KEEPING IT REAL

Replete with Corruption? Then, It's Time for Change...

It is a good thing we were taught as children not to throw stones because no matter where you'd aim in the inland region you are bound to hit a corrupt politician. This week the stones landed in the City of Palm Springs.

It has taken well over two years as charges were originally filed in February 2017; but finally this week, Riverside County District Attorney Mike Hestrin announced the Grand Jury had indicted Palm Springs' former Mayor Steve Pougnet, and developers, Richard Meaney and John Wessman on charges related to corruption.

The indictment carried no less than thirty counts that included nine counts of accepting bribe of an executive officer, nine counts of bribing an executive officer, eight counts of conflict of interest, three counts of perjury and one count of conspiracy to commit bribery. With 21 charges against him former Mayor Pougnet is facing the lion's share of complaints while Meaney and Wessman face 10 each.

No matter which way you turn in the inland region there's a history of scandal or corruption from Beaumont to Riverside to San Bernardino to Moreno Valley to the high desert. Either this region is replete with crooks or we as voters are very poor judges of character. Either way, it is past time for a course correction in this region—something must be done to let politicians know the taxpayers in the Inland Empire are not their sponsors nor are we their benefactors.

No one is going to figure this out for us. As citizens we must push for sunshine laws and begin to pay closer attention to what is happening in our own back yard. Admittedly, most of us are already "dancing as fast as we can" and depend on our elected officials to act in our best interests as citizens—admittedly many of them are. However, far too many of them are not and taxpayers are losing millions of dollars in the process.

The Palm Springs corruption scandal appears to be the typical quid pro quo—the same kind of scenario we've seen again and again across the region. In this instance it is alleged Pougnet accepted as much as $375,000 from Wessman, who was purportedly paid the bribes through Meaney. Yet, this was just the tip of the iceberg as there was also $33 million in funds tied to a project in Palm Springs' downtown area that is still being reconciled.

As citizens, we must watch closer. We must demand more accountability. There are millions of residents in this region and I believe there must be individuals willing to serve without corrupt intent; and yet, we as voters have a penchant for electing and re-electing representatives from the same corps of politically connected, well-funded and often corrupt individuals.

If we want something other than the corruption that permeates this community, we must elect different candidates, we must demand more sunshine ordinances, we must ask questions, probe, demand, expect more from those we elect to serve us.

When we go to the polls in 2020 we will once again have an opportunity to replace some of our local representatives with those more focused on our best interests as citizens rather than lining their own pockets whether they are seeking a seat on a local water board position or a seat in city hall—change is coming. 2020 is just the first step.

Of course, this is just my opinion. I'm keeping it real.

Steve Pougnet, John Wessman and Richard Meaney

Women in Water

Rancho Cucamonga

Late last month the Inland Empire hosted its first Women in Water (WIW-IE) event at the Cucamonga Valley Water District in Rancho Cucamonga.

About 100 influential water professionals attended the gathering kicked off by Fontana Mayor Acquanetta Warren. The gathering provided a remarkable opportunity for attendees to network.

Although women are historically under-represented in the field of water and other environmental fields all of that is changing. In some circles it is believed forming coalitions like WIW-IE to support the professional growth of women in this field can be pivotal to communities.

The success of WIW-IE as well as having these women more visible in the community may serve as an impetus to other women who may be considering this or related fields..

WIW-IE recently formed out of the vision of Cucamonga Valley Water District coupled with a desire to form a local collaboration of exceptional water minds in the inland region. Although the organization is new, the group is already making its presence known and the first event was at capacity.

Those in attendance were in full support of the group's mission statement which reads, "We are a dynamic collaboration of professional women dedicated to the stewardship of water within our Inland Empire communities through leadership, growth and innovation."

Talking to Kids About Gun Violence

Gilroy, El Paso, Dayton, Sandy Hook. Aurora. San Bernardino. Orlando. Las Vegas, Parkland. Pittsburgh. At schools, movie theaters, bars, concerts, festivals, stores, churches.

Riverside, August 12, 2019 a wild and brazen gun battle on the CA 215 freeway left a young CHP officer dead, two first responders injured and several passersby caught in the crossfire.

Each time there's a mass shooting or tragic act of gun violence, —and it seems to be happening now more than ever—we find ourselves having trouble finding the words to explain to our children, yet again, why it happened, and why it continues to happen.

