The Winds of Recall and Repeal

"When you have a voice, you also have a moral obligation to use that voice for good."

- Leandra Medine

Since April 2017 when Governor Jerry Brown signed the controversial Road Repair and Accountability Act (SB1) into law those opposed to the gasoline tax increase have called for its repeal.

Even though proceeds from the increased taxes support long overdue and much needed infrastructure repairs, push-back against the increase reached a boiling point again last November, when the measure took effect and motorists began paying the higher gasoline and diesel taxes.

Late last month, those leading a multi-million-dollar effort to repeal SB1 submitted enough voter signatures to qualify the repeal measure for the November ballot. Those signatures are in the process of being validated by voting officials in counties up and down the state. In the meantime, the recent primary provided a sneak preview of the battle to come over whether voters in the state, if given a choice, will elect to repeal or retain SB1.

Last week, one state senator paid a high price for his 2017 legislative support of SB1. California's Senate District 29 includes portions of San Bernardino, Los Angeles County and Orange County. The traditionally Republican seat was won by Democrat Josh Newman in an open race in 2016, when the district's previous senator was termed-out.

A recall effort was quickly launched against Newman last year after he supported SB1. Not surprisingly, more than 59 percent of the voters in Senate District 29 voted in favor of Newman's recall last week. He will be replaced by Republican Ling Ling Chang who was his top challenger in 2016.

Newman's loss had political consequences beyond the 29th Senate District as it also meant the Democratic Party did not regain its super-majority.

There was a well-funded-take-no-prisoners-recall-campaign launched against Newman. If his recall was any indication of the political winds aligning against SB1 (provided the initiative to repeal it makes the November ballot), it is more obvious than ever that those who support SB1 must do a better job of convincing voters of its value.

This is just my opinion. I am keeping it real.

You Can Learn to Recognize and Assist in a Mental Health Crisis

San Bernardino – The county's Department of Behavioral Health is working in partnership with faith-based organizations and other community groups to teach interested individuals how to identify, understand and respond to signs of mental illnesses and substance use disorders.

The free, eight-hour training helps participants build the skills needed to reach out with initial help and support to someone who may be developing a mental health or substance use problem or who may be experiencing a personal crisis. # Settlement Reached Over Nestlé's Long Expired Water Permit

San Bernardino

After more than two and a half years, the Center for Biological Diversity (CBD) announced last week that an agreement was reached in the lawsuit Center for Biological Diversity, et al. v. U.S. Forest Services, et al., No. 16-56717.

The CBD sued the agency with the support of two other environmental groups, the Story of Stuff Project and the Courage Campaign Institute.

The suit sought was brought against the U.S. Forest Service (USFS) for it having allowed Nestlé Corporation to take water from the San Bernardino National Forest's Strawberry Creek even though its license to do so, expired more than 30 years ago.

According to details of the settlement provided by CBD, the USFS now has only 30 days to decide whether to issue a new permit for the Strawberry Creek water pipeline and Nestlé's related operations in the national forest. CBD, the Courage Campaign Institute and the Story of Stuff Project agreed as part of the settlement to dismiss an appeal to the 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals about the old permit after a new decision is issued. However, if the groups disagree with the USFS decision regarding the permit, the groups retain their right to challenge it.

Under its expired permit, Nestlé had retained its authority to siphon up to 162 million gallons of water per year from San Bernardino's Strawberry Creek. The groups involved in the lawsuit and their supporters want the Forest Service to deny Nestlé Corporation a new permit and protect Strawberry Creek.

Last year, a report by the U.S. Geological Survey showed that even though the state experienced heavy winter precipitation last year, flow levels at Strawberry Creek were the lowest since the agency began tracking this information almost 100 years ago.

SB1 Repeal Edges Closer to November Ballot

Sacramento

Advocates for the repeal of SB1, the Road Repair and Accountability Act of 2017 or the Gas Tax as it is popularly identified, recently edged closer to the November ballot when advocates turned in more than 940,000 raw signatures in their effort to secure the 585,407 valid voter signatures needed to qualify the repeal initiative for the November ballot.

