Will Redlands House Our Patriots?

I spent Wednesday afternoon in Sacramento listening to legislators talk about the state's housing crisis. Twenty percent of the nation's homeless live in the Golden State, the moderator stated in his introductory remarks. On the other end of the spectrum, Assembly member Marc Steinorth said during his opening statement, "We're not building enough market rate homes, CEQA reform is needed to increase the supply of homes." Another panelist chimed in, "a lot of our cities are not doing enough," they all agreed, local governments need to focus on streamlining the development process and the state government needs to focus on making building in this state more affordable. Housing affordability remains a real challenge in California.

The previous evening I had been in Redlands, a city currently faced with an opportunity to improve the housing options of the city's veterans and others eligible for affordable housing.

I was there to follow-up on last week's story about the Liberty Lane affordable housing project for homeless veterans. I was inspired by the veterans and military families I encountered during my research and wanted to see if more veterans showed-up to speak on behalf of the project. I also wanted to see if the project's opposition was bold enough to provide public testimony on the same stage and with the same amount of passion as the veterans and their families. Specifically, during my research I had read the letter of opposition submitted to the city council by Redlands resident Rosa Gomez and had heard from several trusted sources that she had enlisted her sister Assembly member Eloise Gomez Reyes to contact city leaders with her concerns. I stayed until well into the evening, but no opposing voices arose during public comment.

I don't blame them, its hard to argue against a project that helps "our patriots" to quote Don Griggs, a Viet Nam veteran who told the council he comes from a lineage of "patriots" who love and support this country so much they were willing to give their lives. "My grandfather served in World War I, my father in World War II, and three uncles served in the Korean War," he said. District Attorney Mike Ramos, a Redlands native and Supervisor James Ramos were passionate about the need to help the city's "hometown heroes." Redlands resident Chris Williams was homeless for a year after a trucking accident. "Just because I was homeless didn't mean I was nobody," he said. "We must take care of our own." Mr. Williams served in the navy for three tours as a member of the multi-peace keeping forces in Beirut and Lebanon.

But it was Jason Barber's public testimony that drew the loudest and most enthusiastic applause. "I am one of the people this project would help," he said and praised the project's collaborators: Loma Linda VA, San Bernardino County, The Community of Friends, and US Vets. "When I read the social media posts and online news comments of people complaining that the project will create

The Controversial Cadiz Pipeline

Riverside—Late last month, the U.S. Bureau of Land Management (BLM) revoked two legal directives issued during the Obama era that ultimately prevented Cadiz, Inc. from using an existing federal railroad right-of-way to install a new water pipeline—as proposed, the pipeline would carry water from its proposed well in the desert to the Colorado River Aqueduct. Cadiz, Inc. appealed the initial BLM decision, but the Obama administration refused to overturn it.

Now that the Bureau of Land Management directives are revoked—Cadiz is better positioned to move forward with it plans to pump groundwater from the Mojave Desert and sell to urban areas in the southern part of the state despite environmental and other concerns.

U.S. Senator Dianne Feinstein has been very vocal about her opposition to the pipeline. She released a statement in response to BLM's reversal of the Obama era ruling. "The Trump administration has once again put corporate profits ahead of the public's interest," she lamented.

Citizens Demand President Trump Release His Taxes

San Bernardino—When thousands of Americans took to the streets on Saturday to demand President Donald J. Trump release his tax returns, citizens from both Riverside and San Bernardino Counties lent their voices to the call.

Despite White House claims that no one cares about the president's taxes other than the media; and regardless of White House accusations that anti-Trump protestors are paid agitators--citizens gathered by the thousands across the country and demanded transparency and disclosure from him regarding this issue.

Protesters and others expressed concerns about the president negotiating trade deals, modifying the tax code, etc. without the public knowing whether any of his actions/decisions on these and other important issues will be made in the best interest of the nation or whether they will be driven by his personal business interests.

Throughout the 2016 Presidential campaign then candidate Trump stonewalled about publishing his taxes. Those close to the president now claim he will never release his taxes.