Kids need to be reminded that you're looking out for them. Reassuring our children in these turbulent and violent times is a paramount question for parenting.

So how should you talk about gun violence to your child? You have to figure out before you talk to them what story you want them to tell themselves. With young children, parents should keep their stories simple. These stories should reinforce parents' beliefs.

Perhaps, parents want their children to know that a bad man hurt people. Maybe parents want their children to know that someone with a serious illness felt angry and hurt people.

Give a one-sentence story to anyone under 6. Focus on the positives, such as the heroes of the story. Children in this age group will ask many more questions and parents need to decide how much they want to share.

Parents should prevent their children from seeing pictures or the news because the images will stick with children longer than words. If children do see pictures, parents should show their children positive photos to counteract the negative.

Teenagers will expect more. They are looking for honesty and solutions. This generation believes in collaboration and social justice. And they are going to ask 'What are you doing, to combat violence?' Answer and then ask, what 'you' are doing and what can we do together.

Above all, parents still need to listen to their children's feelings and display empathy. Let your child talk and listen, really listen—to them. Think about how you feel after talking through scary situations with someone you trust. You feel safer and more assured. By talking about it they'll cope better.

Closing the I.E. Gap in Registered Nurses

San Bernardino

Last fall a 2017 Survey of Nurse Employers found that many Chief Nursing Officers are having trouble recruiting registered nurses for specialized positions and more than 85 percent of hospitals reported their demand for registered nurses (RN) was greater than the available supply.

Although the inland region has a shortage of nurses it is expected to experience substantial increases in the supply of RNs through 2035, largely due to the growth in RN education programs in the area.

A new grant from the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services (DHHS) is designed to expand the capabilities of existing nurses, improved capabilities can lead to increased efficiency—an excellent step in the right direction.

The Loma Linda School of Nursing was awarded a $2.6 million grant to further educate inland area nurses about managing the opioid crisis. The funding comes from the DHHS Department of Advanced Education Nursing Program designed to increase the number of advanced practice registered nurses in the Inland Empire. The first installment of the four-

Kaiser Employees Are Prepared to Strike

Riverside

Service Employees International Union–United Healthcare Workers West (SEIU-UHW) members and employees of Kaiser Permanente recently voted to strike for higher wages, adequate staffing and a more compassionate use of technology.

If the strike comes to fruition in early October as planned it will be the nation’s largest labor event in more than twenty years.

SEIU-UHW is a coalition of nonprofit and labor organizations with about 80,000 health professional members located in California. SEIU-UHW is affiliated with the national organization of SEIU, or the Service Employees International Union.

More than 37,000 cast ballots in support of a strike (98 percent) while only 867 voted to oppose (2 percent). The turnout was uncommonly high for a strike vote in any industry, with two-thirds of workers casting ballots.

NEWS IN BRIEF

Pier 1 Discrimination Settlement

Montclair - The retailer Pier 1 recently agreed to pay $20,000 to settle a claim of employment discrimination related to a Black applicant who was denied an assistant manager position at the company’s Fontana store when a background check revealed the applicant’s race.

In a statement released by the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission (EEOC), the agency determined “[Pier 1’s] use of criminal records limited the employment opportunity of the job applicant based on his race, Black, in violation of Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964.”

By reaching an agreement the company not only avoided a lawsuit, it also settled without having to admit liability. The company did however agree to revise its policies, which include eliminating its background screening processes and no longer asking applicants about their criminal history on its job application—arrest does not always mean criminal involvement and some crimes might not be relevant to the job an applicant is seeking.

It Is Time to Tell OUR Story

Dr. Enrique G. Murillo Jr., Graciela Torres, Kareem Gongora

The Editorial Board of the Southern California News Group (SCNG) published a scathing and biased op-ed on August 8th regarding the model for ethnic studies.

We not only strongly disagree, but reject the notions suggested in response to the draft model curriculum, that operate as a dog whistle to racists— which is absolutely dangerous in today’s political climate. This is the result of an Editorial Board that does not represent the ethnic and racial diversity of the community that SCNG services. Befittingly, they hold strong opinions on this curriculum and remain silent on the existing history curriculum, which promotes nationalism curriculum and not the inclusion of our nation’s diversity.

