Trading Sex for Rent? Why We Still Need the Fair Housing Act

Last month we celebrated the Fair Housing Act, the 1968 signing of the landmark legislation designed to eliminate housing discrimination and create equal opportunity for every community regardless of race, gender, ethnicity, or sexual orientation.

There are still challenges, a friend explained to me. He has been working in the fair housing industry for years, and continues to see discriminatory practices and inequities. For homeownership, he said, many minorities find access to capital to be an impenetrable barrier. They continue to have challenges finding inexpensive and non-predatory mortgage loans. A recent study, for example, found African-Americans to be 105 percent and Latinos 78 percent more likely to have high cost mortgages for home purchases based on a single measure: race.

And for renters who don't know their rights, complaints can range from landlords withholding security deposits without cause to more nefarious and unlawful acts like landlords offering to trade sex for rent from vulnerable female tenants desperate to keep a roof over their heads. The U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development (HUD) says it received 155 such claims nationwide in 2016. That doesn't include complaints filed through private lawsuits. While he has seen several of those cases in recent months, he said they seldom hit the news because many are settled privately to protect the tenant.

Mr. Mike Teer, a retired realtor and community leader, forwarded this Fair Housing timeline to me. It illustrates how inequality is legislated and institutionalized in our country, and just how challenging it is to correct. If you believe your housing rights have been violated or you are looking to buy or rent a home and want to know your rights, contact the Fair Housing Council at (951) 682-6581.

Fair Housing Timeline

1789 The 5th Amendment to the Constitution establishes private property rights—those rights are generally limited to White men. Slaves are considered property.

1839 Mississippi adopts the Married Women's property Act allowing married women to independently own property. The original constitutions of Kansas, Nevada and Oregon allowed women to own property without regard to marital status.

1848 Treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo ends the Mexican American War and included a provision that Mexican property holders were to retain full enjoyment and protection of their property as if they were citizens of the United States.

1851 The Land Claims Act limited the amount of time property owners from former Mexican territory had to register their titles, resulting in many property owners losing their land.

1857 The Dred Scott Decision—Supreme Court declares that Blacks could not be citizens and had no rights Whites were bound to respect.

1859 Oregon Constitution prohibits Chinese and Chinese Americans from owning land.

1859 Emancipation Proclamation declares that all persons held as slaves within the rebellious states are, and henceforward shall be free.

1865 Thirteenth Amendment to the Constitution abolishes slavery in the United States.

1866 Civil Rights Act declares that all citizens shall have the same property rights as White citizens.

1868 Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution declares that all persons born in the United States are citizens, and all citizens are guaranteed equal protection of the law.

Yes! America and the World are Really Getting Warmer

Riverside—Despite the fact that America’s official position on climate change now rests in the hands of 180 congressional climate deniers and a president who shares their position, last week, climate experts reported for the 29th month in a row that the nation’s record high temperatures outpaced its record lows—a key indicator of climate change. Last year marked the first time in recorded history that the nation experienced more high temperatures than lows every single month of the year. This latest acknowledgement is another clear indication the globe is warming, which experts believe is in large part due to heat-trapping greenhouse gas emissions.

Families Sue Facebook, Google, Twitter for 2015 Terror Attack

San Bernardino

Surviving family members of those killed in the 2015 terror attack in San Bernardino filed suit last week against social media giants Facebook, Google (YouTube), and Twitter.

In the suit, family members claimed the corporations failed to adequately delete ISIS messages designed to inspire such attacks.

According to the complaint, "For years, defendants have knowingly and recklessly provided the terrorist group ISIS with accounts to use its social networks as a tool for spreading extremist propaganda, raising funds, and attracting new recruits." The complaint further stated that the platforms provided by the defendants aided the explosive growth of the terrorist organization in recent years.

In their complaint, family members alleged a variety of complaints, including wrongful death, aiding and abetting terror, and providing material support to terrorists, among other concerns.

The discourse in this lawsuit is rooted in Section 230 of the 1996 Communications Decency Act (CDA), which states, "No provider or user of an interactive computer service shall be treated as the publisher or speaker of any information provided by another information content provider." The traditional interpretation of this Section of the CDA is that social media platforms, like the defendants in this case, are not liable for what users post on their sites. Over the years, this Section of the CDA has successfully shielded these companies from liability.

