COURAGE FOR A CHANGE

California's values aren't just a point of pride - they are the very fabric of our history, identity, and future. At a moment when Donald Trump's actions and policies are threatening and demonizing our people, the country is looking to California to prove that old fears and prejudices need not be the new normal. For his whole career, Gavin Newsom has had the courage to stand up and fight for what's right - and as Governor, he'll match that resistance with results for diverse communities across our state.

While Republicans Eat Their Own, Democrats Don't Show Up

"When you have a voice, you also have a moral obligation to use that voice for good."

- Leandra Medine

As demographic changes continue to shift the political power center in the inland region toward Democrats, some Republican candidates are repositioning themselves in hopes of retaining political relevance.

An example of this is the current fight for political survival under way in San Bernardino County between two Republican candidates who are competing to represent the county's Second District.

San Bernardino County's Second Supervisory District encompasses the cities of Upland, Rancho Cucamonga and most of Fontana. It also includes the unincorporated communities of Devore, Lytle Creek, San Antonio Heights, Mt. Baldy and the entire Rim of the World Mountain Communities from Cedar Pines Park to Green Valley Lake. It has a population of about 405,000 constituents.

Technically, supervisor positions in the county are considered non-partisan and party affiliations are not included on the official ballot. Historically, however, Republicans have held the lion's share of seats on the county's Board of Supervisors and at times, their policies have reflected this leaning.

Interestingly, Republicans are positioned to hold this seat for another cycle since the only candidates for Second District Supervisor on this year's ballot are both Republican. Yet, Democrats have a clear majority as it relates to the number of registered voters in the district, 39.1 percent of registered voters are Democrat, 32.4 percent are Republican, and just over 23 percent registered with no party affiliation. This certainly begs the question—How did local Democratic Party leaders allow this seat to go unchallenged?

In the meantime, two-term Second District Republican incumbent, Janice Rutherford, is being challenged by 40th District State Assemblyman, Mark Steinorth. Steinorth decided not to run for re-election to the State Assembly many believe, because he faced a formidable challenge from San Bernardino County Third District Supervisor, James Ramos.

Steinorth's decision not to run for the State Assembly was prudent. Ramos is a popular Democrat and the 40th Assembly District has turned Blue in recent years--40 percent of its registered voters identify as Democrats compared to 32.6 percent who are registered Republicans.

Now, with Steinorth challenging Rutherford, two Republicans, who both lay claim to traditional Republican social and fiscal conservative values, are locked in battle.

Steinorth obviously decided Rutherford was an easy target. Some voters may have turned away from Rutherford because she supported the merger of Upland's fire department with San Bernardino County Fire and supported the implementation of an annual fire fee on property owners in San Antonio Heights. However, Steinorth too has strayed from his staunch conservative principles and voted on issues of interest to Democrats during his tenure in Sacramento.

Both candidates also find themselves in the awkward position of loudly criticizing a candidate they previously endorsed. Rutherford twice endorsed Steinorth in his bid for the State Assembly and Steinorth supported Rutherford in her previous campaigns for Supervisor. It just goes to show that all is fair in love, war and "politics."

At this year's state convention and as required under Republican Party rules, Rutherford, as the incumbent, secured the endorsement of the San Bernardino County Republican Party while Steinorth on the other hand, received 50 percent of the votes casts by San Bernardino County Republican Central Committee members.

This year, voters in San Bernardino County's Second District must choose between two halves of the same whole for county supervisor—two socially and fiscally Conservative Republican candidates.

It appears the Republican party has positioned itself well in this contest, while the Democratic Party has remained in absentia. In the Age of Trump, it is hard to believe Democrats did not enter a viable candidate in this race.

This is just my opinion. I'm keeping it real.

“Antonio Villaraigosa understands that affordable housing gives more families the opportunity to reach for their dreams.”

– Former Assembly Speaker and
Los Angeles Council President
Herb Wesson, Jr.

Antonio Villaraigosa is the only candidate for governor with a proven record in increasing access to affordable housing. During his time as Mayor of Los Angeles, Villaraigosa invested more than $1 billion to build over 21,000 affordable homes and over 2,600 homes for people that had been homeless.

