, 'Lord have mercy, forgive me my sins.' I was ready to die."

Cameron then recounted how some people said a local citizen stood on the hood of his car and shouted, "He's innocent, he didn't do it." For whatever reason, the crowd did not lynch him that night.

Cameron said he was moved out of town, convicted as an accessory to the murder, and served four years in jail. He later became an anti-lynching advocate. Years later, the woman involved stated she was never raped.

In his autobiography, "A Time of Terror", Cameron wrote how he believed that the voice that came from the crowd to save him that night was the voice of an angel.

As we celebrate Black History month 2019, and the successful movement toward passage of the Justice for Victims of Lynching Act, let us remember Shipp, Smith, Cameron and the thousands of other Black men, women, and children, brutalized to death or scarred by the memories of lynching.

Four Inland Communities Rank Low among Cites with Best Focus on Residents' Health

San Bernardino – The personal finance website WalletHub recently compared more than 174 of the most populated U.S. cities across 42 key indicators of good health to determine which areas are doing the best job of prioritizing residents' well-being. The data sets considered in the comparisons ranged from cost of medical visit to fruit and vegetable consumption to fitness clubs per capita.

At least four inland empire cities placed in the bottom quartile in the overall ranking among the 174 cities nationwide included in the analysis. They include Fontana (128), Ontario (130), Moreno Valley (141) and San Bernardino (155).

Fighting for Students with Special Needs

Sacramento

A ssemblyman Jose Medina (D-Riverside) recently introduced legislation aimed at securing critical funding in support of the state's special needs students.

The legislation, AB 428, would provide the funding needed to equalize long-standing special education funding inequities, while also increasing support for those students requiring higher cost services.

Under state and federal law, local educational agencies are mandated to provide a free and appropriate public education to children with disabilities from birth to age 22, including preschoolage children with special needs. Despite this requirement, no state funding is currently allocated for special education preschool programs.

Currently, the state's special education funding formula, known as AB 602, also does not equitably provide the necessary funding to pay for the costs of providing educational services. For decades, regions like the Inland Empire have received less funding per student than other regions of the state. Riverside County, for example, receives roughly half of the funding per student than the state's highest funded region, for no logical reason.

Medina's AB 428 will ensure special needs preschool programs receive funding, as well as address longstanding inequities by improving the funding formula to make fund distribution fair across the state.

Medina expressed his belief, "Early intervention programs for preschoolers are an excellent investment. Children who receive high quality care and education before kindergarten are 40-to-60 percent less likely to require special education interventions when they reach school-age."

He added how such programs can result in significant future cost savings to the state and local educational agencies."

"AB 428 addresses critical issues with California's special education funding formula to ensure that all families have access to quality care for their children," Medina concluded.

The scale, developed in collaboration with the National Weather Service and several other experts, ranks atmospheric rivers (AR) on a scale from 1 to 5, that indicate the following categories-weak, moderate, strong, extreme and exceptional. The AR scale is like the intensity measure used for hurricanes. According to some reports, the AR that produced Thursday's storm was rated an AR 4.

Despite the recent rash of intense storms and record levels of rain and snow, officials caution conservation efforts must continue because it will take time for the state's snowpack to replenish groundwater reserves.

Although this year's series of storms produced much needed drought relief, they came at a cost to many. Last week, rescue teams were forced to fan out across the region and bring many inland area residents to safety.

Three people were rescued near Lake Elsinore when they were stranded on the roof of their car. In other incidents, dozens of people and pets were rescued from rivers and storm channels during the powerful rain event. One woman who was pulled from a flood channel in Corona later died of cardiopulmonary arrest. In another incident a young homeless woman died after being swept away in a Riverside storm

Last week's storms created conditions that resulted in calls for swift water rescues across Southern California, and on Thursday the inland region set a record for the highest number of swift water rescues in a single day.
