Transformational Leadership: Listening To Cesar Chavez's Son

On Sunday I attended my brother's graduation from Claremont Lincoln University, a relatively new accredited graduate school founded with a mission to develop compassionate leaders in the areas of ethical leadership, interfaith action, and social impact.

Hardy – along with Joseph Williams and Leslie Fountain, a few other graduates I know well – earned a Master of Arts degree in Social Impact. His thesis, “Teachers Transforming their Knowledge of the Underground Railroad into Lessons of Empathy and Citizenship,” is based on his work with the hundreds of educators who have participated in our Footsteps to Freedom Study Tours over the past two decades.

From empathy training and peer-led mindfulness training for parents of children with special needs to media for social impact and defining quality care for people with developmental disabilities, I was impressed with thesis topics illustrating the school's vision to engage in positive social change. With the rise of American authoritarianism and political narcissism, it was refreshing to see a group of emerging thought leaders and change agents dedicated to the concept of transformational leadership. And it was enlightening to hear commencement speaker Paul Chavez share his own story of leadership through transformation.

Paul, the son of labor leader and civil rights activist Cesar Chavez, whose 90th birthday we celebrate on March 31st, urged the graduates and the audience to remain open and flexible to transformational opportunities. He used his own life as an example. “I started off as a printer in the marketing division, that, I thought was my life's work,” he said beginning what would become a litany of positions he thought were his destiny. He moved from printer to union organizer, from organizer to contract negotiator, from negotiator to political director and lobbyist, and from lobbyist to foundation director, all at his father's urging with each position demanding more skills, knowledge and responsibility than the last.

And now as chairman of the Cesar Chavez Foundation he has led an impressive expansion of the organization his father founded half a century ago, impacting the lives of hundreds of thousands of people during that time. Paul proudly preserves his father's legacy and promotes and applies his father's values through the various activities of the organization, from the high-quality affordable housing for thousands of low-income families and seniors to the after school tutoring programs for underserved students.

In times of crisis, it's easy to become distracted and derailed by the drama of the day. Paul wanted his message to inspire us – all of us – to embrace transformational opportunities, especially when those opportunities can make a sustainable social impact that can last for generations.

NEWS IN BRIEF

Teacher Shortage Persists

Sacramento-A report from the Commission on Teacher Credentialing recently showed that although the number of individuals enrolled in teacher preparation programs in California increased by ten percent in 2013-14, the number of new teacher credentials issued in the state in 2014-15 represented only a minor 1.6 percent increase over the previous year. Although the year over year increase was low, it did continue a three-year trend in a positive direction. However, despite the increase in teacher credentials issued in California in recent years, the teacher shortage experienced in many communities up and down the state persists.

Don't Say Yes

Washington, D.C.-The Federal Communications Commission (FCC) has issued another warning about a scam that has continued to sweep across the nation. In its warning the Commission explained how a single word could cost you dearly. Here is how the scam works. A perpetrator will call your phone. When you answer, the caller will immediately ask, "Can you hear me?" If you respond, "yes," the scammer will record your voice to use against you later by claiming the "yes" was your approval for any charges.

The FCC advised that anyone who receives such a call should just hang up.

District Attorney Mike Ramos Meets with U.S. Attorney General Sessions

San Bernardino

District Attorney Mike Ramos recently joined members of the National District Attorneys Association Board of Directors Executive Committee and met with U.S. Attorney General Jeff Sessions.

The goal of the meeting, Ramos explained, was to stress and press the issues of both public safety and victims' rights. During the meeting, Sessions and Ramos discussed the value of further strengthening the relationship between elected District Attorneys and the Department of Justice. According to Ramos, this joint effort has become even more necessary since the December 2, 2015, terrorist attack in San Bernardino as well as similar attacks across the country.

"The meeting with the Attorney General was productive and left me feeling optimistic about the future of law enforcement and public safety," Ramos explained. "During our conversation, Mr. Sessions not only indicated his intentions to protect our peace officers, but he said that he would like to see our county's Crimes Against Peace Officers Unit protocol and potentially use it at the federal level to protect federal peace officers."