During the Great Recession, Villaraigosa enacted policies to rebuild the local economy and get people back to work. With homelessness at a high and the middle class struggling, California needs a Governor who is a proven leader and committed to our community.

Jennifer Brown to Head UCR's Office of Undergraduate Education

Riverside

On August 1, the University of California Riverside's Office of Undergraduate Education will welcome Jennifer Brown as Vice-Provost and Dean of Undergraduate Education.

Brown served as the Vice-Provost and Dean of the Graduate School at Oregon State University since 2016. She was also a professor of horticulture and Associate Dean of the Graduate School at Oregon State. As a veteran administrator, Brown brings to her new position a background in innovative teaching methods.

According to UCR Provost and Executive Vice Chancellor Cynthia K. Larive, Brown's experience is expected to help advance the mission of Undergraduate Education while at the same time, helping to solidify the school's reputation as a national model of a "student-centered research university."

Larive said, "Jennifer Brown has an enthusiasm for working with students and a collaborative management style that will make her effective as UCR's vice provost and dean of Undergraduate Education."

In further comments Brown Larive noted, "She shares UCR's commitment to providing equitable access to higher education and research opportunities, and to continuing to improve graduation rates for students from all backgrounds."

Brown told UCR Today she was drawn to UCR because of its national reputation for diversity and its participation in the 11-member University Innovation Alliance (UIA). UIA seeks to graduate more students of color, and students from low-income and first-generation families. Brown has an affinity for the work of the UIA program.

"Being a person of color, I've wanted to work with a diverse student population," Brown said. "I wanted to contribute and work with folks who are already making the difference in access."

Brown originally hails from Chicago, where as a teen she participated in Upward Bound, a federally funded program aimed at boosting college attendance for at-risk high school students. Brown received her Ph.D. in horticulture from Michigan State University in 2004.

Supreme Court Ruling Perceived as Setback for Workers

Washington D.C.

The recent U.S. Supreme Court ruling the trilogy of cases, Epic Systems Corp. v. Lewis, Ernst & Young, LLP v. Morris, and National Labor Relations Board v. Murphy Oil, USA has raised concerned for the rights of low income workers.

In these cases, the employers were accused of illegally withholding overtime pay or other compensation from their employees in what the employees claimed, was in violation of federal wage and hour laws.

After the suits were filed, the employers successfully enforced the arbitration mandates of their employment contracts which required each employee to pursue their cases separately.

The National Employment Lawyers Association (NELA) and other advocate groups who supported the workers right to ban together, included in their amicus brief allegations that the arbitration requirement included in several employment contracts today, actually work to deprive workers of what he groups defined as workers', "Core statutory right to be free from employer interference, restraint, and coercion when engaged in concerted activity for mutual aid or protection."

NELA claimed that forcing Individual arbitration was no substitute for collective action in an open, public judicial forum because unlike in courts of law, in a large part because arbitrators receive incentives, and as a result, are more likely to rule in favor of the employers and against the individual employee.

With the Supreme Court upholding the legality of mandatory arbitration clauses, many of which include class action waiver provisions, low income workers and others will no longer be able to ban together in pursuit of judicial relief. This is because such provisions allow employers to circumvent the courts and force workers into closed-door proceedings where the arbitration deck is always stacked against them.

In the wake of this Supreme Court decision, NELA and other employee advocates are forced to

San Bernardino Scores Big with National Association of Counties

San Bernardino - Programs that provided enhanced services to children and seniors, promoted civic engagement and encouraged literacy in San Bernardino County were among a number of groundbreaking initiatives initiated in San Bernardino County that were recently recognized and rewarded at the 2018 Achievement Awards hosted by the National Association of Counties (NACo).

"It is an honor to be recognized by NACo for the work our employees do to provide top-notch services and to help empower people who live and work in our communities," said Board of Supervisors Chairman Robert A. Lovingood in acknowledgement of the 42 awards bestowed on the county at this year's event.

Since 2010, San Bernardino County has received 284 NACo. NACo honors innovative and effective county government programs that enhance services for county residents.

