Ambassador Andrew Young Speaks Out

Cheryl Brown
Contributor

"Business is done socially. A Spanish person can do a lot of business with countries in South America; Japanese can do business with Japan and other Asian countries; and in Africa, they respond to Blacks. Especially when the Black has gone to Harvard or Yale and they are schoolmates."

United Nations Ambassador Andrew Young made these comments in early May 1978 during a press conference. Also, while in Los Angeles, Young addressed attendees at the Brotherhood Crusade's $125 per plate dinner held to honor business and community development leaders.

During his presentation at the event, Young shared that President Jimmy Carter has appointed one of the honorees, C. Robert Kemp, Executive Director of the Inter-governmental Agency on Minority Business, and expects him to triple procurements for minorities in business.

Young was asked about the African racial situation and he said he hoped the invasion of Angola by South Africa was not the beginning of a race war. He was also asked about being a point man for Carter. Young responded, "I designated in myself that role. Carter is not losing ground in the Black community. From the beginning, he has included more Blacks and Browns in his administration than ever before—so many people that Blacks don't know who they are. The success of the Carter administration is to integrate Blacks, Browns, and women into the government."

A question was also raised as to whether children in Africa are better educated? He answered, "Not better educated, but the motivation is there." He continued, "I've never had children in America ask me to get them a pen-pal so they can study English or ask for a book about Martin Luther King as they have in Africa." Young said he agrees with Jesse Jackson: the [opportunity for] education is here, we should inspire and motivate our own students.

Andrew Young resigned as U.N. Ambassador in August 1979, over controversy that stemmed from an unauthorized meeting with a representative of the Palestine Liberation Organization (PLO). He was elected Mayor of Atlanta and served as the city's Mayor from 1992 to 1990.

Haley Enters Mayor's Race

On August 3, 1977, Eric Haley, a former Riverside City Councilman who was active in city and regional government, announced his plans to run for Mayor of the City of Riverside.

When Haley announced his candidacy he said, "This campaign for mayor comes at a critical time in our city's history. The next mayor of Riverside will have a unique opportunity to help guide a city that wants to preserve its agricultural heritage in the midst of rapid growth."

He continued, "The mayor's office has a tremendous potential for leadership. The kind of leadership that comes from being an office of all citizens, not just of a ward or district. This office must be able to lead at this critical time, to develop direction for the city council and to serve as a communications center for all people. I believe in grass roots democracy. I really want to see local government work and work for everyone. And, I intend to see it work for everyone."

Haley was defeated in his bid for mayor by Ab Brown who eventually served three terms as Riverside's mayor.

Willie Brown Makes History - Wins Fifth Term as Speaker

Willie Brown made history in 1988, when he was elected to serve a 5th unprecedented term as Speaker of the California State Assembly.

Assemblyman Steve Clute (1982-1992) and Riverside residents helped beat back an organized effort to unseat Brown. Members of the Black community, and those in the White and Hispanic community who agreed, rallied to the occasion. They circulated petitions and made hundreds of calls to Clute's offices in Riverside, Indio, and Sacramento in support of the Speaker.

In the end, Brown was re-elected. "He won and that's all that counts," said businessman Marion Black.

Clute told Black Voice News that the support for Brown was about 50-50. He had just as many calls for, as against; however, those in support additionally turned in petitions and wrote notes in support of the Speaker.

Clute also took issue with Republican Ross Johnson of La Habra, who used the tactic of running a newspaper ad to "purposely tie up our district office," he shared. The ad stated, "Pull the Plug on Willie Brown."

Clute very angrily said Johnson does not support the issues of the people of the Inland Empire. He votes for only 20 to 30 percent of my bills, Willie on the other hand supports us 100 percent of the time. "It is good to see the speaker back in there, now we can get on with the important issues facing the legislature," Clute said.

Always the master politician, after serving 15 years as Speaker of the California Assembly, in June 1995, Democrat Willie Brown Jr. not only chose his own successor but chose a little known female Republican politician to replace him—59-year-old Orange County representative, Doris Allen. In addition, he managed to facilitate rule changes that made him "Speaker Emeritus" until he completed his bid for mayor of San Francisco. After leaving the California Assembly, Brown was elected and served two terms as the Mayor of San Francisco.