Ramos further stressed, "Now, more than ever, is the time that we as members of the justice community need to stand up and strengthen our resolve to protect the rights of our victims and public safety."

According to Ramos, the two also discussed issues related to reducing gang violence; as well as the drug epidemic that is sweeping the nation.

Ramos is currently serving his fourth term as District Attorney of the County of San Bernardino. In 2011, he was elected to represent the State of California on the National District Attorneys Association Board of Directors (NDAA). In July 2016, Ramos was elected to serve as President of NDAA.

First Ladies Combat Health Issues in Black Community with Ministries, Screenings, Events

By McKenzie Jackson

California Black Media

With March being Women's History Month, California Black Media and Los Angeles Focus collaborated to feature the work of Los Angeles based first ladies that focus on health outreach ministries and their communities.

During a gathering, 13 preachers' wives from predominately African-American Los Angeles-area churches discussed fashion, what it means to be a church leader, and other topics pertaining to being the first lady. Many said it was important for them to have a leadership role in tackling health challenges that exist in their congregations because they want church goers to be free of ailments like cancer, diabetes, and mental health calamities.

Southern St. Paul Church First Lady Rinnata

Thompson said church folks lift themselves spiritually, but sometimes forget to take care of their bodies.

"The Bible says that our bodies are the temple of the God," she said, "and that doesn't mean just spiritually. That means if we are walking around tired, sick, may fall out with a stroke that we can't give God our best because our body is not at its best."

Regina Taylor, a first lady of Park Windsor Baptist Church, said helping congregation members lead healthier lifestyles begins with food choices. She said her church members are always eager to let her know about their dining decisions.

"They say, 'First Lady, I have a salad' or 'First Lady I'm eating healthier,'" said Taylor, who established a health ministry at Park Windsor three years ago. "When different groups within the church have events, we try to serve healthy food."

Unhealthy eating habits are one of the many wellness issues that plague the African-American community. CDC numbers reveal that Black Americans have a high propensity for obesity, high blood pressure, and diabetes, and the American Heart Association says African-Americans are more at risk of being afflicted by heart disease or stroke than any other race.

In California, 6.9 percent of African-Americans do not have health insurance, per

Ginger Root for Better Digestion and Belly Bloating

Whenever there is a buildup of gas in the gastrointestinal tract, then it results in bloating and leaves you with a feel of fullness and tight in the small intestine. Poor eating habits, constipation, stress, smoking, certain health problems, etc. will cause the gas and bloating problems.

It is an uncomfortable and embarrassing problem that also causes difficulty in breathing, lower back pain, belching, flatulence, cramps, etc. Natural remedies like ginger will give relief from bloating effectively rather than over the counter medications. Ginger root is an age-old remedy that not only used as a food but also medicine for treating many problems.

Here are some of ginger's amazing properties and uses for treating gas and bloating.

- It acts as an effective carminative (calming effect) that soothes the digestive tract, alleviates gas and relieves you from stomach cramps and bloating.
- It thins the blood and improves circulation to reduce pain and discomfort that further helps to get rid of bloating.

- Gingerols and shogaols are 2 pungent compounds in ginger, act as effective pain relievers that give relief from the abdominal pain and other discomforts caused by bloating.
 - It has antibacterial, antiviral, antiseptic and anti-inflammatory properties that strengthen the immune system and ease the inflammation to give relief from indigestion, hyperacidity and bloating.
 - It raises the production of saliva, bile and gastric juice for proper digestion which in turn helps to prevent gas and bloating.
 - It soothes the stomach and helps it to deflate from gas – producing foods. It eases stomach pain, blocks several enzymes and genes which promote bloat causing inflammation.
 - It has muscle reluctant properties that helps to relieve gas which is trapped in a constricted digestive system.
- It also gives relief from tension and other spasms in gastrointestinal tracts that further alleviates bloating.

- It contains a protein digestive enzyme called zingibain that effectively reduces the bloating and gas which is caused by protein rich foods.
- Drinking ginger tea will clear the abdominal bloating and other discomforts in the gastrointestinal tract. Lemon used in this tea has natural diuretic properties that flush out the bloating caused due to water retention. Honey aids in proper digestion. This refreshing ginger tea is a healthy tonic for belly bloating and overall better digestion.