Sleep: Catch More Z's

Getting the sleep you need shouldn't be left to chance. Healthy sleep habits can make a big difference in your quality of life. Having healthy sleep habits is often referred to as having good sleep hygiene. Try to keep the following sleep practices on a consistent basis:

- Wake up at the same time each day. It is tempting to sleep late on weekends, especially if one has had poor sleep during the week. However, if you suffer from insomnia you should get up at the same time every day in order to train your body to wake at a consistent time.
- Eliminate nicotine, caffeine, alcohol, and other stimulants. The effects of caffeine can last for several hours, perhaps up to 24 hours, so the chances of it affecting sleep are significant. Alcohol may have a sedative effect for the first few hours following consumption, but it can then lead to frequent arousals and a non-restful night's sleep.
- Exercise regularly. Regular exercise can improve sleep quality and duration. However, exercising immediately before bedtime can have a stimulant effect on the body and should be avoided.

Opioid Crisis Has Put More Women Than Ever Behind Bars

Riverside

Women represent the fastest growing prison population in America. Nationwide, the number of women incarcerated rose from just over 13,000 in 1980 to more than 102,000 in 2016.

There has been a 716 percent increase in the number of women incarcerated in the United States since 1980. According to the Sentencing Project, while the rate of arrests for drug possession or use doubled among men between 1980 and 2009, it tripled for women. The scourge of opioid abuse has only served to make the problem worse.

Data shows women in state prisons are more likely than men to be incarcerated for drug and property offenses. Twenty-five percent of female prisoners have been convicted of a drug offense, compared to 14 percent of male prisoners, while 27 percent of incarcerated women have been convicted of a property crime, compared to only 17 percent of men serving time.

Interestingly, the rate of African American women imprisoned has declined since 2000, while the rate of White and Hispanic women has continued to rise. For example, between 2000 and 2016, the number of Black women held in state and federal prisons declined by 53 percent while the number of White women imprisoned rose by 44 percent. These numbers are reflective of the impact the opioid crisis is having on rural White communities around the nation.

The rate of women in prison varies from state to state. Oklahoma holds the number one position in the nation with 149 females incarcerated per 100,000 women in the state. Rhode Island boasts the least number of women incarcerated per 100,00 with 13, while in 2016, California ranked in the bottom quartile with 30 incarcerated females per every 100,000 female residents in the state.

The profound increase in the number of incarcerated women nationally, is the result of what the Sentencing Project defined as, “. . . more expansive law enforcement efforts, stiffer drug sentencing laws, and post-conviction barriers to reentry that uniquely affect women.”

A woman's road to recovery and rehabilitation is usually more complicated than it is for men and as a result, can also be costlier. Too often their recovery from addiction is complicated because so many women have also experienced trauma or abuse as children and/or adults.

Proposition 68 - Drought, Water Quality

S.E. Williams
Contributor

California has consistently led the nation and the world with initiatives aimed at mitigating the impact of climate change and responding to environmental concerns.

This year, the state is once again leading on these issues with a ground-breaking initiative on the June ballot that is not only poised to make history in this state, it will chart a pathway to the future for other states to follow.

Proposition 68, officially titled the California Drought, Water, Parks, Climate, Coastal Protection, and Outdoor Access for All Act of 2018, and more commonly referred to as the Parks, Environment and Water Bond, will better position the state to meet environmental challenges presented by a changing climate.

The catastrophic cycles of drought, flooding and wildfires experienced in California and around the world have left communities scarred and served as devastating indicators of what lies ahead.

Proposition 68, authored by California State Senator Kevin de León (D-Los Angeles) and Assemblymember Eduardo Garcia (D-Coachella), promises to deliver on several environmental objectives including the expansion of access and infrastructure in state and local park systems as well as habitat restoration and clean water, while also generating much needed funds to invest in natural disaster protection projects.

When commenting on the public parks aspect of the measure on NPR last week, de León shared, “I grew up in a neighborhood in San Diego that was all asphalt, that was concrete and cement,” he said. “No green parks. No open space. No trees for shade. This is an intentional way of democratizing our benefits so that every child regardless of their zip code has access to Mother Nature.”

As co-author of Proposition 68, Assemblyman Garcia is also a fierce advocate for the mitigation and restoration of the Salton Sea. Nearly twenty-six thousand people live near the environmental hazard who are subjected to public health risks. A $200 million allocation is included in the measure to assist with the Salton Sea Management Plan.