Blacks Migrating from LA to Riverside County

Agustin Gurza
Contributor

For the first time since they began their depression-era migration from the South, more Blacks are moving out of Los Angeles than are moving in, and many are choosing Riverside County as their new home.

A study of 1980 census data showed that the traditional migration of Blacks to Los Angeles from places like Texas and Louisiana had slowed. Researchers predict that new data collected in 1990 will show that the country's second largest city is now losing more Blacks than it gains. This reflected a trend already established in large urban areas of the east and Midwest.

In 1987, data indicated that once Blacks settled in the inland area, they were more likely than Whites to stay. For example, in the period 1975 to 1980, Blacks comprised about 5.3 percent of those who entered the two-county area, but only about 4.3 percent of those who left. Whites, however, comprised a high percentage of those who left (88.1 percent) than those who arrived (86.5 percent). "In relative terms, there are fewer Blacks leaving than Whites in a given year," said University of California Riverside Professor Paul Wright. "Blacks stay put more."

During this period, the Black community of the two counties was growing at a somewhat faster rate than the White population, due in part to greater net migration and higher birth rates.

"The Black population as a percent of the overall population is increasing slowly over time," Wright said in 1987. "But that doesn't mean that Riverside County is going to become Black dominated at all. Far from it. . . The county simply is attractive to Blacks the same way it is attractive to everybody else."

According to the research, Blacks, driven out of the city by crime and other urban ills, were (and are) lured to the inland region by affordable housing and a family-oriented lifestyle.

By mid June 2014, Census Bureau estimates showed that the African American population in San Bernardino County had dropped between 2012 and 2013 for the first time in decades. In addition, growth in the Black population of Riverside County was slower than in previous years. The story that appeared in the Black Voice News on October 8, 1987, was reprinted from The Press Enterprise. This is a partial reprint of that publication.

Education a Factor in Preventing Dementia

One-third of cases of dementia worldwide could potentially be prevented through better management of lifestyle factors such as education, smoking, hypertension, depression, and hearing loss over the course of a lifetime, according to a new report.

We’re all forgetful at times, regardless of our age and mental health. However, as we age, our risk of dementia increases, and by the age of 85 almost 35-percent of those in your age group will be afflicted with this degenerative disorder that causes gradually and worsening memory loss and mental skills.

Across the globe, about 47 million people were living with Alzheimer's and other forms of dementia in 2015. That number is projected to triple by the year 2050 as the population ages. Health care costs associated with dementia are enormous, with an estimated $818 billion price tag in 2015.

The new study, published in The Lancet and conducted by the first Lancet Commission on Dementia Prevention and Care, brought together 24 international experts to review existing dementia research and provide recommendations for treating and preventing the devastating condition.

There is currently no drug treatment to prevent or cure dementia. But the report highlights the impact of non-drug interventions and identifies nine modifiable risk factors through various stages of life — beginning in childhood — that affect the likelihood of developing dementia.

To reduce the risk, factors that make a difference include getting an education (staying in school until over the age of 15); reducing high blood pressure, obesity and diabetes; avoiding or treating hearing loss in mid-life; not smoking; getting physical exercise; and reducing depression and social isolation later in life. About 35 percent of dementia cases are attributable to these factors, the analysis found. Removing them could then theoretically prevent 1 in 3 cases.

Of the nine risk factors, the researchers identified the first as increasing education in early life, which the report estimated could reduce the total number of dementia cases by 8 percent if all people worldwide continued their education until over the age of 15.

The researchers note that not completing secondary education could raise dementia risk by reducing what's referred to as "cognitive reserve." It's believed that education and other mentally stimulating tasks help the brain strengthen its networks so it can continue to function at a higher level even if it starts to decline later in life.

CELEBRATING 45 YEARS

1990s

Pretoria, South Africa – February 15, 1990

Mandela Released After 27 Years

“He’s Free! Nelson R. Mandela, the inspirational leader of the Black rebellion against apartheid in South Africa is a free man today,” the article began. Mandela was released on February 1, 1990, after spending more than 27 years in a South African prison.