Fighting Crimes Against Children

San Bernardino

Deputy District Attorney David Foy, a specialist in the prosecution of felony crimes against children, was recently honored for his dedication and commitment as a Crimes Against Children prosecutor.

The honor was presented at the 19th annual, Shine-a-Light on Child Abuse Awards Breakfast, annual event hosted by Children's Network normally held in early April to kick-off Child Abuse Prevention Awareness Month.

Foy is a 15-year veteran prosecutor assigned to the Desert-Mountain Division Family Violence Unit. "There is a heavy responsibility in handling such violent cases," said Chief Deputy District Attorney Julie Peterson, who oversees the Desert-Mountain Division. "Mr. Foy accepts that responsibility and takes it very seriously. Every day, he consistently does what he can to hold people accountable for their horrific actions against children." Following are some examples of his work.

Freeway Jumper Convicted of Child Molestation sentenced to 158 years and 8 months to life in state prison: A child molestation suspect who led police on a high-speed pursuit that ended with him trying to jump off a freeway overpass in Ontario was sentenced to 158 years and 8 months to life in state prison today, for molesting his three nieces. According to testimony during a seven-day jury trial, Daniel Cortez Bernal sexually assaulted one niece two to three times a week from 2002 to 2007, when she was ages 6 to 11, while she lived with him in Garden Grove. According to her testimony, the family moved to Hesperia in 2007, and the sexual assaults continued until she was 13, in 2009.

Former school employee sentenced for molesting three Apple Valley girls: Paul James Hultman was sentenced to 48 years to life for molesting three Apple Valley girls. "This defendant befriended these young girls and abused his position of trust repeatedly molesting them over a period of years," Foy said.

Father and Girlfriend Found Guilty of Torture and Child Abuse: Erik Austin Flores and Mariah Rita Sugg were sentenced to 20 years to life in state prison for their roles in starving Flores' children, ages four and five. "I am so grateful that the jury took care to find justice for these children," Foy said. "These kids were starved to the point where witnesses described them as looking like concentration camp survivors and zombies."

NEWS IN BRIEF

Zika Grant

San Bernardino-This week the San Bernardino County Board of Supervisors will officially accept a $140,000 grant from Public Health Foundation Enterprises, Inc. The monies will be used to enhance the Department of Public Health's epidemiology and surveillance activities in response to the Zika virus.

According to Trudy Raymundo, Director of the San Bernardino County Department of Public Health, the funded activities will include infection detection, surveillance, and outreach. "Infection prevention and timely detection are key components to preventing Zika virus infections in San Bernardino County," Raymundo noted in her presentation to the Board.

The Zika illness is usually mild with symptoms lasting several days to a week after being bitten and rarely results in hospitalization or death. The most common symptoms of the disease can include fever, rash, joint pain, and conjunctivitis or pink eye. To date, all confirmed Zika cases in California were associated with international travel as were the 18 cases identified in San Bernardino as of March 31.

Dollar General Stores Must Pay for Environmental Violations

Riverside

Tennessee-based company Dolgen California and its subsidiary corporations were ordered by a judge to pay $1.125 million as part of a civil settlement in an environmental prosecution. Dolgen California and its subsidiary corporations operate Dollar General retail stores in addition to a distribution center in California.

Riverside County District Attorney Mike Hestrin, along with 31 other California District Attorneys filed the lawsuit that alleged Dollar General stores throughout the state and their distribution center unlawfully handled and disposed of various hazardous wastes and materials over a five-year period. Those hazardous wastes and materials included automotive fluids, alkaline batteries, electronic waste, aerosol cans, expired over the counter medications, and other toxic, ignitable, and corrosive wastes. Investigators from district attorney offices and environmental regulators statewide conducted a series of undercover inspections of waste bins originating at Dollar General stores and facilities.

The inspections revealed that Dollar General stores and their distribution center had been routinely and systematically sending hazardous wastes to local landfills throughout California that were not permitted to receive those wastes. Regulators also found the documentation of employee hazardous waste training to be inaccurate or incomplete.