However, some lawyers and social media experts are beginning to view this Section with different eyes, despite assertions by the defendants of their willingness to aid in the fight against terror. That assistance, some legal and industry experts now complain, has remained limited because the social media companies have refused to share proprietary information, such as algorithms that could aid in predicting attacks.

Fourteen people were killed in December 2015, when ISIS inspired terrorists Syed Rizwan Farook and his wife, Tashfeen Malik, opened fire on a meeting of county employees at the Inland Regional Center in San Bernardino.

Big Lots Fined for Improper Waste Disposal

San Bernardino

Shiane D. Jacocks
Contributor

Big Lots Stores, Inc., often known as a cheap alternative to Walmart or Target, is now in a hot spot for environmental damage in San Bernardino.

On April 27, District Attorney Mike Ramos, 34 other California District Attorneys, and two city attorneys, announced the San Bernardino County Superior Court had ordered Big Lots Stores pay $3,507,500 in civil penalties, costs, and supplemental environmental projects.

According to Deputy District Attorney (DA) Dan Lough, Big Lots failed to properly handle hazardous waste at its stores and its Rancho Cucamonga distribution center. Instead of being properly transported to an authorized hazardous waste facility, the waste was deposited illegally in local landfills.

The hazardous waste included ignitable and corrosive liquids, toxic materials, batteries, electronic devices, and other e-waste," continued Deputy DA Lough. "In some instances, the hazardous waste was the result of overstock or expired merchandise. In others, it was the result of spills, damaged containers, and customer returns."

Prosecutors alerted Big Lots of the violations and the company was cooperative throughout the investigation.

"Thanks to the hard work and dedication of our Consumer and Environmental Protection Unit, we were able to once again hold another corporation accountable for their negligent actions and bring them into compliance with California's environmental laws," said DA Ramos.

Under the settlement, Big Lots must pay $2,017,500 in civil penalties and $336,250 to reimburse the costs of the investigation. Big Lots will also fund $350,000 to environmental projects in California, and has adopted new policies, procedures, and training programs designed to properly manage and dispose of hazardous waste.

Big Lots' officials established new policies to ensure proper waste disposal will be a top priority in the future.

From Obamacare to Trumpcare – What You Need to Know

Now that the House has narrowly passed legislation overhauling the nation's health-care system, the measure is headed to the Senate.

The bill, named the American Health Care Act, still has to pass through the Senate, where major changes were expected to be made. Republican leaders will wrestle with political and procedural challenges complicating chances for final passage.

Republican senators are signaling that their strategy will be rooted in crafting their own replacement for the Affordable Care Act. It remains unclear how closely that measure will resemble the one that narrowly passed in the House on Thursday, May 4 or whether GOP senators will resolve their stark differences.

Here's what you need to know about the current bill:

- The bill would eliminate tax penalties the Affordable Care Act put on people who don't buy coverage.
- It would erase tax increases Obamacare put on higher-earning people and the health industry.
- It would retain the ACA's requirement that family policies cover grown children until age

- 26.
- The bill would cut the Medicaid program for some low-income people and would allow states to impose work requirements on Medicaid recipients.
 - It would block federal payments to Planned Parenthood for a year.
 - The bill would transform Obamacare subsidies for millions buying insurance - largely based on people's incomes and premium costs - into tax credits that rise with

- consumers' ages.
- It would allow insurers to charge older people up to five times as much as younger.
- It would allow states to get federal waivers, freeing insurers from other Affordable Care Act coverage requirements.
- The bill would set aside more than $130 billion for high-risk pools, aimed at helping seriously ill people pay expensive premiums.
- It would allow states to permit insurers to charge more for pre-existing conditions.
- It would prohibit insurers from imposing lifetime or annual limits on coverage.
- The bill would establish "patient and state stability fund" to help states service low-income Americans.

In its review of an early version of the bill, the non-partisan Congressional Budget Office estimated that 24 million fewer people would have coverage by 2026 as compared to current law. The majority of those would have qualified for Medicaid under Obamacare. Major health insurance lobbying groups are concerned about the bill's impact on all these folks, many of whom are their customers.