Calling it the end of a long chapter, Frederick W. DeKlerk, then President of South Africa, said he believed Mandela - jailed for plotting to overthrow the government - was committed to a peaceful solution.

DeKlerk also legalized the African National Congress - a South African political party and black nationalist organization - and about sixty other banned political groups, freed leading Black prisoners, and pledged to negotiate a new constitution.

The South African government’s decision to release Mandela was triggered by years of mounting worldwide pressure to end apartheid—the South African policy of suppression, segregation and discrimination against its Black African majority.

Mandela’s arrest in 1962 resulted in his conviction and life sentence. During the years he spent incarcerated in the country’s Robben Island Prison, he became the primary unifying force in what had historically been the deeply divided politics of South Africa’s 27 million Blacks.

In 1964 Mandela said at his trial, “I have fought against White domination and I have fought against Black domination. I have cherished the ideal of a democratic and free society... it is an ideal for which I hope to live... but if need be, it is an ideal for which I am prepared to die.”

When he was freed twenty-seven later, he said something similar: “Now is the time to intensify the struggle on all fronts... to relax now would be a mistake which generations to come will not be able to forgive.”

Mandela was a man of almost mythic proportions among South African Blacks. His name became a rallying cry for young people born years after he was sent to prison.

Mandela’s incarceration did not make him a “non-person.” On the contrary, his self-sacrifice and beliefs made him a leader, considered a legend by admirers around the world.

Mandela was elected president of South Africa in 1994 and served until 1999. The internationally heralded anti-apartheid revolutionary, politician, and philanthropist passed away in 2013 at the age of 95.

Pasadena, CA-December 7, 1995 America Says No to Reparations

A U.S. federal appeals court ruled in December 1995 that Blacks cannot sue the federal government for damages or an apology for slavery and racial discrimination. In a 3-0 ruling, the 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals reached the same conclusion as dozens of lower-court judges who had previously considered similar reparations claims.

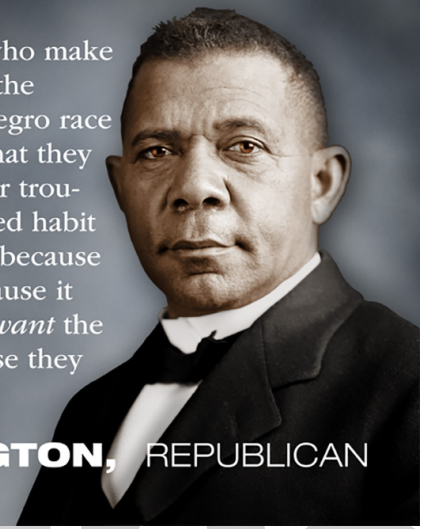

In the case, attorneys from the Lawyers' Committee for Civil Rights argued that the 13th Amendment to the U.S. Constitution, abolishing slavery, also authorized federal courts to intervene when congressional action perpetuates the effects of slavery.

An opinion by Judge Pamela Rymer asserted the seven plaintiffs could not seek damages for the enslavement of their ancestors, could not require the courts to correct alleged discriminatory acts by Congress, and claimed the plaintiffs failed to point to specific government actions that violated their rights.

Individuals who complain about historic or current societal discrimination, Rymer continued, lack the standing and legal authority, "to pursue claims in court arising out of the government's failure to do right as (they see) it."

“There is a class of colored people who make a business of keeping the troubles, the wrongs, and the hardships of the Negro race before the public. Having learned that they are able to make a living out of their troubles, they have grown into the settled habit of advertising their wrongs – partly because they want sympathy and partly because it pays. Some of these people do not want the Negro to lose his grievances, because they do not want to lose their jobs.”

Dubrovnik, Croatia (AP)-April 14, 1996

Brown's Plane Crashes Over Bosnia

On April 4, 1996, the Black Voice News (AP) reported that while searching for the wreckage of a plane believed to have carried US Commerce Secretary Ron Brown, police in Dubrovnik, Croatia found the aircraft's tail and four bodies.

