HUNGER IN THE INLAND REGION

Inland families struggle with food insecurity

Inside: San Bernardino's Race for DA Brings Calls for Criminal Justice Reform

Wells Fargo launches $60 billion plan to increase African American homeownership

After years of moving and renting, novelist Randy Camp, recently became a first-time homebuyer at age 55.

"It feels good," said Camp, a resident advisor at a youth services agency in Des Moines, Iowa. "There's this idea of 'this place is yours, so now make sure you take care of it and enjoy it.' I also did it for my children. As I get older, I realize the importance of leaving an asset for them."

In an effort to make homeownership dreams a reality for others like Camp, Wells Fargo has launched a 10-year diversity initiative to provide $60 billion in home loans, supporting at least 250,000 African American homeowners by 2027. As part of the plan, the company also intends to significantly increase the diversity of its mortgage sales force.

Working with the National Urban League and the National Association of Real Estate Brokers, Wells Fargo announced the initiative Feb. 28 at the National Center for Civil and Human Rights in Atlanta.

The company aims to help reverse the decreasing homeownership rate in the African American community, said Brad Blackwell, head of housing policy and homeownership growth strategies for Wells Fargo.

Blackwell added that the company also plans to invest $15 million in a wide range of initiatives that promote financial education and counseling for African American homebuyers over the next 10 years. The company will also boost its recruiting, hiring, and retention of African American home mortgage officers, he said.

Year of transformation at Wells Fargo

In a letter published in the 2017 Wells Fargo Annual Report, CEO Tim Sloan had this to say about the past year:

"This was a year of transformation at Wells Fargo. We achieved a great deal in 2017 and look forward to building on our momentum in the months ahead. Our top priority remains rebuilding the trust of our customers, team members, communities, regulators, and shareholders. We have made foundational changes to identify and fix problems so they do not happen again and achieved significant progress in our commitment to make things right for our customers and build a better bank. Our transformation is grounded in our vision of satisfying our customers' financial needs and helping them succeed financially. While we have more work to do, I assure you that the Operating Committee and I are fully committed to building on our accomplishments. In addition, we take very seriously the consent order we entered into with the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System in February 2018, and we will work diligently, yet swiftly, to meet the requirements.

In response to feedback from our team, we introduced a streamlined Vision, Values & Goals of Wells Fargo in late 2017 — replacing what previously was a 37-page expression of our culture. Today the wallet-sized booklet focuses exclusively on our guiding principles and goals, clearly expressing the beliefs that guide every team member as we work together to build the best Wells Fargo possible.

We have overcome challenges many times during our history. We have a solid foundation, exceptional businesses, and an outstanding team. Our more than 260,000 team members are dedicated, talented, and committed — and, without a doubt, they are our most important resource. Thank you for placing your trust in Wells Fargo and for your support. Our commitment to you is unwavering as we continue our transformation into a better, stronger company.

Threatening Changes Go Unnoticed

"When you have a voice, you also have a moral obligation to use that voice for good."

- Leandra Medine

With the constant barrage of lies, antics and actions outside the norm facilitated by the current president and members of his administration on an almost daily basis, it is easy to miss some of the more egregious actions that are changing American democracy and could have certain impacts on communities across the nation including here in the inland region.

Unbeknownst to many of us, one such effort actually began last fall in response to a mandate by U.S. Deputy Attorney General Rod Rosenstein. It called for a review of the US Attorneys' Manual which includes official policy statements and provides real-world guidance to prosecutors around the country regarding how to do their jobs. The last major update to the manual occurred in 1997.

Although many for the changes so far have been purely administrative in nature including actions like updating contacts lists or the removal of repealed laws, the effort has also included changes that could have far reaching implications. Interestingly, according to a recent report by BuzzFeedNEWS, though it is not uncommon, the Department of Justice (DOJ) has failed to announce many of the recent changes.

One very important example of such failure occurred last November, in relation to the DOJ's media contacts policy. A subsection titled "Need for Free Press and Public Trial" was removed in its entirety. Before removal the section read:

"Likewise, careful weight must be given in each case to the constitutional requirements of a free press and public trials as well as the right of the people in a constitutional democracy to have access to information about the conduct of law enforcement officers, prosecutors and courts, consistent with the individual rights of the accused. Further, recognition should be given to the needs of public safety, the apprehension of fugitives, and the rights of the public to be informed on matters that can affect enactment or enforcement of public laws or the development or change of public policy."