Gang Stats Show Movement in the Right Direction

San Bernardino

Shiane D. Jacocks

Contributor

On April 26, San Bernardino County District Attorney Ramos released gang statistics for the first quarter.

According to Ramos, during the period of this report, his department committed gang members to serve a combined 900 years in state prison and two life-terms were assigned. In addition, 72 gang enhancements were added to charges and found true, while seven individuals were found guilty by jurors. Since the Gang Program's inception in July 2005, 11,066 cases have been filed, including two on death row and 6,682 state prison commitments.

"As District Attorney," Ramos said, "I have made the investigation and prosecution of criminal gang members in San Bernardino County a top priority. Alongside our law enforcement partners, I will continue to fight these local terrorists who terrorize our streets and prey upon our youth."

Ramos is invested in getting violence off the street, but there remains work to be done. Ramos agrees that his prosecutors and support staff "[work] every day to keep our communities safe."

"As we continue to hold the guilty accountable, we will also continue to wage another battle on the front end," Ramos said.

"I am far too aware of the strong pull gangs have on our youth, which is why we continue to work diligently with our partners to prevent our children from joining gangs in the first place."

Although some agree there has been progress, critics would like more demographic information included in these reports. They believe such information would tell a broader story of what progress was made within specific neighborhoods and communities.

Ramos received broad agreement with his statement: "We can reach our children at a young age and give them a chance to live a fulfilled life as productive members of our society."

NEWS IN BRIEF

Population Update

San Bernardino-Early Sunday morning, according to the U.S. Census Bureau (Bureau), the nation's population crossed a new threshold when the country's population exceeded 325 million.

According to the Bureau, short-term projections for the resident population of the United States use a monthly series of population estimates starting with the April 1, 2010 resident population from the 2010 Census. The projections do not include members of the U.S. armed forces overseas or other U.S. citizens residing outside the United States.

At the end of each year, a new series of population estimates from the census date forward is used to revise population estimates, including the population clock projections. Once a series of monthly projections is completed, the daily population clock numbers are determined.

California Attorney General Seeks Funds to Fight Against Trump DOJ Overreach

Shiane D. Jacocks

Last Thursday, California Attorney General Xavier Becerra stood before the Senate Budget Subcommittee on Corrections, Public Safety and the Judiciary to justify his department's request for added resources to enforce the state's new laws and protect Californians from overreach by the federal Department of Justice.

"The [California] Department of Justice (DOJ) has developed a track record of efficiently and effectively fighting for the people of our state," said Becerra, "Further resources would allow us to do even more on behalf of Californians in this unprecedented time."

He explained, "I walked into a budget at DOJ that not only had unfunded past mandates, but currently has no funding for five recently passed bills that are expected to be implemented."

According to Becerra, if the DOJ is granted the requested funding, it will be better able to budget projects such as protecting seniors' retirement, defending energy efficiency standards for consumer products, joining a multi-state action to protect students from misleading loan services, defending women's rights to access healthcare, and continuing to challenge the Trump Travel Ban which impacts California cities and separates families.

When he addressed the subcommittee, Becerra shared his observations about the budget situation he discovered when he took the oath of office a little more than a hundred days ago. "We are funded by 32 different funds," he explained. "In 2006-2007, the Department of Justice relied on the General Fund for over half (51 percent) of its budget. Today, that percentage has decreased by half to 25 percent. For comparison, over that same period, the overall General Fund has actually increased by 21 percent."

Also, according to Becerra, the decision to increasingly fund the DOJ through distinct

A MATTER OF CHOICE

California's Tumultuous Relationship with Charter Schools, Part 2 of 4

"Charter schools get overwhelmingly positive press and make a lot of claims about their success. But actually, numerous studies confirm that their achievement is indistinguishable from that of traditional public schools. Some are very successful, some are troubled and struggling, and the rest are somewhere in between just like traditional public schools."

- Change.org

Part 1 of this four-part series examined the history of charter schools and the choice they now offer parents regarding their children's education.

The charter school movement rests on the premise that competition would naturally evolve between traditional public schools and charter public schools. A general belief existed that eventually such competition would lead to a better educational experience for all children.