Each county is now in the process of conducting a random sampling of signatures to verify that a sufficient number of them are valid. The deadline for completion of the random sampling count is June 25th.

If the random sampling verification results yield validation rate that is less than 95 percent, then the initiative would fail to qualify for the ballot.

If the sampling finds between 95 to 110 percent of the required number of signatures are valid, the Secretary of State will require counties to verify every signature—this is known as a “full check.”

If however, more than 110 percent of the required signatures are validated, then the initiative will qualify for the ballot without the full check requirement.

Beyond these hurdles, for the repeal to appear on the November ballot when a “full check” is required, the signature verifications must be completed at least 131 days prior to next general election. For the SB 1 repeal to make the November ballot, the 131-day deadline to complete the “full check” (if required), is June 28. If the Secretary of State determines a “full check” is necessary, the time needed to verify each signature may push the SB 1 repeal initiative to the November 2020 ballot instead.

Although SB1 remains controversial here in California, it does not appear to be an issue that splits along political lines nationally. Reports show at least 26 other states have passed similar legislation to increase fuel taxes, etc. to raise money for much needed infrastructure repairs—including in many states led by Republicans.

Bourdain, Spade Suicides Two in a Growing Public Health Tragedy

At what point does the nation’s raising suicide rate become a public health crisis? The tragic suicide deaths of chef, author, and TV host Anthony Bourdain and fashion designer Kate Spade last week are stories of lives cut short for reasons we’ll never fully understand. But these anecdotes are also a reminder of a serious public health issue in America that needs far more attention.

According to data from the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, released on June 7, suicide rates have increased significantly across the US. Between 1999 and 2016, suicide rates rose in nearly every state in the union, with 25 states showing increases of more than 30 percent.

The central and northern parts of the US —

North Dakota, Wyoming, Montana, Minnesota — saw some of the greatest rises in suicide rates. In 2016, nearly 45,000 Americans died by suicide — making it the 10th most common cause of death in the US, and one of only three leading causes that are increasing, according to the CDC.

Learn what suicide is, who it affects, what we know about it and what can be done to prevent it online at Talk Saves LivesTM: A suicide prevention community-based presentation that covers the general scope of suicide, signs, warnings, the research on prevention, and what people can do to fight suicide.

Pain isn’t always obvious. One of the most disturbing aspects of the report: More than half of the people who died by suicide had no known mental health problems. Instead, the CDC said, “Relationship, substance use, health, and job or financial problems are among the other circumstances contributing to suicide.” Also disturbing: 48 percent of the suicides occurred by firearms — another reminder that while the homicides in America’s gun crisis get a lot of public attention, suicides by gun are far more common.

“At what point is it a crisis?” Nadine Kaslow, a past president of the American Psychological Association, asked the Washington Post. “Suicide is a public health crisis when you look at the numbers, and they keep going up. It’s up everywhere. And we know that the rates are actually higher than what’s reported. But homicides still get more attention.”

A Focus on Community Health by The Center for Healthy Communities at UCR

Men, Can We Talk?

Abigail Largaespada

Contributor

The average lifespan is about five years longer for women than men in the U.S., which may stem from men not being as proactive about their health.

Since June is Men's Health Month, we decided to celebrate it by going out into the community to see how men feel about their health. Our purpose is to bring awareness to preventable men's health issues and encourage men to seek preventative care and early treatment if disease or injury occur.

The Centers for Disease Control (CDC) reported that adults need at least seven hours of sleep each night, which many of the men we spoke with say is not feasible due to their hectic schedules. Angel De La Cruz, a 21-year-old resident of San Bernardino, admitted that he regularly skimps on sleep. He stated, "I'm a night owl. I usually stay up until 5 a.m. and I'll be lucky if I get five hours of sleep each day."

Although it is tempting to trade sleep for the "to-do's" on our lists, this can have a negative impact on health. In a recent UCR Health article,

Dr. Luanne Carlson explained, "too little sleep can increase your risk of obesity, high blood pressure, and diabetes. It can also wreak havoc on your mental health and put you at increased risk of stroke or even premature death."