In lieu of this statement, revised language is now focused on balancing the right of the public "to have access to information about the Department of Justice" with other factors in decisions to release information.

The media policy was also amended to make it illegal to share classified information with someone who lacks authorization to receive it and further directs DOJ employees to report all contacts with the media about DOJ matters.

It is interesting that while the current administration is all-in on protecting perceived rights under the Second Amendment, it quietly and willingly whittles away at freedoms authorized under the First Amendment.

George Mason, a delegate to the U.S. Constitutional Convention of 1787, was prescient when he wrote, "The freedom of the press is one of the great bulwarks of liberty and can never be restrained but by despotic governments."

This is just my opinion. I'm keeping it real.

The Aric Isom Memorial Toastmasters

Riverside - Fellow Riversidians, there's a new club in town so lend an ear, and if you're feeling daring...your speech, ideas, stories, and enthusiasm. A chapter of Toastmasters International, a world-wide organization whose focus is to help build effective speakers and leaders, has just sprouted in our very own Downtown Riverside.

This chapter was born out of a friends love for and promise to a dearly departed fellow Toastmaster, Aric Isom. The Aric Isom Memorial Toastmaster is how John Fisher is paying homage to his friend Aric, a Toastmaster with a long legacy of community activism and social justice passionneering.

The Aric Isom Memorial Toastmasters not only has a special beginning, it's an inspiring league of its own, bringing together a diverse membership with a love for speaking on and leading on today's most impassioned social topics. The Aric Isom Memorial is the first club in the history of Toastmaster history to be named after a member of a minority group. The make-up of the cohort is a reflection of Aric Isom's legacy, as it is home to aspiring speakers of diverse faiths, ethnicities, sexual orientations, identities and political views. The club's first elected president, Qianteh Looney, is an African American female entrepreneur, whose mission is to provide support and resources to families with children with speech and communication disorders through her non-profit, Bryan David's Brothers Foundation. This club is also the only Toastmasters Club to be home to two Riverside City Council members. The Aric Isom Memorial Toastmasters Club is breaking the status quo of Toastmasters International and public speaking in general.

So if you are feeling daring and 2018 is your year to shine as a speaker, come join the Aric Isom Toastmasters Memorial every Thursday at 6 pm at the Historic Universalist Unitarian Church of Riverside located on the corner of Lemon and Mission Inn Blvd.

Members for this year are: Ms. Qianteh Looney-President, Mr. John Fisher- Vice President, Mr. Andy Melendrez- Riverside City Council Member, Mr. Allen Stein, Ms. Susan, Mrs. Diane

Randall, Mr. Quinn Bloom, Mr. Bryan David Baldrige, Ms. Maria Razo, Ms. Leslie Mooring, Mrs. Nane Mooring, Ms. Daisy Valdovinos- Writer of the article, Mr. Taylor-Photographer, Congressional candidate Dr. Norman Quintero & his wife Mrs. Gloria Quintero.

Five Million Flight Hours

San Bernardino—Board of Supervisor Chairman Robert Lovingood recently acknowledged General Atomics' Predator-class aircraft series for having achieved its five millionth flight hour. General Atomics Aeronautical Systems, Inc., who has operations in the high desert, also reported it has Predator-class aircraft in the air around the world, "every second of every day." Not only was the logging of five million flight hours an achievement for the company, it was also an historic milestone for the industry. The landmark achievement was achieved on April 4, with 360,311 total missions completed and more than 90 percent of them were flown in combat.

Big Win for San Bernardino County Transportation Authority

San Bernardino

In a span of two days, the San Bernardino County Transportation Authority learned it was granted a windfall in public funding.

The good news began when the agency was notified of a $30 million award for the Redlands Passenger Rail Project (RPRP) under the 2018 Transit and Intercity Rail Program (TIRCP) that was soon followed by last week's announcement of a recommendation from the California Transportation Commission for the San Bernardino County Transportation Authority (SBCTA) to receive an additional $217 million in funding under SB1. This award represented nearly 11 percent of all SB1 funds granted this year.