According to Hestrin, Dollar General was cooperative throughout the investigation and

Medicaid: Not Just for Low-Income Families

Most Americans give little thought to Medicaid, which is typically viewed as an entitlement program for the poor. But it's about to get a lot more attention. President Donald Trump is seeking to radically overhaul the $530 billion program by changing its funding—a move that could end up sharply reducing coverage and jeopardizing the financial security of many middle-class families.

Contrary to popular belief, Medicaid is not just a benefit for low-income Americans. It's actually the nation's largest health care program, covering 74 million enrollees, or about one in four Americans. Some 60% of Medicaid's spending is for the elderly and the disabled, many of whom come from middle-class households.

Medicaid costs are funded jointly by the federal government and the states, with the feds paying about 57% of program's overall expenses. It's an open-ended commitment, meaning the federal government pays a certain percentage of each state's costs (the amounts vary) with no fixed dollar limit. If costs rise—a new drug charges a high price, say, or a virus breaks out—states get more money.

Trump's plan would change all that by converting the federal funding to so-called block grants. With this approach, each state would get a set amount of money, which would be distributed as local governments see fit. In theory, this would give states more flexibility. Problem is, block-grant funding typically doesn't keep up with rising costs. As a recent study by the left-leaning Center on Budget and Policy Priorities found, a similar House Republican budget plan for 2017 would slash federal Medicaid funding by 33% by the year 2026.

The CBPP estimate did not include the impact of a repeal of the Affordable Care Act, another Republican goal. The ACA, also known as Obamacare, gave additional funding to states that expanded Medicaid eligibility. If that policy is reversed, some 11 million enrollees who signed up through the expansion would lose coverage.

It's far from clear whether these Medicaid changes will be enacted. Many state governors, both Democrats and Republicans, who are concerned about a potential rise in uninsured residents, are pushing back. But the Medicaid expansion is a key provision in Obamacare, which means the GOP repeal effort puts the program on the table.

San Bernardino Breaks New Ground in Support of Homeless Women

San Bernardino

San Bernardino will become the first county in the nation to implement a program specifically designed to treat unaccompanied homeless women as a “special population.”

In recent years, the county successfully maintained special focus on homeless veterans and made significant strides in the reduction of its veteran’s homeless population. The 2017 Point in Time Count showed homelessness in the community dropped by nearly twenty percent since 2013.

Last July, the Board of Supervisors unanimously approved the implementation of a strategy to permanently house all the county’s homeless veterans. The focus yielded results almost immediately. When the decision was made, there were approximately 400 homeless veterans in the area and by the end of the year that number was already reduced by more than half with 56 percent having secured permanent housing. Such substantial progress was a clear indication that having the appropriate focus can make a difference.

With the laser focus on homeless veterans and even as the count of homeless in San Bernardino County overall has ticked downward year over year, one demographic among them has not—unaccompanied homeless women.

San Bernardino County homeless expert Philip Mangano told reporters, “What works for a homeless veteran doesn’t always work for women living alone. In 90 percent of cases, unaccompanied homeless women have experienced physical or mental abuse.”

Mangano’s comments were based on research conducted by the Downtown Los Angeles Mission. He continued, “Half report being attacked in the last year and any approach that leaves them vulnerable to further attacks, can cause them to withdraw.”

Research has already pointed to some of the first steps the county might consider as it embarks on this strategy. Included among them—making sure women are included as part of the outreach teams--as Mangano stressed, “It’s at the hands of males that they’ve [women] suffered so much in childhood and later life, so if you have male engagement workers, these women are not enamored of that.”

The Office of Urban Initiatives reported about 25 percent of all homeless individuals are unaccompanied, homeless women. As a pioneer in designating women as a special category of homelessness, what is learned by San Bernardino County owed to this focus, is certain to be shared nationally.

Training and Retaining Doctors in the Inland Region

S. E. Williams
Contributor

In June, the UCR School of Medicine will celebrate the graduation of 40 physicians. The great news for California is that 33 of the graduates will stay in the state to complete their residencies, ten of which will participate in residency programs in the Inland Empire. This was welcomed news for a state and community impacted by a shortage of doctors.