Twenty-five years since the introduction of public charter schools in California more and more parents have exercised their preference for charter schools as their choice for their children's education. In addition, the competition between traditional public schools and charter schools has remained intense as indicated by the plethora of legislative activity from both sides discussed in Part 1 of this series.

Perhaps the most pressing question to be asked after twenty-five years, is whether charter schools have delivered on what they promised in terms of innovation and improved, quality education.

According to an assessment by the Center for Public Education (CPE), on average students at 17 percent of the nation's charter schools performed "significantly better" than they would have, had they attended traditional public schools in their neighborhoods. On the contrary, students at 37 percent of the nation's charter schools performed significantly worse. The bottom line—results indicate a combine 83 percent of the nation's charter schools performed at or below the level of traditional public schools.

Perhaps the most encouraging results of the CPE analysis of charter schools pertained to students in charter high schools. The analysis confirmed that, "charter high schools score higher on college entrance exams (i.e., SAT or ACT) and are more likely to graduate high school and attend college than similar students in traditional public schools."

The CPE analysis provided a good snapshot of charter schools' average performance nationally, however results varied from state to state. Last month, the California Charter Schools Association (CCSA) released its fifth "Portrait of the Movement" report.

During 2015-2016, charter schools educated approximately nine percent of the state's K-12 student population. CCSA reported the state's charter schools achieved academic success across a variety of student demographics, geographies and charter school types. The agency reported seventeen percent of the state's charter schools rated in the top tenth of performance statewide and nearly a third of them performed in the top quartile.

Next week, in Part 3 of this series, The Voice/Black Voice News will look in detail at one of the state's top performing charter schools in contrast to charters performing on the opposite end of the performance spectrum.

E-Commerce Wreaks Havoc

S. E. Williams

America's retail industry is in transition as the explosion of e-commerce has pulled more customers from traditional brick and mortar stores to online shopping.

Across the country, retailers of all stripes, including Payless, K-Mart, J.C. Penny, Macy's, Sears, Ralph Lauren, Polo, Bebe, Rue21, and others, are shuttering stores. Many residents of the inland region are concerned about the potential impact of these closures on employment opportunities in the area.

Earlier this month, the brokerage firm Credit Suisse published a research report that concluded, "more than 8,600 brick and mortar stores will close their doors in 2017." This will far out-pace closures in 2008, which was, until now, the worst year on record for the industry. By comparison, 2,056 stores closed in 2016; 5,077 closed in 2015.

The Department of Labor reported a loss of nearly 30,000 retail positions in February and a similar loss of another 27,000 retail positions in March. The industry did, however, experience a slight gain of 6,000 jobs in April.

Respected economist Dr. John Husing recently spoke with The Voice/Black Voice News about the impact of so many store closures on employment opportunities in the inland region.

Husing is a research economist who has specialized in studying the region's economy since 1964. Over the years, he has produced city- and county-specific economic development strategies for local governments in the area.

Husing described the impact in the inland region as a trade-off between retail stores and the logistics and distribution centers in the area. "Because such a large percentage of sales are now occurring on the internet," he explained, "you see the loss of sales in brick and mortar stores at the same time that online purchasing is going sky high."

"The good part of this is most of those e-commerce facilities are locating in the Inland Empire," he said. "As a consequence of that, almost all the e-commerce sales for Southern California are handled by workers out here. That's a good thing." The resulting trade-off, he stressed, "Is the inland region ends up with more jobs—not less."

Regarding the loss of retail jobs, Husing added, "We are not seeing the number of retail store workers go down. It is just going up much slower than it normally would."

There is also a differential in pay between the two industries, Husing continued. "In the retail sector, people tend to make under $30,000 per year, if they work full time. In logistics and distribution operations—that includes everything from the truckers moving the goods to people who are working in the warehouses—the median pay is about $45,500 per year. So, you have both more jobs being created and at a higher pay scale." This is in clear contrast to the slow-down in retail stores he explained.

Even if you extrapolate out to the end of the year and consider projected retail store closures across the nation, expected to exceed the closures at the peak of the Great Recession, Husing is confident it will be better news for the Inland Empire.