Survey Results Highlight Health Concerns of Local Transgender Community

Riverside

The Inland Empire Transgender Health and Wellness Profile survey report was released by the Riverside University Health System-Department of Public Health on Tuesday. This was the organization's inaugural report on the health and wellness of the area's Lesbian, Gay, Bisexual, Transgender community.

Transgender is a term used to describes people who identify with or express a gender different from the gender assigned to them at birth. The transgender population of the Inland Empire is estimated at nearly 27,000—this includes an estimated 14,166 transgender individuals in Riverside County and approximately 12,769 in San Bernardino County.

The majority of individuals who participated in the survey had higher education levels but lower income levels than the general population; and more than 93 percent had some form of health insurance.

Among the survey's most concerning results was the fact that at least 75 percent of respondents had seriously considered committing suicide; while nearly 68 percent reported having depression or an anxiety disorder.

There is little doubt transgender and gender non-conforming individuals face many forms of discrimination that affect their health. The report stressed that, "To achieve health equity, we need to understand the current health status of all Inland Empire residents." However, when it comes to transgender health, there is limited information about the health issues that affect this population.

The survey also revealed that nearly one in four of respondents agreed they will be refused medical services because they identify as transgender; while nearly sixty percent agreed, they will be treated differently by medical personnel due to being transgender. In addition, 81 percent agreed that the community around them fears or dislikes them due to being transgender. The perception of discrimination can prevent transgender patients from accessing health care.

According to the report, "The perception of discrimination can prevent transgender patients from accessing health care."

Health officials consider local data collection a key step to increase the level of knowledge and understanding of issues affecting the transgender community. "This needs assessment should be considered a first step in guiding future research and health programs in the Inland Empire and not as a representative description of all people who identify as transgender in the Inland Empire."

The survey report also provides transgender statistics on physical and verbal abuse and income. To view the report in detail visit www.rivcoph.org.

NOT YOUR AVERAGE hero™

The complexities and concerns of the Home Energy Renovation Program

S. E. Williams
Contributor

When retired educator and long-time Riverside resident Henry Blanco passed away last November at the age of eighty-five, few foresaw that the probate process required to settle his estate would be complicated by a H.E.R.O. lien attached to his property.

The Home Energy Renovation Opportunity program or H.E.R.O. is administered under the auspices of the Western Riverside Council of Governments (WRCOG) in partnership with the San Diego based Renovate America which administers H.E.R.O. funding under the residential Property Assessed Clean Energy (P.A.C.E.) program.

Broker Mike Teer of Teer One Properties, Inc., recently confirmed to The Voice that Blanco contracted to have work done on his property through the H.E.R.O. program that totaled more than $31,000, plus an additional $3,500 per year in interest. The assessment amount was added to Blanco's property taxes in June, 2016. Sadly, Blanco died within five months of the project's completion.

Both Teer and the estate's administrator, inspected the Blanco property after his death. According to Teer, "The Administrator nor I could identify work done on the property that would justify this expense."

The Voice asked National Communications Director and Spokesperson for Renovate America, Greg Frost, about this case.

Frost confirmed his agency was in the process of investigating the Blanco scenario. "We would not fund [the contract] unless we had a completion certificate," he assured. "We have a completion certificate [signed by Blanco] dated June 8, 2016."

According to Frost, his agency learned about the Blanco case in mid-March and assigned it to a compliance officer. He explained, "The officer believes the work on the outdoor patio cover was done to a high standard." He added, "The pricing on that project was slightly above the average we see for this sort of project—likely the result of the two ceiling fans that were added to the project."

He continued, "The other aspect of the project was the application of Life Paint to the exterior walls—an energy-efficient exterior wall coating that has been engineered to last longer than conventional paint, eliminate color fade, and save energy by reducing heat absorption." It is this quality that makes it applicable under the P.A.C.E./H.E.R.O. program.