Proposition 68 will help move the state from a position of being constantly reactive to climate impacts and enable it to further focus on the design and implementation of proactive measures to help alleviate future damage to communities up and down the state.

Senator Kevin de León (top) and Assemblymember Eduardo Garcia co-authors of Prop. 68

The measure has garnered support from an unusual group of organizations not normally aligned on many issues. In this case, however, organizations as wide-ranging as the California Chamber of Commerce on one end of the spectrum to the Sierra Club on the other, have coalesced in strong support of Proposition 68.

Governor Jerry Brown, gubernatorial candidates Gavin Newsom and Antonio Villaraigosa, U.S. Senator Dianne Feinstein and many other politicians, organizations and newspapers have all pledged overwhelming support for the measure.

“Prop 68 is an unprecedented investment in California’s under-resourced communities,” said Mary Creasman, The Trust for Public Land’s (TPL) California Director of Government Affairs. “From targeted funding to increase park access in low-income neighborhoods, to anti-displacement measures and job opportunities for under-served youth, Prop 68 is a landmark opportunity to invest in a more equitable and sustainable California.”

Riverside was included in TPL’s analysis of the nation’s 100 largest cities. It used mapping technology and demographic data to determine how each city is meeting the need for parks. The report showed only 12 percent of the city’s residents live within a ten-minute walk to a park and for low income areas in the city, numbers may be worse. Proposition 68 will generate $4.1 billion dollars in general obligation bonds while guaranteeing the state’s poorest communities are included in the allocation. Such communities, like many in the state’s inland region, are historically overlooked in this regard.

As a safeguard to assure inclusion of low-income communities in this process, the proposition requires at least 20 percent of the funds generated through bond sales be allocated to projects in communities where parks are scarce and where the median household income is less than 60 percent of the statewide average. This will insure the provision of $1.283 billion for neighborhood parks in the areas, plus city and county park facilities.

Hemet resident Barbara Beckford said she was still undecided regarding how she will vote on Proposition 68, but liked parts of the measure focused on clean water.

When asked about the value of building more parks Beckford responded,

y, Parks and the Environment

“We’re lucky. We have a park close to our house—it’s right down the street. My sons take the kids there all the time. I guess it is something I take for granted now.”

Beckford acknowledged however, she and her family have not always lived in communities with such easy access to parks and said she believes being able to run and play in a park near your home is something every child should be able to do.

She also shared her reservations about building parks in some low-income communities out of an abundance of concern for safety. “I think recognizing how important it is to evaluate the criminal aspect that may exist in some areas before a decision is made to build a park is something that should be considered,” she stressed.

“Of course, if you live in an area where there is a lot of crime you would have to evaluate that, because why would you want to jeopardize your children as well as yourself?” she questioned rhetorically.

“On the other hand,” Beckford continued. “If you know the area is safe and the environment is nice; if you and the community have done your research regarding the area to ensure that is a safe space; and, you can trust your city and local officials to allocate the funding properly—then I would say ‘yes’ on Proposition 68.” The measure includes provisions focused on community engagement in this regard.

Beckford stated her comments about trust were in relation to a history of corruption allegations that have continued to tarnish the reputations of city officials in communities across the inland region, in addition to purported corruption concerns involving the Hemet Police Department.

From coastal communities to the high desert and from inland cities to mountain regions, Proposition 68 addresses environmental considerations up and down the state.

Not surprisingly, anti-tax organizations like the Howard Jarvis Tax Association (HJTA) and the Central Coast Taxpayers Association oppose Proposition 68. “HJTA isn’t opposed to all bonds,” the organization noted on its website, “but we think projects funded with bond dollars should last at least as long as the debt obligation, typically 40 years. Otherwise your kids will spend their lives paying off the debt for something that is long gone.”

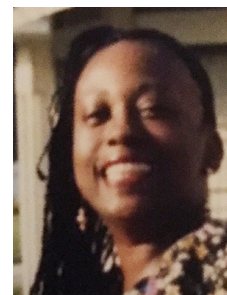

The Legislative Analyst’s Office (LAO) estimated the bonds associated with this initiative will be repaid at a rate of $200 million per year over a period of 40 years. Although some bonds are repaid in 30 years, the 40-year repayment period is not an aberration.