He did, however, acknowledge a down-side to the logistics and distribution industry related to sales taxes. “The sales taxes collected in e-commerce warehouses do not go to the local cities, unless the warehouse is one of a kind in California,” he said. “If the company has more than one warehouse in the state, the one percent of retail sales taxes that traditionally went to the local city no longer does. [In this case] it goes to the state.”

As Husing explained, the state redistributes the money to all 58 counties, not just the places where warehouse facilities operate. “That is a real disadvantage for the cities in the Inland Empire.”

According to Husing, the tax distribution was set up that way due a deal cut by Governor Brown when he initially permitted Amazon to come to California.

“Amazon was not coming to California and retail sales taxes were not being collected on sales within the state that were e-commerce sales,” he explained. “The deal that was cut was the one I described. That is, the monies would go to the state and then be redistributed throughout all of the counties based on population or their overall sales.”

Husing shared that the governor’s deal harms both the Inland Empire, and the area around Tracy in Northern California, because the majority of e-commerce facilities are located in these two areas. “This is where the trucks are.

This is where the roads take the pressure. Yet, the funding is not coming to the local municipalities and counties,” he stressed.

It is highly unlikely that the communities in the inland region and the municipality of Tracy would work together to change e-commerce tax revenues distribution. “The trouble is, there are

“The California Air Resources Board (CARB) is trying to stop the growth of e-commerce in the Inland Empire,” Husing said. “It would hurt our job base because they [CARB] don’t like the pollution they allege comes off the trucks.”

He continued, “So far, we have been able to battle back against that, but, ultimately, that’s probably something we are going to see in some way or another. We stopped it from occurring when the South Coast Air Quality Management District was going to put rules in [place]. They made the decision not to, and instead chose to use incentives to get people to clean up the trucks. Their plan went to the state and CARB threw a hand-grenade in the works.”

According to Husing, CARB asked its staff to figure out how to force warehouses in the inland region to lower pollution generated by trucks coming to and from their facilities, even though, as Husing pointed out, “The warehouses don’t own the trucks or the trucking companies and they really have no power over them. It is an interesting dilemma.” He added, “We are going to have to see how that plays out. So far, it is sort of in the cards, but it hasn’t gotten here yet.”

The Credit Suisse report also noted that the continued shuttering of brick and mortar stores could result in the need for nearly one billion square feet of retail property to be repurposed across the nation.

more representatives from all the other counties. So, you are probably stuck with it the way it is,” Husing shared. “We get the employment and good paying jobs for blue collar workers, but we do lose out on the sales tax equation.”

Although the region gets the benefit of employment and blue collar jobs, there is no additional compensation for the environmental impacts the logistics and distribution industry has on the region.

fees has threatened the capacity of the department to carry out many of its core functions. "When either the legislature or a voter initiative funds the agency using a fee, that fee is often designated for a specific purpose and only that purpose. Reliance on these special funds tends to limit an agency's ability to be nimble and respond quickly to unanticipated emergencies when they arise," he asserted.

On top of this reduced flexibility, he added that several bills have been enacted which contain mandates upon DOJ, but which are missing an important component: funding. "Placing unfunded mandates on an agency and limiting its funding puts an agency like DOJ in a precarious position," Becerra stated.

"Last year," Becerra added, "No one anticipated the extent to which federal executive actions would impact the people of California and the Department of Justice. Who knew that the federal government would play so fast and loose with the law and taxpayers' pocketbooks?" he asked rhetorically.

"If it feels like the attacks are constantly coming, it's because they are. And, the hardworking women and men at DOJ are doing the best they can to serve our great state. I am proud of the great work we do at the DOJ, I am proud of what this committee has done in the past to support the mission of the Department of Justice."

Becerra stated in conclusion, "I am optimistic that together we can find a way to meet the challenges ahead and ensure that California continues to lean forward."

NEWS IN BRIEF

Gas Tax Repeal

Sacramento—Last week, the California Secretary of State reported that the California Repeal Gas Tax and Fees Increase Initiative as filed.

Representative Travis Allen (R-Huntington Beach), who filed the repeal initiative, said, "Jerry Brown's decision to push through the largest gas tax increase in California's history without the approval of voters demonstrated a complete disregard for ordinary Californians. This ballot initiative will correct Brown's failure and allow the people of California to decide for themselves if they want to raise their taxes."