One of the main components of maintaining a healthy lifestyle is eating healthy. Reflecting on his health, Angel stated, "Although I exercise regularly, I know I am not healthy because I eat a lot of junk food. Many days I have this mentality that I'm young and it won't affect me now."

Although younger men have faster metabolisms, it is just as important to have a well-balanced diet of dairy, protein, complex carbohydrates, and fruits and vegetables.

A 55-year-old resident of Riverside who did not wish to be identified, also mentioned his poor eating habits. "I eat a lot of junk food and microwavable foods because it is easy, and I don't know how to cook."

Although these types of food are readily accessible, they have high levels of salt and fat, which can wreak havoc on your body. As Dr.

Anthony Molin, 18 years-old and 60-year-old, Kevin Curtis

Carlson illustrated, "healthy eating can help you avoid weight gain in your belly, where more men than women tend to carry their extra pounds."

Chamber Honors Child Abduction Unit

San Bernardino

The San Bernardino Area Chamber of Commerce recently honored the District Attorney's Child Abduction Unit (CAU) at its annual Law Enforcement Recognition Dinner.

Members of the CAU honored by the Chamber included Deputy DA Kurt Rowley, DA Investigators Karen Cragg and Paul DeJong, Investigative Technician Michelle Faxon, and Secretary JoAnne Smith.

According to data provided by the District Attorney's Office during 2017 and 2018, the team aided in the recovery and return of one hundred and twenty (120) abducted children to their custodial parent.

"These numbers represent hearts brought together, and children reunited with their custodial parents," said San Bernardino District Attorney Mike Ramos. He added, "Never seeking attention, this unit is a tireless and tenacious team of law enforcement professionals."

Among the notable cases highlighted by Ramos was a case that involved the recovery of a two-year old girl who was abducted by her father and

DA Warns of Dangers of Illicit and Misbranded Drugs

Riverside

District Attorney Michael Hestrin held a press conference on Tuesday to warn consumers who buy medications either online or from stores and homes that are not licensed pharmacies, about the dangers associated with purchasing drugs. He warned the medications might not work as they should or they may contain ingredients that have dangerous—and sometimes even deadly—side effects.

Hestrin discussed how the DA's Bureau of Investigation recently raided five locations in Riverside County. They included two businesses in Corona, one business in Moreno Valley, and a business and a residence in the city of Riverside. During the raids, officials seized a total of nearly 9,700 dosages of various drugs and filed criminal cases against seven people.

Charges included dispensing dangerous drugs, selling misbranded drugs and selling pharmaceuticals near where meats were being sold. In one instance, a business owner was charged with dispensing a dangerous drug and selling a misbranded drug, as well as a felony for practicing medicine without a license for reportedly injecting customers. In another instance, DA investigators arrested a woman and charged her with dispensing a dangerous drug and selling a misbranded drug as well as child endangerment because there were two young children in the home.

The investigation was conducted in partnership with Investigative Consultants and the California Department of Health, Food and Drug Branch. According to Hestrin, the DA's office does not yet know whether anyone has been harmed from using any of the illicit pharmaceuticals that were sold at any of these locations.

In the next few weeks, the DA plans to provide information regarding how it hopes to educate the public and business owners about illicit and misbranded pharmaceuticals. One way will be through two educational trainings for business owners and swap meet vendors. The sessions, one in Riverside and the other in the Coachella Valley, will be held sometime in late July. For additional information visit the DA's Office.

OLDER ADULTS - Finding the Will to Live

S.E. Williams
Contributor

Suicide is one of life's final common denominators and it does not discriminate. People in every demographic category are impacted by this tragedy be they rich, poor, young, old, gay, straight, college educated or a high school dropout. Suicide impacts individuals of every race and every religion, everywhere. Sadly, in recent years, Americans are taking their own lives in record numbers.

The Centers for Disease Control (CDC) defines suicide as "death caused by self-directed injurious behavior with an intent to die as a result of the behavior." The agency has also recorded suicide as the tenth leading cause of death in the United States.

Since at least 2013, and once again this year, California has trended above the national average in the number of suicides experienced among adults aged 65 and older. California ranks 26th in the nation regarding the number of suicides among older adults, with 17.2 suicides per 100,000 seniors compared to the national average of 16.6 suicides among adults aged 65 and older. Although adults beyond the age of 65 experience high rates of suicide, those over the age of 85, take their own lives at an even higher rate.