Despite the fiscal considerations, supporters of the legislation like Sandra Davis, a longtime resident of Riverside County, said she does not see the costs or the 40-year repayment period as a deterrent to voting “yes” on the measure. “Parks appropriately maintained can last for generations”

“Parks appropriately maintained can last for generations...as can homes that are not washed away or destroyed by wildfires and floods.”

she insisted adding, “as can homes that are not washed away or destroyed by wildfires and floods.”

“My closest park is at least a ½ hour walk for me” Davis shared. I wish it was closer because I would rather walk in a park than on the street. Because I’m older, a ½ hour walk to the park and a ½ walk back home is a lot for me sometimes. But, I don’t complain because I know there are a lot of people who don’t have any parks near them.”

The LAO also reported that the infrastructure investments will likely save communities tens of millions of dollars each year. “On balance, we estimate that this proposition would result in savings to local governments to complete the projects funded by this bond.”

Despite some opposition and considering LAO estimates, most find it difficult to argue against the need to clean up the state’s drinking water supply or improve the quality of water in the state’s streams and rivers or question the value of making necessary levee repairs to reduce future flood damage. The proposition will allocate $1.27 billion for drinking water treatment, groundwater clean-up and flood protection.

As mentioned above, Proposition 68 will also support the much needed and long overdue remediation of the Salton Sea and includes a total of $1.547 billion for such conservation projects and climate change preparedness efforts statewide.

Whether you are an advocate of community parks, concerned about clean drinking water, support forest restoration efforts or reside in the wildland interface and understand the impact wildfires can have on your property and/or the state’s watershed, Proposition 68 has merged these environmental concerns into what advocates and supporters claim is one of the most important propositions warranting your attention on this year’s ballot.

PROUD ENDORSEMENT

If We Don't Shake Up Education Who Will?

Since day one, African Americans have led the fight for quality education for all. We have made a difference for all Americans. African Americans and people of color cannot afford to leave another generation behind.

"I support Marshall Tuck for Superintendent of Public Instruction because as a legislator I saw firsthand how the school system often fails our students of color, especially African-American students. He understands the need for true reform of our schools so that all our students have an opportunity to succeed and thrive."

Wells Fargo launches $60 billion plan to increase African American homeownership

After years of moving and renting, novelist Randy Camp, recently became a first-time homebuyer at age 55.

"It feels good," said Camp, a resident advisor at a youth services agency in Des Moines, Iowa. "There's this idea of 'this place is yours, so now make sure you take care of it and enjoy it.' I also did it for my children. As I get older, I realize the importance of leaving an asset for them."

In an effort to make homeownership dreams a reality for others like Camp, Wells Fargo has launched a 10-year diversity initiative to provide $60 billion in home loans, supporting at least 250,000 African American homeowners by 2027. As part of the plan, the company also intends to significantly increase the diversity of its mortgage sales force.

Working with the National Urban League and the National Association of Real Estate Brokers, Wells Fargo announced the initiative Feb. 28 at the National Center for Civil and Human Rights in Atlanta.

The company aims to help reverse the decreasing homeownership rate in the African American community, said Brad Blackwell, head of housing policy and homeownership growth strategies for Wells Fargo.

Blackwell added that the company also plans to invest $15 million in a wide range of initiatives that promote financial education and counseling for African American homebuyers over the next 10 years. The company will also boost its recruiting, hiring, and retention of African American home mortgage officers, he said.

Year of transformation at Wells Fargo

In a letter published in the 2017 Wells Fargo Annual Report, CEO Tim Sloan had this to say about the past year:

"This was a year of transformation at Wells Fargo. We achieved a great deal in 2017 and look forward to building on our momentum in the months ahead. Our top priority remains rebuilding the trust of our customers, team members, communities, regulators, and shareholders. We have made foundational changes to identify and fix problems so they do not happen again and achieved significant progress in our commitment to make things right for our customers and build a better bank. Our transformation is grounded in our vision of satisfying our customers' financial needs and helping them succeed financially. While we have more work to do, I assure you that the Operating Committee and I are fully committed to building on our accomplishments. In addition, we take very seriously the consent order we entered into with the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System in February 2018, and we will work diligently, yet swiftly, to meet the requirements.