The mere existence of ethnic studies, signals the absence of a culturally relevant and centered pedagogy, which our children deserve and has been established through the state’s policymaking process.

We want to affirm the “guiding values and principles” and highlight the inclusion of “capitalism”, an economic system that profited on slavery and now preys on the prison and military industrial complexes as well as the exploitation of workers— many who are parents of these students. Understanding the relationship of these powerful dynamics does not “teach children to feel lifelong hate and resentment over events that transpired centuries before they were born”, but “[cultivates] empathy” and enriches the process of holistically understanding who we are as Americans.

The Editorial Board recommends “to educate students about the achievements of diverse people and cultures”, which reminds us of

San Bernardino Symphony Orchestra Welcomes its New Maestro, Anthony Parnther

Marla A. Matime
Contributor

Orchestral music all over the country is perceived to be in a declining state, with concert goers primarily entering their golden years, young enthusiasts are not frequenting concerts in this millennial era, as our parents and their parents' generation did for entertainment.

I got a chance to sit down with Musical Director and Conductor of the San Bernardino Symphony Orchestra, whom I like to refer to as Maestro Anthony Parnther. Being raised on the East Coast by immigrant parents, Maestro Parnther grew to love music in such a way that his environment was not privy to.

He has worked with world class musicians and iconic artists throughout his career and had the honor of being commissioned for the re-opening of Queen Elisabeth Hall at Southbank Centre in London. He studied music performance at Northwestern University and orchestral conducting at Yale University.

How has music shaped you as a person? What was your upbringing in music and how has that been an influence on you?

I grew up in a very unmusical family. Both of my parents were academics, and they are both immigrants. My mom came to America in 1959 from Samoa and my dad immigrated in 1949 from Jamaica. He served in the Korean War and he was in the Navy and things along those lines and my dad ended up being one of the first Black graduates of MIT. He had a very long career of 40 years as an engineer for Framatome, Inc., and he dealt with nuclear energy.

My original interest in music was to be a performer, to be a professional bassoon player. So, imagine my parents' glee in hearing that their son wanted to play the bassoon for a living. They were not particularly pleased, but as far as getting involved in music, I got involved because I wanted to go on all the fancy trips.

I'd be in one of my classes and I would hear over the intercom, 'Would all of the band members please report to the busses for your trip to Disney World, or Busch Gardens.' I connived my way into the band so I could go on all the fabulous trips. So that is how this sort of scheme started and I actually enjoyed music itself.

So, the bassoon is your primary instrument, and how many instruments do you play?

The bassoon is my primary instrument. I actually play pretty much all of the orchestral instruments.

Since the bassoon is your first instrument, is there an instrument that is now one of your favorites?

That's it, the bassoon is what I enjoy playing.

What pull did music have on you to become passionate about going into the industry? What has kept you in it for so long?

There's a number of things, but the first thing would be the sense of community. For the kind of music that

FEATURE STORY

I make, it requires a whole group of people. I love the synergy of people depending on each other and relying on each other and expecting each other to collaborate in order to make this kind of music. Also, when we perform the music, again, a sense of community happens because so many people come to view this. I love the sharing aspect of it, I love the storytelling aspect of it, but community would definitely be the first thing, I love the sense of community--music, or classical music rather, forces us into that community.

You've traveled all over the world and music has been that vehicle for you, what would be your most impressionable experience while traveling?

Well there's that old term that we've heard, that music is a universal language. Well it really is whether I'm conducting in Spain, or England, or Africa, or Australia, or America, that Beethoven Symphony, elicits same emotions and excitement worldwide. It's very interesting to hear how this powerful music effects people in this world on an emotional level.

Which performance that you have been a part of, that made a particular impact on you?

I was thinking about that on the way here and there's been a lot of milestones as far as that's concerned. I think the concert that has meant the most to me is the one we did for the 70th anniversary of the Southeast Symphony. The Southeast Symphony is the oldest predominantly Black orchestra in the country.

It was started by Mabel Massengill Gunn who is a Black music teacher from South Central Los Angeles, and for 70 years, it has been highly regarded treasure in Los Angeles. The concert that we did was in dedication to Martin Luther King, Jr. but at the very end of the concert, there were 2,000 people in the audience, and I had the opportunity to teach this incredibly diverse crowd to sing Lift Every Voice and Sing, which is considered the Black National Anthem. The great thing about that song is the sense of optimism.