Seniors represent only 13 percent of the nation's population and the high suicide rate among them is not only cause for alarm among those who love them, but among health care professionals as well.

Depression is a key driver among those who commit suicide and according to the National Institute of Health, physical illness, that becomes more common with age, can increase the risk of developing depression and depression can lead to suicide.

According to the to the World Health Organization, "suicide rates tend to rise as a function of age for both men and women to a peak in old, old age."

The National Institute of Health has noted that depression is not a natural part of aging and the rates of depression among older adults does vary based on the population screened. In three separate reports, the rate of depression ranged from 6 percent to 9 percent among primary care patients, to higher rates among those who receive homecare services and home-delivered meals—the rates of depression in these groups ranged from 13 percent to 15 percent. The highest rate of depression, 34 percent, was found among seniors who were abused.

For years, depression has been well documented as a predictor of suicide, yet it is still not recognized and treated consistently by health care professionals. One expert on aging and mental health, Dr. Jo Anne Sirey, noted last year that in older adults, depression is not well detected because its mistaken as a natural part of aging. It is not.

The CDC has identified common risk factors that can help individuals identify and seek help for themselves and those they love. Those risk factors include a family history of suicide or child maltreatment, previous suicide attempts, a history of alcohol or substance abuse, a history of mental disorders, feelings of isolation and/or hopelessness, loss (including personal, social, work, or financial) and an unwillingness to consider mental health treatment.

Psychiatric experts have also reported on other factors that contribute to feelings of depression and suicide among older adults. They include the loss of one's ability to function independently, feelings of isolation and/or the fear of becoming a burden to others.

California and the nation must do more to assist seniors suffering from depression—just as attention is paid to their physical well-being, the nation must get re-focused on their mental health as well.

In September, the Huffington Post reported two facts that should help drive attention to this issue. First, although 18 to 25 percent of elderly people need some type of mental health care service—data indicates only three percent of all Medicare reimbursements are for psychiatric treatment. Secondly, seniors make up only six percent of community mental health services, yet they account for 15 percent of the population.

Currently, California legislators are considering an amendment to Proposition 63, the Mental Health Services Act (MHSA) approved by California voters in November 2004, which provides funding for mental health services. The proposed amendment, SB 1004, is shifting the legislation's focus toward the state's youth because research has shown 75 percent of mental illness begins by age 14. New language in the measure is focused on the Adverse Childhood Experiences Study and its highlight on the relationship between early trauma adverse experiences and lifelong problems in mental health.

The California Commission on Aging (CCoA) has offered other language to SB 1004 and stressed the importance of making the amendment work for everyone, including the elderly. You can track the progress of SB 1004 and leave comments for the legislation's author at this link: https://leginfo.legislature.ca.gov/faces/billStatusClient.xhtml?bill\_id=201720180SB1004.

California's seniors are committing suicide at a rate higher than the national average. This may be partly because they do not get the help they need. The National Suicide Prevention Lifeline provides support 24 hours a day, seven days a week and can connect callers with a local crisis center. If you or someone you know needs assistance, help is available online at <https://suicidepreventionlifeline.org/> or by calling (800) 273-8255. Unfortunately, only a small percentage of older adults ever call the National Suicide Prevention Lifeline.

Rockhounding in Mojave Trails National Monument

Timothy Summers
Contributor

One of the lesser-known pursuits on public lands in California is “rockhounding,” which is the collection and recreational study of rocks and mineral specimens collected from their natural environment by rockhounds - amateur geologists and rock enthusiasts.

Southern California, with great access to nearby public lands, is a great place for a rockhound like me to live.

For example, there are incredible rockhounding opportunities in the Mojave Trails National Monument, a stunning mosaic of rugged mountain ranges, ancient lava flows, and spectacular sand dunes. Members of clubs like the Orange Belt Mineralogical Society (OBMS), which I belong to, hunt there for rocks which we use to develop our lapidary skills and fabricate jewelry and rock artifacts.