In response to feedback from our team, we introduced a streamlined Vision, Values & Goals of Wells Fargo in late 2017 — replacing what previously was a 37-page expression of our culture. Today the wallet-sized booklet focuses exclusively on our guiding principles and goals, clearly expressing the beliefs that guide every team member as we work together to build the best Wells Fargo possible.

We have overcome challenges many times during our history. We have a solid foundation, exceptional businesses, and an outstanding team. Our more than 260,000 team members are dedicated, talented, and committed — and, without a doubt, they are our most important resource. Thank you for placing your trust in Wells Fargo and for your support. Our commitment to you is unwavering as we continue our transformation into a better, stronger company.

Celebrating the History of Leer Larkins and Nosotros

Laura L. Klure
Contributor

Interested people are invited to an event featuring the art of Leer Larkins being displayed at the Riverside Community Arts Association gallery on Sunday, June 17, from 1-4 p.m.

Born in British Guyana, Larkins who settled in Riverside in 1963, received his training as an artist from the Society of Arts and Crafts in Detroit, Michigan. He created a number of very interesting art works and used a variation of media in his creations including wood, ceramics, tempera, and watercolors.

According to reports, Larkins breath of experience in the arts included his service as a U.S. Army photographer and researcher during World War II and his work as a stage set designer for an experimental theater in New York.

Larkins is remembered for operating a gallery that offered beneficial social programs called Nosotros. The programs began in the 1960s and continued through the 1980s.

The Nosotros Gallery offered workshops and other activities that benefitted residents of Riverside, particularly those who resided in the African-American and Hispanic neighborhoods sometimes called the East Side. The gallery occupied several different East Side locations, including one next door to an early site of the Zacatecas restaurant.

Some of the Nosotros programs were focused on students. Through a variety of educational projects, Larkins encouraged them to stay in school and do well. Many Nosotros volunteers taught and assisted the students.

Larkins died in 1992. Some of his descendants will be attending the June 17th afternoon event at the RCAA Gallery, 3860 Lemon Street. There is no charge to attend this one-day event. People who volunteered with Nosotros or participated in the group's programs are particularly encouraged to attend.

NEWS IN BRIEF

U.S. House of Representatives Passed "right to try" drug legislation

Washington, D.C. – Over the safety concerns voiced by Democrats, the U.S. House of Representatives recently pushed through controversial health-related legislation backed by President Trump. The bill will allow terminally ill patients access to drugs still awaiting FDA approval. The legislation gives such patients authority to bypass the agency and request drugs pending FDA approval directly from manufactures—the medication, however, must, at the very least, have at least gone through a small-scale clinical trial and is still under FDA consideration.

The legislation not only faced strong opposition from Democrats, at least 75 patient advocacy groups opposed it as well, however, it enjoys strong from the president and his monied supporters. The measure moved to the president's desk for final approval.

look to congress to protect the millions of low-wage workers who will feel the brunt of this decision. This is because most low-income workers do not have the financial means to hire their own lawyers to fight on their behalf.

In the dissenting opinion, Supreme Court Justice Ruth Bader Ginsburg said the majority opinion in this case was egregious and wrong.

Villaraigosa is “fighting to make this country more equal and just. And he is a shining example of what we can achieve when we build a government that reflects the diversity of the United States of America.” —BARACK OBAMA, 2008

ANTONIO VILLARAIGOSA FOR GOVERNOR

Giving Voice to Every Californian

DEMOCRAT ANTONIO VILLARAIGOSA

is running for Governor of California to create the economic opportunity and equality we need to keep the California Dream alive. He knows far too many Californians are working harder than ever before, but they are still falling behind.

That’s why Villaraigosa will fight to expand and strengthen the middle class by investing in our children and improving their schools, rebuilding our infrastructure, opening up affordable higher education and job training to millions more Californians and creating housing middle-class families can afford.

Villaraigosa knows to achieve the California Dream, we need a state that is growing together and lifts more people into the middle class.