Brown, age 54 at the time, had been traveling in the region with a dozen top American executives exploring business potential in the Balkans.

Although there were initially conflicting reports regarding the location of the crash site, Croatian state television eventually stated the tail of the plane had been found on land along the coast, between the Adriatic port and nearby Cilipi airport. In total, 34 passengers and crew lost their lives in the crash.

The crash was a sad ending to the life and career of an African American leader and powerful politician who was plagued with controversy through most of his career, both in and out of government, related to his connections to a controversial Haitian family of dictators, the Duvaliers, and related to the executives he selected to accompany him on international business explorations. Brown was a magnet for controversy.

Brown was a millionaire who had worked as a civil rights activist before he became a well-known and highly paid Washington lawyer and lobbyist. As a young lawyer, he had worked for the Urban League and spent time as chief counsel to the US Senate Judiciary Committee. In 1980, he supported the presidential bid of Senator Edward Kennedy, and in 1981, Brown became one of the first Black partners of the politically powerful Washington D. C. law firm, Patton, Boggs & Blow, which at the time was closely linked to the Democratic Party.

Brown was named deputy chairman of the Democratic National Committee in 1982, and in 1989 he assumed chairmanship of the organization. After President Clinton's election in 1992, he was named the nation's first African American Secretary of Commerce.

After Brown's death, President Clinton established the privately funded Ron Brown Award for corporate leadership and responsibility.

New Orleans, LA- November 10, 2005

Have You Seen Jeremy, Justin and Toni? Nearly 2,000 Children of Katrina and Rita Still Missing

Hurricane Katrina hit the Gulf Coast early on the morning of August 29, 2005, followed within days by Hurricane Rita.

November 1st was All Saints Day in New Orleans. The annual pilgrimage to clean graves and bring flowers to the dead is a defining tradition in the heavily Catholic Crescent City, known for its above ground tombs.

In a city where so many of the living have not returned since Hurricane Katrina, four-year-old Kimbre Fellows lights candles around her 6-year-old cousin Allison's gravesite in La Fontaine Hilltop Cemetery. "She went down in the water. She's in heaven now," Kimbre said. In some ways, Kimbre is lucky, Allison's fate is known, carved into Katrina's tragic legacy.

For the family and friends of Jeremy, Justin, and Toni Jackson, All Saints Day is another day of solace in silence and waiting. "They disappeared without a trace," says a friend and classmate of Toni. The Jackson children were last known to be with their mother in New Orleans. They had not been heard from since Hurricane Katrina hit.

Jeremy, Justin and Toni were three of the nearly 2,000 children still missing nearly three months after the devastating hurricanes hit. Katrina wreaked havoc on New Orleans' 9th Ward when the levees broke. The 9th Ward was home to a large segment of the city's African American population.

The publication FiveThirtyEight reported in August 2015, ten years after the storms, that the nation still did not know how many people died in Katrina and its aftermath.

According to the report, uncertainty about the death toll was evident in the disparate number reported by the media. For example, a local news station in Georgia reported 1,200 deaths; AccuWeather—1,800; the Insurance Journal—more than 1,800; The New Orleans Times-Picayune—1,833; a local news station in western Michigan—1,836.

What is known is that in August 2015, ten years after the storms, at least thirty bodies recovered after the hurricane remained unidentified, in addition to at least eighty-three others that rest, unidentified or unclaimed, in a New Orleans cemetery.

There is still no way to know how many victims, including children, of Katrina remain uncounted.

Forty-five years ago, a group of African American students on the campus of the University of California, Riverside (UCR) grew frustrated because their stories were not being told. That frustration gave birth to the Black Voice News.

The UCR students understood then what has remained true to this day: there is power in raising even one voice when everyone around you is silent.

Hardy Brown Sr. and his wife, Cheryl Brown, embraced that truth when they took the mantle of the Black Voice News in 1977 and raised the publication to new heights. The torch has since been passed to a new generation of Browns who continue the legacy under the stewardship of Paulette Brown-Hinds, PhD.