"The officer's investigation of this aspect of the job is not yet complete," Frost further clarified. "She is meeting a Life Paint representative at the house [Blanco's house] Thursday morning [March 30] to get an official assessment of whether the product was correctly applied."

"But these words people threw around--humans, monsters, heroes could call themselves a hero and still walk around killing dozens."

This Blanco scenario begged critical questions in relation to the H.E.R.O. program including whether local seniors (and others) truly understand how H.E.R.O. assessments work; and the impact such assessments can have on their property. It also reignited concerns over the quality of work performed by H.E.R.O. contractors; and the kind of oversight built into the H.E.R.O. process to insure the quality of work performed under its auspices. To this end, Frost also confirmed to The Voice, "The contractor who did the work, Yes Electric and Construction of Van Nuys, was suspended from the H.E.R.O. Program in November 2016."

Blanco stressed, "The point here is that other home-improvement forms of financing simply would not go to the lengths to which we are going, to investigate and potentially resolve an issue like this. This approach is also at the heart of the new Contractor Quality Rating system we are rolling out that uses data and analytical tools and protocols to manage contractors."

He continued, "Through this system, we will be driving more business to contractors with excellent service. In addition, we can detect patterns and mitigate poor contractor performance, taking appropriate action that may include re-training, suspension, or permanent removal from the program."

In 2015, in response to complaints about the H.E.R.O. program that included allegations of price gouging and the poor quality of work performed by some contractors, The Voice published a two-part series titled, "Tarnished Hero" that explored the program in detail.

WROG is a Joint Powers Authority with representatives from 17 local cities, the Riverside County Board of Supervisors and others. It provides the inland area with a collective voice on important regional issues. Renovate America, is the leading provider of residential P.A.C.E. financing in the United States.

The public-private partnership between WRCOG and Renovate America/P.A.C.E. is the foundation of the H.E.R.O. program. P.A.C.E. is authorized to fund energy efficient and renewable energy improvements on private property.

When California's AB811 was enacted in 2008; it authorized cities and counties to designate areas where property owners can enter contractual assessments to finance the installation of distributed renewable energy systems. Distributed renewable energy systems generate clean, renewable electricity at the location where the energy will be used. The most common example is solar panels. Water efficiency was included in 2009.

More than ten million Californians across thirteen counties including Riverside and San Bernardino have access to the H.E.R.O. program. The legislation also authorized funding be extended to other improvements in energy efficiency provided such improvements were permanently attached to the owner's property—this included windows, new heating and cooling systems, light improvements, insulation, etc.

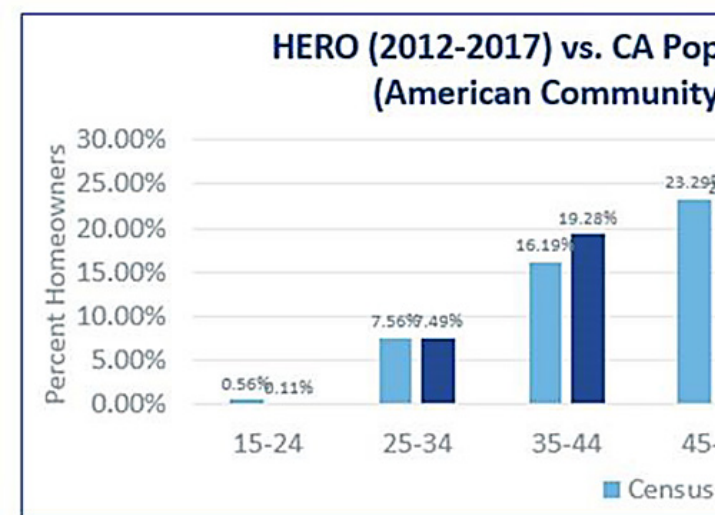

The funding is provided through low interest assessments that must be repaid as part of the owner's property tax bill over a period of years—funding is only available if the property owner agrees to a contractual assessment. In other words, to participate in the program, a homeowner must agree to repayment via their property tax bill over a period of between five and twenty years. In addition, the homeowner must be current on his/her mortgage and property taxes; have a clean title; and the interest rate must be fixed.