For rockhounds in our club, two of the most visited sites within Mojave Trails are the Cady Mountains, east of Barstow, and the Marble Mountain Fossil Bed, near Amboy. These areas are home to magnificent chalcedony and rhombohedra calcite crystals and copper ores like malachite, cuprite and bornite, and even the elusive lace agate. Our members have participated in organized hunts for rocks in San Bernardino’s desert public lands since OBMS’s establishment in 1933. Continued access to these sites are imperative.

The designation of Mojave Trails National Monument in 2016 help protect public lands for all users from new industrial development like waste dumps and renewable energy. While some national monuments have banned rockhounding or cut off access to rockhounding areas, this activity at Mojave Trails is still allowed while the Bureau of Land Management develops the monument’s management plan.

Although there are incredible rockhounding opportunities in Mojave Trails now, threats from Congress, such as the misleadingly-named National Monument Creation and Protection Act (HR 3990), could undermine the monument’s future for public lands users. HR 3990 would block establishment of many new national monuments and parks by gutting the Antiquities Act of 1906 and it would make it easier to roll back protections for existing monuments and parks.

With the Department of Interior’s unpopular large-scale review of our country’s national monuments begun last year, we are glad that the boundaries of the California desert monuments thus far have survived the review intact. That is a positive reflection on the strong support expressed for our monuments by San Bernardino County residents and by the vast majority of millions of people who submitted comments to the Department of Interior saying that they should leave our monuments alone or expand them.

However, we need to remain vigilant regarding our national monuments. With June 8 being the 112th anniversary of the Antiquities Act, we ask that all San Bernardino County Supervisors support the current monument boundaries and oppose any changes.

For further information on rockhounding, please contact the Orange Belt Mineralogical Society at (909) 381-0089. There are professional educators in our group who are happy to share Earth Science knowledge with anyone who is interested in learning more about our rich desert public lands.

Moments Matter for Fathers, Too

By Shawndi Johnson from Dads Matter

The need to provide financially for a new family is the biggest roadblock when encouraging low-income or underserved fathers to take paternity leave after the birth or adoption of a child. I experienced that when I had my first child. I wanted to take time off to be with him but I hadn't quite figured out our finances ahead of time. That didn't mean I wasn't there for him, but I was not in a financial position to take time off work and school during that first year with our son.

As fathers, the stereotype that many of us have to live up to is that of the provider. Not even Father's Day provides a respite from that responsibility. As the program manager of Children's Bureau's Dads Matter in Orange County, I work with fathers and fathers-to-be on what responsible fatherhood looks like and how to plan ahead to fulfill and sustain the parenting role they envision for themselves.

We are fortunate here in California because fathers have access to California's Paid Family Leave (PFL) program, which offers the highest wage replacement rate in the country. As of 2018, California PFL offers eligible Californians up to 70 percent of their pay during leave – an increase from the 55 percent the program previously offered.

For me, being a father had always been what I looked forward to in my adult life. When I was in high school and people asked what I wanted to be when I grew up, I always said "I want to be a father, I want to have a family." Even with the knowledge that fatherhood was on the horizon, I didn't know what was required of me and my family in planning for our second child, a daughter, and for parental leave to be with her.

Through working at Dads Matter, I have learned how important it is for dads to be involved with their kids from the beginning. When a father is present at the beginning of their child's life, his rate of long-term involvement with that child increases. Moreover, the beginning of a child's life through their second birthday involves more learning than any other period in a person's life – and having a father present during this crucial developmental time is pivotal to a child's potential for future developmental success.

That being said, a lack of basic financial literacy plagues underserved communities, along with extreme financial stress. Given the pressure men face to provide financially for a family, Children's Bureau's mission, which is to protect vulnerable children through prevention, treatment and advocacy, includes having healthy discussions about what it means to be an involved father and the financial responsibilities associated with it.

One of the aspects of California PFL that makes it more accessible for a wide-range of Californians is that the 6-weeks of benefits offered can be split up over a 12-month period. This is especially helpful for fathers who can only take a couple of weeks off from work at a time, or who find it useful to switch off taking care of a newborn with their spouse or family member.