California, like other places in the nation, is working to mitigate its physician shortage even as the shortage continues to grow. The Association of American Medical Colleges reported last year that by 2025 the country will experience a shortage of well over 94,000 primary care physicians. California has a projected shortfall of 8,230 by the year 2030.

In the Inland region, the physician shortage is even more pronounced. There are only 120 doctors per 100,000 people in the Inland area compared to 194 physicians per 100,000 people statewide. Regarding primary care physicians, there are 64 per 100,000 people statewide; but only 43 primary care physicians per 100,000 people in the Inland Empire. The minimum ratio recommended by the Council

"The state has increased enrollment at existing schools, that's only the first step...Next they must be put into residency training. The growth here has not kept pace with the number in medical schools."

*- Dr. Paul Lyons
Senior Associate Dean for Medical Education, UCR*

on Graduate Medical Education is 60 primary care physicians per 100,000 people. Only two regions in the state have successfully attained this benchmark: the Greater Bay Area and Sacramento.

An even broader gap exists regarding medical specialists. Statewide, there are 130 specialists per 100,000 people compared to only 77 per 100,000 individuals in the Inland region.

There is no question the physician shortfall increased in recent years as enrollment in the Affordable Care Act/Covered California grew. The shortfall is certain to be further exacerbated by the number of physicians in California rapidly approaching retirement age: more than 60 percent of the state's doctors are over 50 years old and they are retiring at a pace much faster than new physicians can replace them.

Fortunately for the residents of Riverside and San Bernardino Counties, healthcare professionals, like those at the UCR School of Medicine, are working to meet this challenge head-on.

When the UCR School of Medicine welcomed its inaugural class in 2013, it became the first public medical school established in the state in more than forty years. Observers, believe the state can and must do more to provide funding for graduate-level medical training. Such funding could yield great results for the state overall, and communities like those in the inland region specifically.

Results indicate that California has the highest resident retention rate in the nation. In other words, medical residents that train here, for the most part stay here. It would better serve the medical needs and interests of the state to provide more graduate-level education funding so that students will not travel to other states for opportunities, especially since results show that most graduate-level medical students who train in other states do not return to California to practice.

Last year, the California legislature committed $100 million to be dispersed over a three-year period to fund the state's Song-Brown

Program. The 1973 Song-Brown Program was designed to increase the number of family doctors to provide medical services to the state's residents, particularly those in underserved areas like the Inland Empire. This year, however, the Governor's 2016-17 budget proposal has called for the elimination of the second Song-Brown Program installment—the equivalent of $33.4 million, which could go to schools in the state university system like UCR.

That is not the only bad budget news. The Governor also proposed redirecting $50 million in Proposition 56 (tobacco tax) funding, also intended to go to the University of California (UC) to expand Graduate Medical Education programs, and instead it will be added to the general fund to offset a cut from the UC's base budget.

Working to solve the region's shortage of doctors and other healthcare professionals is not only being addressed by the UCR School of Medicine; stakeholders from Riverside and San Bernardino Counties have coalesced in pursuit of opportunities to provide the best healthcare services to the area's residents. Also, a new medical school, the California University of Science and Medicine in Colton, will accept its first class this fall.

The California Medical Association (CMA) reported that inadequate funding for residency programs has resulted in hundreds of graduating medical students each year unable to find a residency opening in California. This continues to drive young doctors to other states for residency opportunities, which often results in those professionals remaining out of state.

Concerns over the governor's proposed budget cuts is not only a concern of the UC system, according to the CMA, leading healthcare groups have also expressed concerns. In addition to the CMA, the California Academy of Family Physicians as well as CaliforniaHealth+ Advocates have urged the governor and legislature to keep their promise to bring much needed primary care physicians to underserved areas of the state.

According to the CMA, the budget investment promised last year came at the urging of a broad coalition of statewide healthcare organizations. Their goal was to create a reliable and continuous funding stream that primary care residency programs in the state so desperately need.