In a statement, the agency acknowledged its aggressive pursuit of state grant funding was rewarded. According to SBCTA President Alan D. Wapner, "This infusion of nearly a quarter-billion-dollars into our transportation system is an extraordinary accomplishment toward addressing the extreme demand for mobility in our county."

He continued, "This is exactly the kind of investment needed to stimulate economic vitality and improve the quality of life for our residents."

SBCTA Executive Director Dr. Raymond Wolfe commented about the Redlands Passenger Rail Project stating, "RPRP, which will operate as Arrow, is a great example of what we believe can transform rail travel throughout Southern California."

In addition to the $30 million in TIRCP funds, according to Wolfe, RPRP will also receive $75 million in SB1 grants – for a total of $105 million. He noted how the project will not only provide a vital connection from the eastern end of the valley to the Metrolink rail system, it will also incorporate some of the latest innovations in environmentally friendly Zero or Low-Emission trains.

Beyond funding for RPRP, the California Transportation Commission's recommendation included $117 million for the I-10 Corridor project, $24 million for the U.S. 395 widening project and in response to a joint application with LA Metro—another $39 million to extend the Gold Line service from Claremont to Montclair.

CA House Representatives Fight President Trump's Attack on California Desert

Palm Desert

Representative Raul Ruiz has released a copy of the letter signed by 38 members of California's Democratic delegation to the House of Representatives expressing their firm opposition to reopening the Desert Renewable Energy Conservation Plan (DRECP).

In the letter authored by Ruiz, the California Democratic members expressed strong opposition to the Department of Interior's recent threat to overhaul the DRECP, California's landmark blueprint for recreation, renewable energy, and conservation of public land in the California Desert.

"The DRECP is not just a regional conservation issue, it is an example of pragmatic problem-solving and the democratic process working to create a sustainable future for our state and our desert," Ruiz stressed. "I am very concerned that the President is threatening to undermine the DRECP, harming the thousands of tourism and recreation jobs it protects and slowing down the development of renewable energy projects in the future. Furthermore, this proposal completely disregards the eight years of hard work and consensus-building by hundreds of stakeholders and thousands of my constituents without legitimate reason."

According to Ruiz, the Trump Administration has claimed it wants to see more areas open to large scale renewable energy and other extractive land use activities that would irreparably harm public access, iconic landscapes, and critical habitat. The DRECP was designed to make permits for renewable energy projects and transmission on public land faster and more efficient and would provide more than 388,000 acres of Development Focus Areas for renewable

NEWS IN BRIEF

Solar Mandate for New Construction

Sacramento – This week, the California Energy Commission is scheduled to decide whether the state will become the first in the nation to mandate new energy standards requiring solar panels for new housing construction beginning in 2020. According to estimates by the California Building Industry Association, only about 20 percent of new homes built today include solar panels. The mandate will accelerate the deployment and utilization of this renewable energy source. Although most builders would prefer a more measured approach to mandated solar deployment, the Building Industry Association has none the less, indicated most builders are prepared to adhere to the new requirements.

In addition to the solar mandate, the new measures are also expected to include a recommendation to increase reliance on electricity over natural gas among other considerations.

Brain Freeze

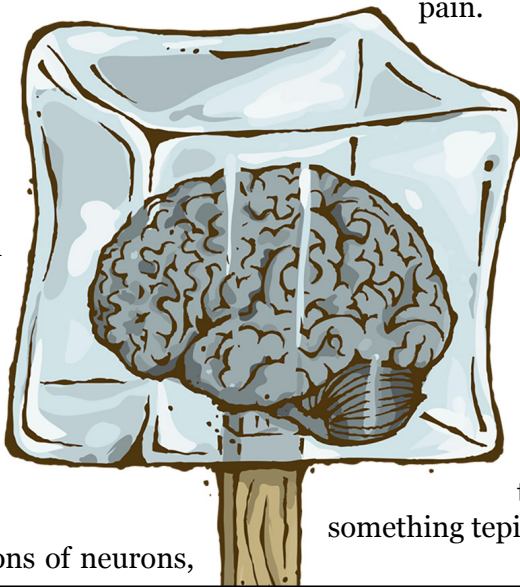

Brain freeze is practically a rite of summer. It happens when you eat ice cream or gulp something ice cold too quickly. The scientific term is sphenopalatine ganglioneuralgia, but that’s a mouthful. Brain freeze is your body’s way of putting on the brakes, telling you to slow down and take it easy. Here’s how it works.

