Growing Hate in California

I wrote about hate crimes three years ago. It was July 2014, and using the threat of illegal immigration to attract new members, the Loyal White Knights of the Ku Klux Klan had left recruitment fliers in an Orange County neighborhood. It was part of a nationwide recruitment push for new members in preparation for an early August rally to be held in North Carolina, my dad's home state.

At the time, according to the Southern Poverty Law Center there were 939 active hate groups in the United States, 77 of them in California. And although the SPLC reports that nativist extremist groups have declined since reaching their peak in 2010, overall hate groups have increased. And now they report there are currently 917 hate groups currently operating in the United States, the number in California has increased to 79.

The number of hate crimes has increased as well. In a report released last month, the California Attorney General confirmed back-to-back increases in the state for the first time since 1996. According to the Center for the Study of Hate & Extremism at CSU San Bernardino the number of hate crimes in California increased from 837 in 2015 to 931 in 2016. And African-Americans are the "single largest group" targeted for hate crimes in the United States.

As part of a partnership with New America Media we will be tracking these hate crimes, and based on data analysis and what experts have identified as best practices, we'll report on how to best combat them. We believe that by better understanding what motivates the perpetrators of hate crimes, we can move toward solving the problem.

Sperm Counts Drop Precipitously in Western Nations

Riverside—New Science magazine recently reported a study has again confirmed observations made by smaller studies in recent years “that there has been a steep decline in sperm counts for men living in richer nations.”

According to the report, to complete the analysis, data was pooled from 185 separate studies. The investigators found a 59.3 per cent drop in the average amount of sperm produced by men from North America, Europe, Australia and New Zealand between the years 1973 and 2011. Interestingly, this pattern did not exist in South America, Asia, and Africa, although fewer studies have been conducted in those countries.

When the report was published, Hagai Levine of the Hebrew University of Jerusalem, who worked on the analysis, said, “Given the importance of sperm counts for male fertility and human health, this study is an urgent wake-up call for researchers and health authorities around the world to investigate the causes of the sharp, ongoing drop in sperm count.”

Another member of the analysis group, Shanna Swan of the Icahn School of Medicine at Mount Sinai, New York, noted, “The fact that the decline is seen in Western countries strongly suggests that chemicals in commerce are playing a causal role in this trend.”

President Shocks Nation, Military with Tweet Banning Transgender Soldiers

Washington D.C.

In what many viewed as a left-field attempt at obfuscation to distract from the relentless dysfunction of his leadership coupled with mounting focus on his campaigns links to Russia, President Donald Trump sent one of his salacious tweets last week to suddenly and without notice ban transgender people from serving in the U.S. military.

Trump's efforts were another swipe at former President Obama's era of progress on issues related to human and equal rights for LGBTQ Americans.

It was widely reported that the president's action was intended to serve as red meat for his ultra-conservative base at a time when he is starting to show some slippage among them in the polls.

Not only was the president's tweet met with staunch criticism from Democrats, it received frustrated push back from many legislators in his own party, a number with military experience, notably former Republican presidential candidate Senator John McCain of Arizona, who called the president's action a mistake.

"I think they realize they made a mistake," McCain said during a CNN interview last week. "I think generally speaking, it's accepted you consult the Secretary of Defense before you make a decision that has to do with defending the nation." These comments followed earlier critical remarks by the senator regarding the president's tweet. "There is no reason to force service members who are able to fight, train, and deploy, to leave the military, regardless of their gender identity," McCain said earlier in the week. "We should all be guided by the principle that any American who wants to serve our country and is able to meet the standards should have the opportunity to do so."

In a statement to the press, California Senator Kamala Harris said, "The President's decision to force transgender individuals out of the military is discriminatory, wrong, and un-American." She continued, "We should not punish or turn away courageous people who are willing to risk their lives to serve our country—we should embrace them."