We went through every verse of that song. It's just about keeping faith in times of adversity. That to me, when I heard 2,000 voices singing that particular song, and seeing that it was White people, Asian people, there were people from the Middle East, and of course seeing the people from my community, that to me was, that was really moving, that was a really moving experience.

Just hearing the engagement of the audience especially being multicultural, and multiple ethnicities, I wish I would have been there.

Well the thing is, is that, I will be doing part of that concert with the San Bernardino Symphony this coming January.

Oh, I will be there.

Well, that will happen in January as we do another tribute to Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr.

Which artists (does not matter the genre) do you look to for inspiration?

I would probably say Leontyne Price. Leontyne Price was really one of the first Black opera singers to sing at the Metropolitan Opera and to become a major artist at a time when no one was doing it. I mean there was Marian Anderson who opened the door, but Leontyne Price was really the first person to walk through that door. She has gone through incredibly heroic situations in her career, but she's handled them all with such dignity and grace, and I really look up to her because Lord knows I've been through many of the same things.

If you could provide some examples. What examples have you had, meaning the obstacles that you've had to overcome, especially being a Black musician, a maestro?

How much time do we have? (Laughing) That in and of itself, literally, could be a book. I mean there were times where, I'm the maestro and I'm trying to get on stage and the stagehand has blocked that, you know, thinking that I was the cleaning crew or things along those lines. I can go through endless examples and things along those lines, but you know, I don't really concentrate on that. Kind of like Leontyne Price in times where she has been disparaged, she's handled it all with dignity and class, and I really look up to that as opposed to anger, retribution and things along those lines. She is really a noble and dignified person.

As far as the world of classical music, a lot of people perceive it to be an elitist form of entertainment. What would you suggest that would get more people of color and people in impoverished communities involved in symphony orchestration?

Well you know there is that perception, and I've always required ticket prices are in a wide range to ensure that people in the community can attend. I think the first way that would help that would be by seeing a Black conductor. It's like, "you know he's there, so there must be something to this."

As far as elitism in classical music, I can't really speak to that because I do believe that elitism exists in all genres of music. If you take a look at what we're doing next season with the San Bernardino Symphony, the first half we'll have Lynn Harrell who is one of the most widely regarded cellist in the world.

But the second half, I'm bringing in my dear friend, Jennifer Holiday. I think people who would not normally come to a symphony orchestra concert hall would come to see Jennifer and I think they would experience beauty. I think they would be hooked the first half and come back to see something else.

Now, what made you decide to take the position of musical director and conductor of the San Bernardino Symphony Orchestra?

I really fell in love with the orchestra and community itself. As part of my audition, I conducted the orchestra two years ago, so it's been since 2017. But meeting the members of the orchestra who really were very welcoming and the members of the community, especially during the intermission. I don't hide in my dressing room, I come out and meet and greet people. I really felt like the crowd at large really embraced me and were very friendly and interested. I loved how they were so supportive and very passionate about their orchestra.