Applicants are not required to put any money down and interest on the assessment is tax deductible. The H.E.R.O. assessment, interest and penalties remain as a lien against the property until the assessment is paid in full. The lien must take priority position when recorded against the title.

In August 2015, in response to growing complaints related to allegations of price gouging and/or poor quality work on the part of contractors participating in the program, H.E.R.O./P.A.C.E. administrators launched, H.E.R.O. Protect—a service offered at no charge to all homeowners who participate in the program. It provides information about contractor performance, dispute resolution and investigative services. It also forwards information to law enforcement agencies as required.

When implemented, officials hoped it would go a long way toward helping to mitigate some of the concerns experienced by program participants. The initiative has resulted in the suspension of contractors with inactive licenses from program participation; as well as the suspension of dozens of individuals and contract companies for violations of the program's Code of Conduct. Despite this effort—the program continues to be plagued with concerns.

The California Association of Realtors (CAR) once described H.E.R.O. assessments as, "unfairly expensive, with interest rates that border on predatory, where even basic lending guidelines for consumers are ignored, and which are often sold by high pressure door-to-door sales people."

In 2015, Riverside County Deputy District Attorney Raymond Ramirez revealed he was investigating the way es, villains; to Victor, it was all just a matter of semantics. Someone Someone else could be labeled a villain for trying to stop them.”

consumers were being sold energy-efficient products through the H.E.R.O. program. “We’re inquiring about the program itself,” he revealed at a meeting of the Inland Valley Association of Realtors in Riverside that June. “The investigation is between the contractor and homeowner, and whether protections are present for the consumer.” The Voice made an inquiry to the Riverside District Attorney’s office regarding the status of this investigation. Public Information Officer John Hall responded, “At this time, there is no update.”

In October 2015, Reuters reported how some

Population Age of Homeowners

homeowners trying to sell their houses in California, were finding it difficult because they found “potential buyers scared off by the higher tax assessments.”

Governor Jerry Brown signed CAR sponsored legislation, AB2693, into law in September 2016. The law was designed to minimize opportunities for the abuse of H.E.R.O. The new consumer protection law required a detailed financial disclosure document be presented to every property owner who participates in a P.A.C.E. program including H.E.R.O.

The disclosure document includes a plethora of notices and warnings—including notice that the property owner may not be able to refinance or sell without paying off the P.A.C.E. obligation. In addition, the law included a three-day rescission right among other notices and statements. Sadly, AB2693 did not become effective until January, 2017—too late for Mr. Blanco.

In November 2016, a Los Angeles resident filed suit against Renovate America and SANBAG (Michael Richardson v. County of Los Angeles et al., case number BC639230). It alleged “predatory characteristics” and a “pervasive pattern of false, deceptive and otherwise unlawful practices” regarding H.E.R.O. The plaintiff claimed the company uses false and deceptive means to carry out the program, including excessive fees and costs based on inflated interest rates. The plaintiff also alleged H.E.R.O. fails to credit borrowers for making payments in a timely manner. The suit claimed violations of the Truth in Lending Act and the Home Ownership Protection Act, among other concerns. The suit is currently seeking class action status.

According to Frost, “Renovate America has filed a motion to dismiss virtually identical lawsuits brought against it by a firm that specializes in trying to create class action suits. The cases have been combined into one case that is pending in the U.S. District Court in Southern California.”

The frenzy of frustrations that surround the H.E.R.O. program as expressed by some, coupled with complexities inherent in how H.E.R.O. assessments work, appear to reinforce concerns expressed by CAR, Teer and others regarding the need to better educate consumers about the H.E.R.O. program—particularly seniors like Blanco.

“Marketing this property has truly been impacted since almost the entire lien balance is due or assumable,” Teer shared regarding the Blanco house. This is because any potential buyer would be required to assume responsibility for the outstanding balance of the H.E.R.O. assessment levied against the property ($31,000 plus interest and penalties); or, the estate must pay the balance in full, even though work completed on the property, in Teer’s professional estimation, does not justify the $31,000 Blanco was charged by the contractor.