Brain freeze is really a type of headache that is rapid in onset, but rapidly resolved as well. Our mouths are highly vascularized, including the tongue -- that’s why we take our temperatures there. But drinking a cold beverage fast doesn’t give the mouth time to absorb the cold very well. Here’s how it happens: When you slurp a really cold drink or eat ice cream too fast you are rapidly changing the temperature in the back of the throat at the juncture of the internal carotoid artery, which feeds blood to the brain, and the anterior cerebral artery, which is where brain tissue starts.

One thing the brain doesn’t like is for things to change, and brain freeze is a mechanism to prevent you from doing that.

The brain can’t actually feel pain despite its billions of neurons, but the pain associated with brain freeze is sensed by receptors in the outer covering of the brain called the meninges, where the two arteries meet. When the cold hits, it causes a dilation and contraction of these arteries and that’s the sensation that the brain is interpreting as pain.

Analyzing brain freeze may seem like silly science to some, but it’s helpful in understanding other types of headaches. Doctors believe this same misinterpretation of blood vessel constriction/dilation is the intense pain of a migraine headache.

We can’t easily give people migraines or a cluster headache, but we can easily induce brain freeze without any long-term problems. We can learn something about headache mechanisms and extend that to our understanding to develop better treatments for patients.

Is there a cure for brain freeze? Yes -- stop drinking the icy cold beverage. You can also jam your tongue up to the roof of your mouth because it’s warm or drink something tepid to normalize the temperature in your mouth.

California Wellness Foundation Supports Underserved Students

Riverside

The California Wellness Foundation has awarded UCR two grants for a total of $450,000, to increase access to higher education and degree completion for underserved populations.

According to UCR officials, $250,000 will go to the Guardian Scholars Program in UCR's Office of Foster Youth Support Services and $200,000 will go to the FastStart Summer Academy in UCR's School of Medicine.

The school's Guardian Scholars Program supports students transitioning to college from the foster care system. The funding will provide access to year-round housing in campus residences, academic scholarships, targeted advising, mentoring, tutoring, and bi-weekly social and team-building activities. It also connects scholars to a range of campus resources, including the career and counseling centers.

The grant will also help the Guardian Scholars cover operating expenses and supplement basic and case-managed services. In addition, it will support the establishment of new internship opportunities with regional businesses. School officials also noted that more than 50 percent of UCR's Guardian Scholars funding comes from private support—individuals, foundations, and corporations.

San Bernardino County Workforce Development Board Re-Elects Tony Myrell

San Bernardino — Last week, Tony Myrell, owner of Premier Medical Transportation in Colton, was unanimously re-elected to a fourth one-year term as chairman of the San Bernardino County Workforce Development Board (WDB). Myrell has served on the WDB for more than seven years.

"I'm honored by the show of confidence from my fellow board members and look forward to continuing the momentum we've created in establishing San Bernardino County as a destination for businesses and high-quality jobs," Myrell said. Under Myrell's tenure as chair of the WDB, the board has played a critical role in creating economic and employment opportunity in the county.

HUNGER IN THE INLAND REGION

Inland families struggle with food insecurity

S.E. Williams
Contributor

California has the highest poverty rate in the nation as evidenced by the U. S. Census Bureau's most recent Supplemental Poverty Measure which showed nearly one in five of the state's residents live in poverty. The nation's Supplemental Poverty Measure weighs a number of factors including the cost of housing, utilities, food and clothing. It also counts any noncash government assistance as a form of income.

California is currently home to 12 percent of the nation's population and boasts a Gross Domestic Product, that economists report, increased at a rate double the national average during the five-year period which ended in 2016; yet, the state is home to nearly one in three of America's welfare recipients.