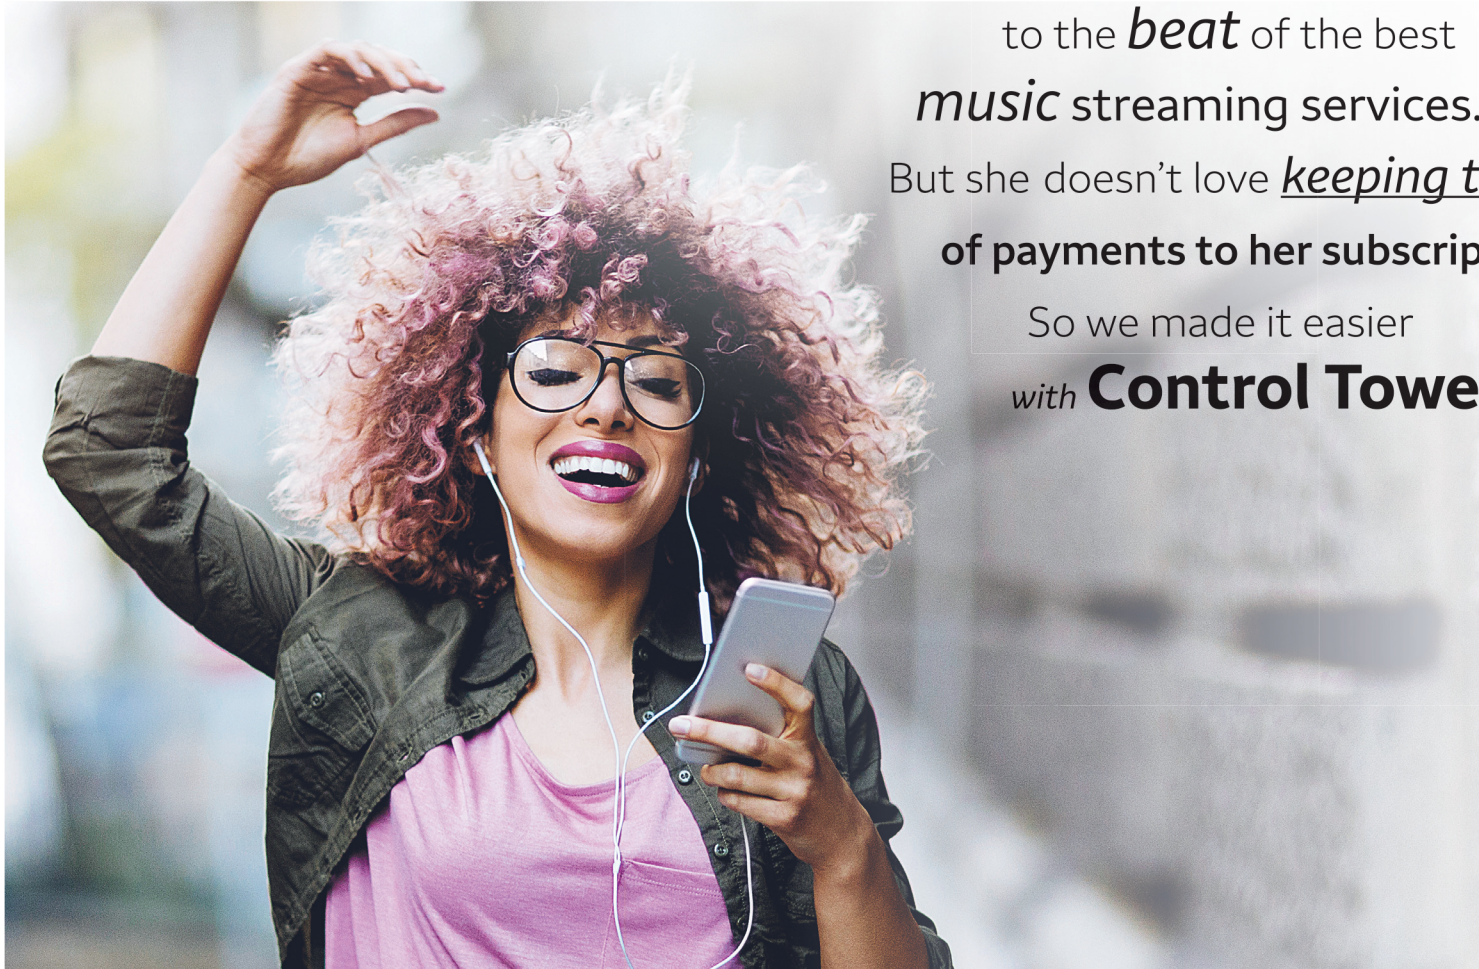

The second draw, the San Bernardino Symphony is a really excellent orchestra. I think there is a lot of opportunity to expand its outreach to the community and impact the community in a lot of positive ways.

So, my last question is, people think when it comes to performing arts, especially how existing curriculum celebrates Dr. Martin Luther King Jr.'s work towards civil and human rights for Americans, but overlooks Dr. King's positions on the Vietnam War and the creation of the Poor People's campaign. These stark omissions frame the conversation on economics and inter-sectional issues which continue to impact communities of color.

We have reviewed the model curriculum for ethnic studies, which is working to cultivate academic success and elevate cultural competence. Undoubtedly, it should also raise sociopolitical and historical awareness.