In a recent statement, Carmela Castellano-Garcia, President and CEO of CaliforniaHealth+ Advocates said, “We are committed to working with the legislature and the governor to forge solutions that protect our state’s most vulnerable communities, but must not turn our back on those we have already committed to helping.”

This week, in an exclusive interview with The Voice, Dr. Paul Lyons, the Senior Associate Dean for Medical Education at UCR, shared his thoughts on the governor’s budget decision: “In the immediate short-term, it will have no impact on the school itself. Funding for the medical school is separate from funding for residencies.” He further explained how funding residencies is very complex and includes a variety of strategies to provide medical training opportunities for medical school graduates. “It would be terrific to receive the funding but there are a lot of pathways to success,” he noted.

Lyons further advised that not receiving the funding will create some stresses, but assured adoptions will be made. “We will weather this or any other budget impact. It doesn’t mean we like them, but, we weather them—medical education is resourceful and resilient.”

Lyons further shared that most funding sources for residencies come from federal dollars via the Medicare program. “Many states, like California, augment that funding for their own strategic reasons—but it is not the major source.”

Regarding the growing need for physicians, Lyons confirmed it is a national concern that was recognized six to eight years ago. “An organized call was put out to increase the number of medical schools by 30 percent by the year by 2020.” He expounded on how this goal was already met nationwide, but not yet achieved in California. However, with the opening of the UCR School of Medicine, the number of medical students in the state increased by 50.

“The state has increased enrollment at existing schools, that’s only the first step,” he noted. “Next they must be put into residency training. The growth here has not kept pace with the number in medical schools. The governor’s funding was one way to get at this, as is increased hospital residencies through federal funding.”

According to Lyons, those are not the only ways. UCR has already partnered with local hospitals to create more than 100 residency positions in the region. The residencies include a spectrum of specialties such as surgery, family medicine, internal medicine, and pediatrics, to name a few.

As mentioned above, ten of this year’s big predictors that determine where doctors will ultimately choose to practice medicine: where they grew up and where they finished their residency. “We have good reason to believe this strategy will be successful in the long run.”

Lyons also expressed his belief that the inland community should be exceptionally proud of all 40 students who are graduating from the UCR graduates from the UCR School of Medicine will remain in the inland area to complete residency programs. Lyons said that UCR has about 75 first-year positions and each year some of the residency positions will be matched to candidates from other places. That is part of the school’s strategy, which includes retaining local students and recruiting those from elsewhere. “Now, we have a chance to woo them with the charms of our region and convince them to stay,” he shared.

Lyons further explained that there are two

School of Medicine in June, and exceptionally proud of all the students asked to residency in this region. “At the end of the day,” he said, “this is a medical school they [the community] helped support and assured it came into being - and it is now starting to pay off.”

He concluded, “This is a very proud moment for this region that worked so hard and for so long to assure that this medical school would be successful. I think this is an opportunity for all of us to celebrate a very significant milestone.”

Increased Funding for County's Jail Based Competency Treatment Program

San Bernardino

This week, the San Bernardino County Board of Supervisors was asked to approve the extension of two contracts and millions of dollars in additional funding for the Jail Based Competency Treatment Program.

The first of the two contract amendments involve the extension of an agreement with the California Department of State Hospitals (DSH) from June 1 through December 31, 2017. It also increases the contract amount by more than six million dollars. The county requested an extension of its contract with Liberty Healthcare of California from June 1 through December 31, 2017, and increase its contract amount by nearly three million dollars.

DSH is responsible for restoring competency to individuals who have been charged with a felony and determined by the courts to be incompetent to stand trial. Once an individual is committed to a DSH facility for treatment, the facility has 90 days to make a written report to the court concerning progress toward recovery of mental competence. Currently, however, DSH has insufficient beds in state hospitals, creating lengthy waiting lists of inmates in county jails who need mental competency restoration services, including those in San Bernardino County.

In response to this need, San Bernardino County, in partnership with DSH, implemented a Jail Based Competency Treatment (JBCT) Program beginning in 2015. The JBCT Program provides the same services, but within a county jail facility.