Despite the level of welfare enrollment and improving employment numbers, food insecurity defined as the lack of access to enough healthy

“...tonight, thousands of your neighbors will go to bed hungry. It may be your child’s schoolmate who is undernourished. Perhaps it’s an elderly neighbor who has to make a decision whether to eat or pay for a utility bill.”

food for all members of a household, has continued to persist. A new report by the domestic hunger relief organization Feeding America, provided information on food insecurity based on the most recent data available.

According to the report, in 2016, more than 227,000 Riverside County residents or 9.8 percent of the population were food insecure. The impact in San Bernardino County was even greater, nearly 10.4 percent of the population or nearly 219,000 residents experienced food insecurity.

As a point of clarity, it is important to note food insecure households are not necessarily food insecure all the time. In a number of instances, these households find themselves making trade-offs and those trade-offs can vary. In some case, families forego paying bills or filling prescriptions or are forced to choose meals with little or no nutritional value. The choices are difficult and impacting. For example, a former Riverside County resident named Dell who was also a senior and is now deceased, at times, would choose between food and her medication. This hard choice is not uncommon for a number of seniors.

One of the ways food insecurity can be mitigated for many low-income individuals and families is through the nation’s food stamp program, called CalFresh here in California. Unfortunately, only about 70 percent of those eligible in the state are actually enrolled compared to the national enrollment average of 83 percent. As a result, California has one of the lowest levels of food stamp program participation in the nation.

The encouraging news is although the level of statewide participation in CalFresh sits at 70 percent this number reflects a four percent improvement from the 66 percent participation previously reported.

Kim McCoy Wade, Chief, CalFresh Branch of the California Department of Social Services recently told Kaiser Health News, the low level of participation in California’s food stamp program may be partly attributed to what she described as a less-than-optimal quality of customer service and a bulky bureaucracy.

San Bernardino County has taken an innovative approach to addressing this issue. It has placed self-service kiosks at the entrances to its county offices. It is staffed with county employees who help people enroll in CalFresh if they qualify and are interested.

California is also looking to its successful enrollment of low income residents in the Affordable Care Act to serve as a model for reducing food insecurity through CalFresh enrollment. “We are taking the successes from the Affordable Care Act and are turning to our next-biggest program and trying to apply those lessons,” McCoy Wade told Kaiser Health News. “The Medi-Cal-CalFresh connection is something where we think there is a lot of room to grow.”

Those who rely on these programs have expanded beyond the jobless, children and the elderly to encompass more and more of the nation’s working class. Consider that at least sixty percent of non-elderly individuals who rely on food stamps actually belong to households where at least one adult is working in contrast to the age-old myth of the so-called “welfare queen.”

Many families and individuals are trapped in the food insecurity syndrome experienced by the working poor due to the suppression in wages that has spanned decades. In 2016, when the California legislature passed an increase to the minimum wage from $10 to $15 an hour by 2022, it was a long overdue adjustment. Also, as experts have noted, had wages kept pace with the level of increased productivity experienced in recent decades, minimum-wage-workers would already be making over more nourished and has difficulty learning on an empty stomach. Or it could be a co-worker, a working mother whose delay filling a prescription or buying groceries. The faces of hunger are as broad as the faces of America.”

- David Nasby, General Mills

than $18 an hour.

Another factor to be considered in this scenario is the role played by corporations like WalMart for example, who give generously to local nonprofits through contributions that can include food, cash and/or volunteer hours, yet purportedly because they pay their workers such low wages, some of their very own employees are served by the nonprofit agencies such corporations support.

Stalled wages have produced a class of working poor who are living at the margins in the inland region and left many of them dependent on social support programs like CalFresh. However, much of the heavy lifting locally in this regard is facilitated by the region’s nonprofits including the area’s local food bank, Feeding America of Riverside and San Bernardino Counties (FARSB).

In an interview with The Voice/Black Voice News, Stuart Haniff, Chief Philanthropy Officer at FARSB reported, “Over 400,000 people in the I.E. rely on the food bank’s food supply each month to help supplement their food shortage.” Despite this need, the organization’s ability to meet demand has been negatively impacted during the previous year.