In closing, we believe "that until the lions have their own historians, the history of the hunt will always glorify the hunter."

putting a stake in the ground that it's time for this corporation to get back on track and live up to its mission to help patients, workers and communities thrive," said Heather Wright, a women's health clerk at Kaiser Permanente in Santa Clara.

"This strike vote is about stopping Kaiser's unfair labor practices. This company should be all about providing the best possible patient care, but unfortunately its focus in recent years has been on making billions of dollars in profits and millions of dollars for Kaiser executives."

Workers say they want Kaiser to bargain in good faith and stop committing unfair labor practices, this is one of the reasons their negotiations include an effort to restore a true worker-management partnership.

In response to the strike vote Kaiser claimed, "SEIU-UHW leadership has decided to use the threat of a strike as a bargaining tactic, designed to divide employees and mischaracterize Kaiser Permanente's position, even though most of the contracts don't expire until October."

Kaiser further claimed SEIU-UHW used what they claimed were, "obviously misleading ballot questions," to secure membership approval of the strike vote.

There are 43 short-term general, children's, and specialty hospitals in the Inland Empire as well as seven associate degree (AD), three bachelor's degree (BSN), and one entry-level master's (ELM) RN education programs. There also are four RN education programs based outside the region that have satellite campuses in the region. They include Azusa Pacific University, West Coast University, California State University San Marcos, and San Joaquin Valley College.

In February 2018, there were 41,197 RNs with current, active licenses living in the Inland Empire region. The region's shortage of RN's is primarily due to large numbers of RNs who live locally but work in other regions.

classical music and orchestration, that it's a dying industry. What would you say to the critics and naysayers who would discourage people from attending a concert or discourage children from going into the field of music?

I would say there are some orchestras that are experiencing great difficulty. For example, the Baltimore Symphony. I'm not saying that this is indicative of that particular orchestra. I think the orchestras that are struggling are the ones who have not figured out a way to remain relevant in their communities. They haven't adapted or evolved or updated, and things along those lines. I look forward to addressing all of those things with the San Bernardino Symphony—adapting, updating, etc.

There are also statistics that says that more people are attending classical music concerts than ever before, in history, so there are definitely some examples of orchestras that are struggling, but I think the future of classical music is particularly prosperous.

Maestro Parnter is also the conductor for the Southeast Symphony based out of Inglewood, California. It is historically a predominately Black orchestra. He also serves as Artistic Director of Musicians at Play, an organization dedicated to preserving and showcasing the musical legacy of Los Angeles. They raise money for instrumental music programs throughout Southern California.

The next concert scheduled for the San Bernardino Symphony is the 91st Season Opener on Saturday, September 14, 2019, at 7:30 pm featuring the Festive Overture by Shostakovich and a newly commissioned piece, in honor of Maestro Parnter.

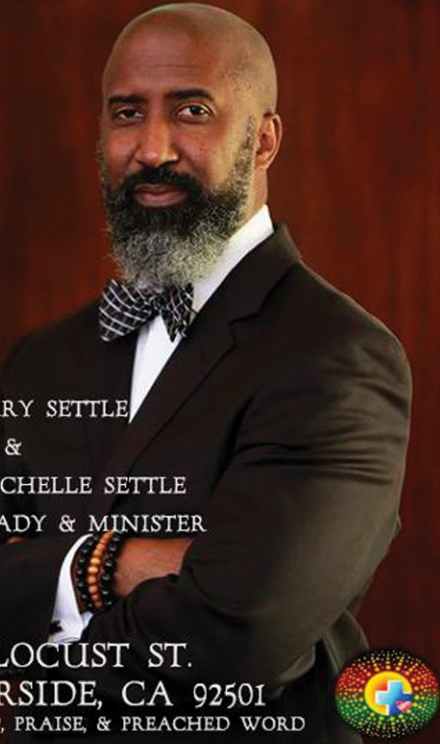

For more information on San Bernardino Symphony's upcoming concert season, visit www.sanbernardinosymphony.org. To learn more about Parnter, visit www.anthonyparnter.com.

WE DEFINE THE Future

Empowering Success.

Sean Ganther originally hoped for a music career, but after transferring to CSUSB, he developed a passion for science, and earned his bachelor's degree in biology. The CSUSB alumnus is now defining the future of dentistry as he is studying at UC San Francisco in the highly competitive DDS/Ph.D. dual degree program, which combines clinical training and advanced research.