For 45 years, the Black Voice News has told the stories of the inland area's African American community and the Inland Empire community at-large. During those years, not only has the publication told the stories of a people, it has kept abreast of the rapidly changing advances in media technology. As recently noted by Brown-Hinds, “We believe, as a media company celebrating our 45th anniversary this year, that these new technologies have not made us weaker, they have helped us become stronger.”

For decades, the paper has touched the hearts and minds of hundreds of thousands of readers and given “voice” to the community while expanding its scope of civic involvement. Rebranded in 2016, as Voice Media Ventures, it has maintained collaboration with educational institutions on the organization's celebrated Underground Railroad Tours and sought a new venture - “Mapping Black California” - in partnership with community leaders and Jack Dangermond, President of Esri, the world's leading mapping technology company headquartered in Redlands.

In addition, Voice Media Ventures has established a performing arts and digital media company, Hindsight Productions, which is in the process of finalizing its first release, My Name is Myeisha.

For nearly half a century, the Black Voice News has kept its focus on the pulse of the community. It has raised awareness on issues ranging from politics and public policy to poverty, from disparities in education to the quest for full employment, from police violence and gang violence to visions of brotherhood and hope for a better tomorrow, from the continuous battle for civil and human rights to the election of America's first Black President, from despair wrought by the violence of terrorism to the wellspring of courage manifested when a community comes together in strength and defiance of fear.

In an industry where small community publications must fight for survival, this publication has not merely survived, it has thrived, largely due to the support of its readers. It is their support that keeps the publication striving toward excellence.

This week, The Voice/Black Voice News invites you to look back at the stories that impacted the Inland Empire over the last 45 years. Please join us in our quest to reach one million readers by sharing this article on Facebook, Twitter, or LinkedIn. ## Making History

Black Voice Unveils Booker T. Washington Bust at Mission Inn

A single white dove representing the life of a great man, followed by a symbolic flock of doves representing the people whose lives have been touched, were released as a remarkable likeness of the educator and founder of Tuskegee University, Booker T. Washington, was unveiled at the historic Mission Inn Hotel and Spa during a ceremony on April 3, 2004. Nearly 200 people attended the unveiling and brunch that followed.

The unveiling was organized to commemorate the 90th anniversary of a visit Washington made to the Inn on March 23, 1914, at the invitation of its founder, Frank Miller. The event coincided with the National Park Service's Underground Railroad Network to Freedom Program.

The unveiling fulfilled a dream of Black Voice News publishers Hardy and Cheryl Brown to someday mark the occasion so the story would not die. The dream was fueled in part by the memory of the late Edith Washington Johnson, a friend of the Browns and one of Washington's granddaughters, who came to Riverside for a celebration in 2001.

The Inn will never be the same, owed to the community members who donated to erect the bust. They can now feel a part of the historic and iconic hotel, which, in so many ways, defines the city. The bust not only honors Washington, but will also remind everyone of the life of Frank Miller, who during our country's turbulent years of Jim Crow bucked the establishment and invited Washington to be his guest at the Mission Inn.

According to reports of the day, the 1914 visit was unlike any other. The community buzzed with activities because Washington came to town. He came for everyone, evidenced by his visit to the Second Baptist Church in the Black community and to the First Congregational Church, as well as the Mission Inn. During that visit, he spoke at the Contemporary Club in Redlands, Claremont's Pomona College, and at the Bethel Congregational Church in Ontario.

"It's a wonderful bust of my grandfather," said Margaret Washington Clifford as she and her sister Gloria Washington Jackson joined the youngest of the family, sisters Jenna and Nicole Douglas Morris, Douglas Washington Morris II, and sculptor Bernard Edmonds, in pulling off the veil. Seventeen Washington family members, most of them direct descendants, came to be part of the celebration, traveling from Atlanta, Denver, and northern and southern California.

Brown declared, "It's a great day in Riverside. It's a great day in the Inland Empire."

Help Us Conserve Energy This Summer, SoCal!

Did you know that natural gas is the single largest source for electricity generation in California?

Because of the limited availability of natural gas locally this summer, there's less natural gas available to produce electricity. That means there may not be enough electricity to keep up with demand.