According to Haniff, FARSB has experienced an overall decline in local donations, grants and corporate support which could mean less food going into the community to those who need it the most. He noted, “With political turmoil, devastating hurricanes, disastrous mudslides, and heart-breaking shootings, our entire Nation seemed to be in need and frankly, people didn’t know who to help or where to donate.”

In addition to this turmoil and despite the improving economy, too many people in the inland region still do not have enough food to eat. As Haniff explained, “One in eight Inland Empire residents are food insecure, including one in four children.” He further stressed how these numbers grew as a result of the Great Recession which produced increased disparities and high unemployment.

Also, according to Haniff, this region has also been among the slowest to recover. He further noted that due to size of the region, it is just not possible to reach all of the 800k residents in need. “We can provide food for half that number. Through that network, we provide food to 400k per month.”

Haniff offered a compelling description of the changing face of hunger in the inland region. “We are finding a great shift in the population of those in need,” he stressed as he noted how it is no longer just the face of the homeless. “A lot of people in need are students, seniors and the working poor—many who are working two, three or even four jobs.”

Haniff and his team are spreading awareness within the community that although FARSB has a large and highly recognizable brand in its name, it does not receive its funding from the well-known national organization, Feeding America. “We are solely funded and operated through the donations and support of donors, corporations, and funders who live in the Inland Empire.”

In an effort to increase the organization’s visibility in the region and brand itself as unique from the national organization, FARSB has embraced a theme of “Give Where You Live.” It is the agency’s hope this will encourage increased local donations.

Haniff concluded, “The food bank is being resourceful and has confidence that once the community realizes the impact local nonprofit organizations like FARSB have experienced this past year, the community will join together to Give Where They Live.” This will help FARSB continue its efforts to build a better tomorrow for those most in need throughout the Inland Empire.

San Bernardino's Race for District Attorney Brings Calls for Criminal Justice Reform

At an event billed as “It’s Time to Rethink Public Safety” held on April 30, in the City of Fontana, Congregations Organized for Prophetic Engagement informed the audience they invited San Bernardino County District Attorney Michael Ramos and his opponent, Attorney Jason Anderson, to give their views regarding criminal justice reform with an emphasis on rehabilitation instead of incarceration.

However, only Anderson was in attendance. And according to organizers, Ramos claimed to have been given little notice which caused him to be unable to attend. Near the front of the room, Anderson sat on the left side of a bench next to a sign representing Ramos and where Inland Congregations United for Change and Life Center Church Minister, Kesha McGee, sat on the right side holding a protest sign stating, “Represent us, don’t avoid us.”

The 2016 race for San Bernardino County District Attorney finds the incumbent, Michael Ramos, facing his biggest challenger and criticism for the unsuccessful outcome of what was once termed a “sweeping conspiracy and bribery case” related to a $102 million settlement between the County of San Bernardino and the Colonies Partners over a commercial and housing development project in the City of Upland.

According to documents obtained by The Voice/Black Voice News, the lawsuit filed in March 2002 by the Colonies Partners (Colonies) against the County of San Bernardino (county) involved responsibility for the flood control infrastructure installed on the property to handle flood waters that historically flowed across the property and whether the county’s actions caused additional flood waters to flow across the land than was the historical norm.

This legal dispute filed against the county led to numerous legal actions and millions in taxpayer dollars being spent defending the county; pursuing other government agencies for their role and responsibility, prosecuting numerous former public officials and individuals involved with the development as well as politicians who approved the $102 million settlement; and defending against claims being made by the now exonerated defendants against the county.

As a result, tax payers are currently at risk of increasing financial liability in relation to the case. Also, one of the former defendants in the case, developer Jeff Burum, is providing financial support to Jason Anderson’s campaign through a political action committee.

Additionally, the growing scandal has awakened the minority communities to seek reform of the criminal justice system with one community organization, Congregations Organized for Prophetic Engagement (COPE) educating the community about the issues and the role of a district attorney while encouraging them to vote and hold the district attorney accountable.