In response to the President's surprising tweet, Gen. Joseph F. Dunford Jr., the chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, issued a letter that stated the nation's policy on who is allowed to serve in the nation's military would not change until the White House sent new rules to the Defense Department and the secretary issued new guidelines. As of Monday afternoon, the President had yet to issue those guidelines.

The fact that Trump tweeted his intention to discriminate against transgender individuals on the anniversary of the desegregation of the nation's military did not go unnoticed. "As we mark the desegregation of our armed forces," Harris noted, "I stand with our transgender service members and all those who selflessly defend our country."

Second Quarter Update—Gang Activity in San Bernardino County

San Bernardino

Last week, San Bernardino County District Attorney Mike Ramos released the county's official Second Quarter Gang Statistics.

According to Ramos, for the period April 1 through June 31, the District Attorney's Office filed 149 gang related cases. It also secured 170 state prison commitments amounting to 1,086 years of state prison time and five life sentences. Also, according to Ramos, 89 of the cases involved gang enhancements that were determined to be true. Seven defendants were found guilty by jurors.

Also, during the second quarter, Adelanto gang member James Ellis was sentenced to death for the 2009 double murder of 28-year-old Ealy Davis Jr. and 26-year-old Shameka Reliford.

Last October, a jury found Ellis guilty of two counts of First Degree Murder and one count of Active Participation in a Criminal Street Gang. Jurors also found true the special circumstance allegations of lying in wait, murder during the commission of a robbery, murder while an active participant in a criminal street gang, and multiple murder, which made Ellis eligible for the death penalty.

On November 23, 2009, Ellis plotted with three other men and a woman to rob Ealy Davis. That day, Forrest Taylor, William Jacobs, Joseph Bowen, and Sandra Smith gathered at Smith's residence in Adelanto and discussed a desire to acquire drugs and money. One suggested robbing a drug dealer. During the planning process, Ellis produced a handgun and showed it to the others.

Smith then suggested they rob Davis, a drug dealer she knew. Smith knew Davis because he was dating her half-sister, Shameka Reliford.

Obamacare Remains Intact – Now can it be repaired?

Republicans have failed to repeal and replace the Affordable Care Act. Now, can it be repaired?

The seven-year-old law has survived Supreme Court decisions and aggressive attempts to extinguish it by Republicans in Congress and the White House. But even people who rely on its coverage agree that it still has big problems. The question for the roughly 20 million Americans who buy their own health coverage — and for millions of others who remain uninsured — is what can realistically be done to address their main concerns: high prices and lack of choice in many parts of the country.

The politics are exceedingly tricky in a divided and dysfunctional Washington, but economists, insurers, doctors and health policy experts across the political spectrum agree that immediately addressing basic shortcomings in the existing system would go a long way toward making the law more effective and financially stable.

There is widespread agreement that the first order of business is to calm very jittery insurance markets. Guarantee continued funding to reimburse insurers for waiving deductibles and co-payments for low-income customers, as the health law requires companies to do. The Trump administration has threatened to stop making the payments.

If these so-called cost-sharing reductions are not paid for the remainder of the year or in future years, people will see premiums go up by nearly 20 percent to cover them, according to the Kaiser Family Foundation.

While insurers are hopeful that Congress will pass legislation guaranteeing the payments, they want a commitment to support the insurance markets. Are they going to sabotage the market or are they going to help the market?

The fundamental problem that many insurance customers face is sky-high deductibles or premiums that are simply out of reach. One of the best quick fixes that is not controversial is reinsurance. That would involve the government helping insurers pay for the sickest, most expensive people, whose costs can drive up premiums in places where there are not enough healthy customers to balance them out.

If there is one health care issue that both

Republicans and Democrats have vowed to fix, it is the rising cost of prescription drugs. But there is little agreement on the best way to fix the problem. Democratic proposals, such as allowing Medicare to directly negotiate drug prices with pharmaceutical companies and allowing cheaper drugs to be imported from overseas, are fiercely opposed by the drug industry, as well as Republicans in Congress. And though Mr. Trump has criticized the industry, his administration has not yet put forward a plan to address the issue.