Further, it is important to know PFL is not a government assistance program. The program's benefits are paid for by California employees themselves through mandatory paycheck deductions that go into the State Disability Insurance program (noted as "CASDI" on paystubs), which means this is money fathers should take– because when it comes down to it, it is their money already.

Having children is the hardest job you will ever love, and it's important to start thinking about your paid leave options ahead of time. I have learned more about myself through raising my kids than anything else I have ever done and I believe there is no substitute for time spent with them. I encourage every father to explore ways in which the PFL program can work for them -- their future, their child's future, and the future of our communities.

In conjunction with eating healthy, it is also important to stay active. Dr. Carlson suggested, “[to] work your way up to 30 minutes of moderate-intensity exercise a day, five days a week.”

Kevin Curtis, a 60-year-old resident of Victorville, attributed his good health to not only eating right, but exercising regularly. “I believe I’m in very good health. I walk for an hour [during my lunch break] five days a week. This is how I lost over 100 pounds and have been able to keep it off.”

Walking on your lunch break is a great solution if you’re tight on time, or you can try breaking your activity into 10-minute increments. Just remember, always consult with your physician before beginning any exercise program.

Lastly, although dreaded by some, Dr. Carlson explained how important it is to visit your physician regularly, as he or she can help you manage any current health issues and help prevent new ones from occurring.

After interviewing several men of different ages, a common theme was their lack of visits to their primary care physicians. All six of the men interviewed, reported that they would not visit their physician if they were in pain. “I just take pain medications” stated a 22-year-old resident of Loma Linda. The Riverside resident asserted, “I wait until I am at a pain level of 10 out of 10 before I see the doctor.”

These responses are concerning, as going to the doctor can help prevent diseases or result in early detection. Kevin Curtis also had a skewed view of his physician. “She wants me to go see her every six weeks because according to her, I’m a diabetic. I only go about once a year because it is time consuming. They don’t work around your schedule. I have to take time off of work just to visit her.”

Based on the interviews, there are issues that men and their Providers can and should work to improve. At your next appointment commit to:

- Open and honest communication to foster a meaningful discussion
- Listen closely and check for understanding when speaking to ensure concerns and medical advice are being heard
- Flexibility in scheduling and attending appointments

Taking these simple steps will build trust, which in turn will support adherence to recommended treatments.

Men, you are worth the investment, celebrate this month by implementing or maintaining healthier habits, as it is never too late to be a healthier version of you. Get enough sleep, make improved food choices, try to exercise a few times a week, and make an appointment to see your physician.

If you have any questions or feedback, please feel free to email The Center for Healthy Communities at chc@medsch.ucr.edu.

Ballot Status

Sacramento - The 2002 Help America Vote Act (HAVA) made it very clear that every voter who casts a provisional ballot must be able to find out from local election officials whether or not his/her ballot was counted and if not, why was the ballot not counted. The California Elections Code provides a similar guarantee to voters who cast a vote-by-mail ballot.

To check the status of your mail in or provisional ballot in Riverside County visit the Riverside County Registrar of Voters at <https://voteinfo.net/>. Residents of San Bernardino County can check their mail-in or provisional ballot status online at the San Bernardino Office of the Registrar of Voters at <http://www.sbcountyelections.com/>.

his new wife. They were eventually located in a camping area in the Clearwater National Forest while fleeing to Canada.

In another high-profile case, 22-year-old Steve Hernandez was reunited with his mother. Steve was abducted when he was only 18-months-old. He was taken from his mother in the United States to Puebla Mexico. In planning the abduction, the boy’s father removed all photographs of the child and documents before fleeing. This case was made through extensive coordination with the Department of Justice and Mexican officials.

Exhaustive investigative follow-up, which included developing a ruse to collect a DNA sample, ultimately confirmed to investigators that the child abducted 20 years ago was in fact, the child of the San Bernardino County mother. In cases of international child abduction, the CAU follows the terms of the Hague Convention, an international treaty signed by more than 60 countries. In regard to children who are abducted and carried across state lines, the CAU partners with courts and law enforcement throughout the United States on an ongoing basis to recover them.