"The people, we make the decisions on who will serve in this office," Immanuel Praise Fellowship Bishop Kelvin Simmons informed the audience of over 100 people as he outlined the purpose of the event was to inform the community about what a district attorney does, about the justice issues that matter to the community, how the current justice system impacts individuals with testimony from those who have been convicted of crimes and then turned their lives around and finally, why our elected officials must rethink their approach to public safety and justice.

California Partnership Community Organizer Ipyani Lockert informed the audience that the event was being live-streamed on the American Civil Liberties Union of Southern California (ACLU) and COPE's Facebook pages to expand its impact while providing the hashtag for Twitter as #rethinksafetysb and acknowledging the numerous organizations involved in the movement.

"This is a non-partisan gathering, therefore, the one candidate in the room will not have an opportunity to speak," COPE Community Organizer Demita Burgess explained acknowledging the presence of attorney Jason Anderson, challenger to district attorney Michael Ramos.

Burgess informed the audience that COPE will have a panel to take questions from the floor and gather questions people have for the district attorney and his challenger and provide their responses by email.

ACLU Community Engagement and Policy Advocate Luis Nolasco explained he works on immigrant rights and criminal justice while also educating the public on what a district attorney does on behalf of the public.

"Most people just think of them mainly as a prosecutor but they have actually a lot of discretionary power that we don't think about," Nolasco voiced explaining, "Particularly with policies around the criminal justice system and sentencing."

"Our communities of color often face tougher sentencing and a lot of that comes at the hands of the prosecutors," Nolasco opined directing the audience to the website: <https://meetyourda.org/> to learn about the role of district attorneys and communicate with your county's district attorney.

"There is an elephant in the room right now; that we are going to have to go on and address, we are extremely disappointed that we actually have to have this conversation the way that we have to have it," COPE Associate Director Felicia Jones voiced explaining, "We are here because we want to hear from our district attorney."

"First of all, we want to be educated, but we also want to hear from him," Jones explained confirming, "We are disappointed because we want to have a non-partisan conversation where we hear from both of our candidates, we are going to follow the rules but that doesn't mean we are not going to be heard."

"We are re-thinking public safety altogether that means that after June, we have got work to do," Jones predicted explaining, "We have work to do to make sure that our district attorney is accountable to the people."

"We are not happy today and we are going to defeat this elephant in the room and our voices are going to be heard," Jones declared explaining COPE re-launched the Rethink Public Safety Initiative to promote a "responsible restorative, redemptive approach to criminal justice."

"This is important to us because too many of our babies have prison as an option not college and that is not okay," Jones concluded.

COPE Executive Director Reverend Samuel Casey introduced a panel on criminal justice issues consisting of Life Center Church Minister Keshia McGee, Inland Coalition for Immigrant Justice, Jenia Dunlap, Institute for Developing Equity, Advocacy, and Leadership, Lanae Norwood, and San Bernardino County Public Defender, Attorney Ed O'Brien.

In response to a question on the effect of Proposition 47, O'Brien revealed, "One of the things we hear often (sic) is our jails are filled because of Proposition 47. O'Brien accused the current district attorney Ramos of sitting "on a study that the board of supervisors commissioned and paid for of its own jail and what we found is 7,000 jail beds we have, 75 percent of those people in those jail beds have not been convicted of a crime."

"We also know 8 percent of the people that are arrested (sic) were arrested of a crime of violence," O'Brien voiced explaining, "What we also know is of all the people sitting in jail waiting to be convicted or their case dismissed, 92 percent are going home."

"So the jails are not filled because of Assembly Bill 109 (AB109) or Proposition 47 and they are also not filled because of dangerous people,” O’Brien declared while pointing to “data” indicating “San Bernardino arrests way more people than any other county in the state” while San Bernardino County’s crime rate is “no worse than Sacramento and LA.”

O’Brien explained he had been “trying to convince our leaders” to base their comments on the data yet public officials continue to claim the “jails are filled” because of AB109 and proposition 47. O’Brien concluded, “They are either lying or they are ignorant but either way they shouldn’t be in charge of making those statements.”

Casey objected to the county spending $220 million annually for that jail “every year, over and over” questioning whether that was an effective use of taxpayer dollars.