DHS reimburses the county for the costs associated with the designated space, personnel, and services, including medication, for patient inmates receiving treatment, regardless of the number of patient inmates admitted into the JBCT Program, and up-to the contracted 76 beds program maximum.

In 2015, the Board approved an amendment to include participation the JBCT Program by any California county in order to maximize the usage of the available beds and services.

traffic, I felt disrespected,” he said. “We didn’t commit to serve only if it’s convenient.” Mr. Barber later told me he served in the U.S. Army at Fort Hood Texas, in South Korea, Fort Lewis Washington and the DMZ (the line of separation between North and South Korea). “Safe Haven” the U.S. Vets housing project in Loma Linda, saved his life. He knows Liberty Lane will do the same for others.

Dena Fuentes, Deputy Executive Officer, Housing and Community Development explained why the county has a sense of urgency regarding the project. The project developer, “has been working diligently to secure funding for the development this includes $2.6 million of State fund for homeless veterans, $2.75 million of Mental Health Service Act, $900,000 Home Depot grant and $1 million from the Federal Home Loan Bank,” she said during public comment. “Additionally the Housing Authority of the County of San Bernardino was able to competitively secure 59 VASH vouchers from the US Department of Housing and Urban Development. These funds will be used to compete for the competitive Low income Housing Tax Credits 9% program from the State of California. The deadlines for the second round of 9% LIHTC is June 28th. “

the VHHP funds have time limits on the commitments. The County and developer feel that the environmental analysis is thorough and complete. To move this development forward to house our homeless veterans, we encourage the council to schedule this item for consideration on May 2nd.”

The City of Redlands discussed the project in closed session but did not have any reportable action. As I sat in one of my favorite restaurants in Sacramento writing this story, Steve Peck, CEO for US Vets happened to be seated next to me. I shared with him my observations from the meeting in Redlands the night before and he shared with me pictures of the new veterans housing project currently under construction at March Air Reserve Base. Like me, he finds it difficult to understand those people who say they support veterans, but when it comes to building housing for them, they say “not in my backyard.” As one veteran commented that night, hopefully the city council will stand-up for vets and make sure they can sleep safely at night in Liberty Lane instead of being left to camp out in the city’s Liberty Park.

quickly responded to enhance its policies and procedures to eliminate the improper disposal of hazardous waste products in California. The judgment requires hazardous waste be labeled, packaged, and stored to minimize the risk of exposure to employees and customers.

Hazardous waste produced by California Dollar General stores through damage, spills, and returns, is now being collected by state-registered haulers, then taken to proper disposal facilities and properly documented. Under the settlement, Dolgen California must pay $500,000 in civil penalties and $375,000 to reimburse the costs of the investigation. An additional $112,000 will fund supplemental environmental projects furthering consumer protection and environmental enforcement in California. Dolgen California will also fund hazardous waste minimization and enhanced compliance projects valued at $138,000. The retailer will be bound under the terms of a permanent injunction prohibiting similar future violations of law.

There are 50 Dollar General Stores in California with a number of them spread across the inland region. The case was handled in Riverside County by Deputy District Attorney Lauren Martineau of the DA’s Environmental Protection Team.

5th Annual Riverside Tamale Festival

Welcome to the 5th Annual Riverside Tamale Festival! On Saturday, April 22, 2017 Riverside’s White Park will be resplendent with delicious food, outstanding entertainment, cultural shopping, and family connections. We hope you will join us in celebration of family, culture and history. Spanish Town Heritage Foundation is proud to present the annual Riverside Tamale Festival as a learning opportunity to share the story of Lorenzo Trujillo and the 10 original families who walked from Abiquiu, New Mexico across the Old Spanish Trail in 1842 to settle in this area and form the twin communities of Agua Mansa and La Placita de los Trujillos along the Santa Ana River in today’s Colton and Riverside, CA when the western border of the United States was the Louisiana Purchase. The Trujillo Family Adobe built in 1842, rebuilt in 1862 after the flood decimated the twin communities, remains today as City of Riverside Landmark #130, Riverside County Landmark #009, and a California site of Historical significance, celebrates 155 years of family and community in 2017.