Frost was asked whether the program conducted inspections to assure contractors’ work met standards. He explained, “A random five percent of projects are inspected by an independent 3rd party who verifies via a visual check whether the work was actually completed.”

“One of the key consumer safeguards that comes with H.E.R.O. financing is that all contractors must agree to not be paid until the homeowner signs off that the job has been completed to his or her satisfaction.” Frost continued. “What this means in practice is that we won’t fund the project until we have what’s called a completion certificate, signed by the homeowner. And we won’t record the HERO assessment on the property until we fund the project.” He concluded, “If there’s a HERO assessment on a property, it means that the homeowner signed off that the job was completed to his or her satisfaction.” As detailed above, in this instance, Blanco signed a completion certificate on June 8, 2016.

According to Frost, when a property encumbered with a H.E.R.O. lien is placed on the market, Renovate America has a dedicated team of real estate professionals on hand to assist sellers and their agents in the sale or refinancing of homes with HERO assessments.

Frost explained, “This team can assist with a variety of options, including full assumption of the remaining H.E.R.O. payments by the new owner, subordinating H.E.R.O. to the new mortgage (if required by the lender), or even negotiating paying down the remaining H.E.R.O. balance.”

Frost added, “In the case of an assessment on a home in which the owner has died, the estate could use the proceeds of the sale of the home to pay off the assessment (just like paying off a mortgage or a home equity loan) if for some reason the new owner did not want to assume the remaining HERO payments; this would be part of the overall negotiation between the estate and the new buyer.”

Next week The Voice will continue this report.

2015 numbers from Covered California, the state's health insurance exchange. Also, as of last June, Blacks have the lowest enrollment numbers of any race in Medi-Cal or health plan coverage through the Affordable Care Act.

The leading church ladies at the L.A. Focus event said they combat health problems and the low amount of health coverage plaguing their pews with health ministry work.

Holman United Methodist Church First Lady Judi Wortham-Sauls said her church's health ministry has a diabetes awareness group, exercise classes and organizes blood pressure and other screenings. A sodium awareness program began at the church on Monday. Wortham-Sauls also said she and her husband, Rev. Kelvin Sauls, try to lead by example.

"My husband and I are very serious about our own health," she said. "We are both on weight reduction programs. Our own personal health awareness makes us want to bring it to the congregation."

Faithful Central Bible Church First Lady

Togetta Ulmer said she puts an emphasis on physical activity. She tells members to exercise at least 20 minutes a day and eat in moderation. Ulmer said on May 20 she and Faithful Central members are going to bring workout mats to the church and instructors will teach them meditation, exercise, and healthy eating.

"Just because you are skinny doesn't mean you are healthy," Ulmer said.

Thompson, a co-chair of a first ladies health initiative in Los Angeles, organized a project on March 26, that focused on health professionals from various wellness groups on over 30 church campuses across Los Angeles. The vendors conducted vision screenings, HIV/AIDS screenings, dental checks and other health evaluations for church and community members.

"We just want to tie the spiritual and physical together," she said. "These screening are free for those in the community."

"The Historical" Weller Street Baptist Church First Lady Kera Tullos said one Sunday a special offering was held at her church to raise funds for a breast cancer patient that needed to pay for a mammogram.

"I'm just trying to provide beneficial things to people," the first lady said. "It means a lot because people's lives matter."

Since the Medicaid program (called "Medi-Cal" in California) expanded its eligibility criteria for enrollment under the Affordable Care Act (ACA) in 2014, more than 13 million low-income Californians have gained access to healthcare according to the California Budget & Policy Center.

Wortham-Sauls said access to healthcare is needed now more than ever in the Black community because African Americans have historically not done what is needed to take care of themselves health-wise.

"So, now we need to get it correct," she said. "Our struggle with diabetes and hypertension. We see people dropping dead on a regular basis. There is no reason to lose anybody if there is help out there."

In Honor of WOMEN'S

6.8 million African Americans have become eligible for health coverage because of the Affordable Care Act. First Ladies are fighting to protect health care for all. Because our communities deserve access to the medical care they need.