Life Center Church Minister Kesha McGee spoke of the cost of crime including the cost of the investigations, court hearings and incarceration and how her program, Ceasefire, has been encouraging rehabilitation of those charged with crimes.

Regarding policies directed toward those in the country illegally and the negative impact on their willingness to report crimes, Jennaya revealed in San Bernardino County, many illegal immigrants are not being informed, as required by law, of the potential consequences of their criminal conviction on their immigration status. Jenaya described this as “double punishment” and noted that after serving their sentence for a crime, they could face deportation and never see their family again.

In response to questions about the killing of Nathaneal Pickett II and Diante Yarber by law enforcement in the City of Barstow, Lanae Norwood from the Institute for Developing Equity, Advocacy, and Leadership asked, “How many more times can this happen without accountability?”

“When you have Nathanael Pickett who police knew had a mental illness and he was unarmed and they gunned him down in cold blood and the district attorney did nothing about it,” Norwood charged, “There was no accountability, there was immunity for that officer.”

“The people didn’t feel that way, the people awarded a judgment to that family in the amount of 33.5 million dollars,” Norwood shared explaining, “I am sure the family would give that money back to have their son back.”

Norwood then spoke of the recent killing of Yarber, father of three children, in the City of Barstow while in the Walmart parking lot in broad daylight where City of Barstow Police Officers fired 30 shots and objected to the fact that the officers involved are back on the street.

Norwood spoke of the importance of training police officers on de-escalation and with regard to the Black community, sensitivity training.

Young Visionaries Youth Leadership Academy President and CEO Terrance Stone and formerly incarcerated, Michael Jarado and Michael Garcia, spoke of the lasting impact of being labeled as a gang member and how the label adds years to any prison sentence, a label without an expiration date. Stone, Jarado and Garcia testified regarding how they have turned their lives around and are now productive citizens.

COPE Executive Director Reverend Samuel Casey concluded the event by reminding the community to “rethink public safety alternatives to incarceration” while holding their public officials accountable. For more information please visit website: <http://copesite.org/>.

and the surrounding community to provide current and former foster youth students with a comprehensive college experience and the opportunity to explore and realize their full potential. This grant makes it possible to continue helping our scholars achieve their aspirations, so they can make a positive impact in the community that has welcomed and supported them,” Tuppitt Yates, Guardian Scholars Executive Director and a professor of psychology told UCR Today.

The $200,000 grant awarded to the School of Medicine-based FastStart Summer Academy by the California Wellness Foundation will support more than 100 high school students’ participation over three years. The funding will pay for three teachers, three teaching assistants, and a program coordinator.

The FastStart Summer Academy is designed to increase the number of disadvantaged students pursuing careers in health or medicine and to provide them with academic and social support. The intensive, five-week program for 30 incoming UCR freshmen occurs between the senior year of high school and the freshman year of college.

energy development.

The plan also provided 3.6 million acres for recreation, such as hiking, camping, rockhounding, and off-road vehicles, and more than 4.2 million acres of new National Conservation Lands, all of which support dozens of thriving local economies built on these activities.

As currently implemented, the Desert Renewable Energy Conservation Plan is designed to protect more than 22.5 million acres of Southern California’s landscape in the desert regions and adjacent lands of seven California counties including Riverside, San Bernardino, Imperial, Inyo, Kern, Los Angeles and San Diego.

The DRECP resulted from eight years of collaboration that involved state and federal agencies, renewable energy developers, conservationists, recreationalists, and other stakeholders. It was based on extensive scientific study and struck a clear balance between the interests of industry, conservationists, recreationists, government, and local residents.

The Trump Administration announced its proposed changes with a limited, 45-day window for public comment. And, although it held a series of eight public hearings, according to Ruiz, the Administration failed to give the public the opportunity to voice comments at any of them.

By contrast, on Saturday Ruiz hosted a community hearing in Palm Desert where he provided his constituents an opportunity to weight in on the Administration’s changes and he plans to pass those comments on to the Department of Interior. The California Democratic delegation’s letter can be viewed online at https://ruiz.house.gov/sites/ruiz.house.gov/files/38_CA_Dems_Oppose_Reopening_DRECP.pdf.