The state legislature has already referred a constitutional amendment to the ballot for the June 5, 2018 election that would create a constitutional requirement aimed at ensuring revenue from fees and taxes generated by SB1 be used only for transportation-related projects.

SB1 will increase the state's gasoline tax, diesel fuel tax, create an annual transportation improvement fee, and an annual zero-emission vehicles fee, among other changes. SB1 will raise money to repair the state's crumbling infrastructure and is expected to generate an estimated $52.4 billion between 2017 and 2027.

1872 Freedman's Bureau established in 1865 were shut down.

1882 Chinese Exclusion Act bans all immigration of Chinese laborers. Subsequent laws denied immigration and citizenship to persons from many Asian nations, and many state laws denied non-citizens the rights to own property.

1896 Plessy v. Ferguson—United States Supreme Court rules that “Separate but Equal” is lawful.

1908 Founding of the National Association of Real Estate Boards, later the National Association of REALTORS®, which allows local boards to limit membership based on race or gender.

1917 Buchanan v. Warley—United States Supreme Court outlaws zoning based on race. Emergence of racially restrictive covenants.

1924 Code of Ethics states that a REALTOR® should never be instrumental in introducing into a neighborhood a character of property or occupancy, members of any race or nationality, or any individuals whose presence will clearly be detrimental to property values in that neighborhood.

1924 United States Supreme Court in Village of Euclid v. Amber Realty upheld zoning based on keeping land uses separate.

1926 Corrigan v. Buckley—United States Supreme Court rejected a legal challenge to racially restrictive covenants.

1934 National Housing Act and Residential Security Maps had the result of denying financing in older urban areas and predominantly Black neighborhoods.

1942 President Roosevelt signs executive order interning Japanese American citizens on the west coast, resulting in the loss of property, homes and businesses.

1943 Stuyvesant Town housing project in New York approved for development with the exclusion of Black residents.

1947 African American real estate brokers form the National Associations of Real Estate Brokers with the mission of “Democracy in Housing”.

1948 Shelley v. Kraemer—United States Supreme Court ends enforcement of racially restrictive covenants.

1950 National Committee Against Discrimination in Housing formed.

1956 Interstate Highway Act paves way for urban highways often sued to physically separate White and Black communities and destroyed many African American business districts.

1957 New York becomes the first city to ban discrimination in private housing.

1959 Colorado becomes the first state to ban discrimination in private housing. By 1965, sixteen states had laws against public market housing discrimination.

1962 President Kennedy bans discrimination in housing funded by the federal government.

1963 California Rumford Act bans all housing discrimination in publicly funded housing and in all housing in buildings of five units or more.

1966 Chicago Freedom Movement and Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. bring a focus to housing segregation and the need for open housing.

1967 United States Supreme Court finds that a referendum, supported by the real estate industry, to repeal the Rumford Act violated the Civil Rights Act 1866.

1967 National Committee Against Discrimination in Housing conducts audit to document fair housing/discriminatory treatment.

1968 Fair Housing Act adopted less than a week after the assassination of Dr. Martin Luther King Jr.

1968 United States Supreme Court in Jones v. Mayer ruled that the Civil Rights Act of 1866 applied to discrimination in the private real estate market.

1974 Fair Housing Act amended to include protections based on gender.

1975 NAR and HUD adopt a Voluntary Affirmative Marketing Agreement calling for extensive training of REALTORS® and cooperation between REALTOR® Boards and local fair housing organizations.

1985 Congress passes legislation, with the support of NAR, establishing the Fair Housing Initiatives Program funding testing of fair housing complaints.

1988 President Reagan signs the Fair Housing Amendments Act into law. Adopted with NAR support, it adds fair housing protections based on disability and familial status and establishes an administrative enforcement process for fair housing complaints.

2008 NAR participates in a Fair Housing Commission which calls for stronger enforcement of HUD's Affirmatively Furthering Fair Housing Obligations.

2009 NAR calls for Fair Housing Protections based on sexual orientation, amending its code of ethics.

2013 NAR further amends the code of ethics to include protections based on gender identity.

2016 NAR calls for changes in the Fair Housing Act to prohibit discrimination based on sexual orientation and gender identity.