That's why we need your help!

Here's how you can reduce energy use in your home:

- Set your air conditioning to 78°F when you're home and turn it off when away.
- Cool your home using fans and close your curtains.
- Turn off all unnecessary lights and appliances.
- Avoid using major appliances, like the washing machine or dishwasher, during the afternoon and early evening.

Thanks for helping conserve, SoCal!

POP UP PARTIES
All Summer Long

It's our anniversary...

In the past 45 years since a group of students founded the VOICE, we have witnessed some of the most radical changes and advancements in the world of media. We have gone from typesetting and printing presses to desktop publishing to digital platforms and social media. But as we have seen with the creation and dissemination of fake news and blatant propaganda, thoughtful and truthful news and information continues to play a vital role in our society. We believe, as a community media company celebrating our 45th anniversary in July, that these new technologies have not made us weaker, they have helped us become stronger. Whether it's publishing award-winning news articles and columns on significant regional and national issues weekly, producing independent films, mounting photography exhibits that tell our story in vivid imagery, or providing leadership in outreach campaigns for the public good, "community" remains our core value.

Defending Democracy: 50 Years Later, the Civil Rights Act Remains Embattled

Editor's Note: In honor of the 50th anniversary of the Civil Rights Act (CRA), VOICE staff chose to analyze the legacy of the CRA and re-examine why the landmark legislation is relevant and must be protected. This editorial is a retrospective of the CRA that provides context to the political landscape 50 years ago in comparison to today's issues.

It wasn't too long ago that America was on the wrong side of history. 50 years later, lessons of the past are being re-learned as the rights that minorities painstakingly earned on July 2, 1964 are again challenged.

Jim Crow is no more, but for segregation to meet its demise, civil rights activists dedicated years of energy to relentless strife to demonstrate their will and be included in civic participation. Their argument was clear: all men are equal under God, and African-Americans are worthy, contributing U.S. citizens who should not be segregated or discriminated against anywhere, including at the polls.

President John F. Kennedy was an early proponent of the Civil Rights Act. During those years, America was being torn apart in the Jim Crow South, where civil unrest devolved into violent clashes and deadly confrontations. During this period, legislation made its way through Congress, finding support on both sides of the aisle. The CRA had more than its fair share of detractors who amplified and validated the opposition's dispute with the pending legislation. However, President Lyndon B. Johnson, undeterred, ultimately signed the Civil Rights Act of 1964. The CRA also laid the foundation for the Voting Rights Act of 1965.

Next to the Emancipation Proclamation, Johnson's stamp of approval on both acts was the most significant and sweeping landmark legislation in Black American history. Gone were the shuttered polls when Black voters would arrive. Gone were the senseless competency tests. (Remember the jelly bean test? Black voters were often subjected to a demeaning impromptu quiz at their polling office that would require them to calculate the number of jelly beans in a jar.)

Many conservatives now want to walk Black America back in time. They cannot win all of their battles in court, so they seek legislative avenues. They rely on code words such as "urban" and "low-income" to infer Black and Hispanic. They identify their targets with far-reaching mediums that relate to the minority circumstance. Step by step, they have gained ground, but the blueprint designed by our predecessors cannot easily be undone.

It's no secret our Congress is more polarized than ever, sometimes evenly divided along party lines because the spirit of cooperation is diminished. Despite this, former President Barack Obama and former U.S. Attorney General Holder pledged to move forward and find ways to protect citizens' access to the vote using every law possible. But what will the African-American constituency do? There is an endangered legacy to protect, one that required tears and bloodshed to materialize. Organizations like the Congressional Black Caucus are only so strong – and relevant – without the guidance and input of Black voters. Standing on the eve of Independence Day, we should "let freedom ring" and reap the joys of what our forefathers have left for us. That includes the equal opportunity, regardless of color, to shape our world and reclaim every single right intended for us.

In July 2013, the U.S. Supreme Court struck down the heart of the 1965 Voting Rights Act. With the election of President Donald J. Trump in 2016, and his focus on alleged voter fraud, voting rights continue to come under attack.