There is bipartisan support for measures that would speed more generic drugs to market, including a proposal that would crack down on brand-name manufacturers that bar generic companies from gaining access to the samples they need to make copycat versions.

Although the Affordable Care Act has greatly expanded access to coverage — the nation's uninsured rate fell to 10.9 percent last year, according to Gallup, from 17.1 percent in late 2013 — many Americans remain shut out.

Settlement Reached in Torture Claims Against San Bernardino Deputies

San Bernardino

The initial reports were shocking and conjured memories of Iraqi prisoners tortured by American guards at Abu Ghraib—reports that riveted the world's attention in 2004.

This time, however, the allegations of torture involved San Bernardino County Sheriff deputies, accused of perpetrating similar atrocities against inmates at the West Valley Detention Center in Rancho Cucamonga.

The deputies alleged abuse was worsened by the fact they also appeared to throw out the rule book about being “innocent until proven guilty,” evidenced by reports that indicated some of the abused inmates were still pending trial when the incidents occurred. Although other inmates involved had already been found guilty and were serving sentences, it should not have mattered—they were sentenced to time, not torture.

According to inmate complaints, for years, a group of deputies sought their own form of justice against them. Alleged torture endured by these inmates exceeded the boundaries of human decency—some had shotguns placed at their heads, some had their arms hand-cuffed over their heads for extended periods, some were tased even in their genitals, others complained they were sodomized, some were bombarded with pepper spray while locked in their cells, and loud music was blasted over the facility's loud speakers at night which impeded their ability to sleep.

When the allegations of torture at the West Valley Detention Center became public in 2014, inmates at the facility filed five federal lawsuits and as many as seven deputies were fired.

Last week, however, a group of thirty-two current and former inmates involved in those suits were awarded more than $2.5 million for having endured ongoing abuse and torture while in custody. Under the terms of the settlement, the lawsuits were dismissed.

Despite the settlement, there continues to be an ongoing FBI investigation into whether the civil rights of these inmates were violated.

It's our anniversary...

In the past 45 years since a group of students founded the VOICE, we have witnessed some of the most radical changes and advancements in the world of media. We have gone from typesetting and printing presses to desktop publishing to digital platforms and social media. But as we have seen with the creation and dissemination of fake news and blatant propaganda, thoughtful and truthful news and information continues to play a vital role in our society. We believe, as a community media company celebrating our 45th anniversary in July, that these new technologies have not made us weaker, they have helped us become stronger. Whether it's publishing award-winning news articles and columns on significant regional and national issues weekly, producing independent films, mounting photography exhibits that tell our story in vivid imagery, or providing leadership in outreach campaigns for the public good, “community” remains our core value.

Hate crimes in California increase two years in a row

Part 1 of 2

On Monday, July 3, the California State Attorney General released the 2016 Report on Hate Crime in California.

The report confirmed back to back increases of hate crimes in the state for the first time since 1996, according to Brian Levin, Director of California State University San Bernardino's Center for the Study of Hate & Extremism.

The 2016 Report on Hate Crime in California obtained by The Voice/Black Voice News showed the number of hate crimes in California increased from 837 in 2015 to 931 in 2016—an increase of 11.2 percent. The results included the following: increases in hate crime events involving a racial bias increased from 428 in 2015 to 519 in 2016—an increase of 21.3 percent; hate crime events involving sexual orientation bias increased from 231 in 2015 to 251 in 2016—an increase of 10.1 percent. There was a sharp increase in hate-related property crime offenses, up from 330 incidents in 2015 to 417 in 2016—a jump of 26.4 percent. However, hate crimes motivated by anti-religion bias decreased from 190 in 2015 to 171 in 2016—a decrease of 10 percent.

The report points out that hate crime overall in California has decreased from a high of 1,426 in 2007 to 931 in 2016, a decrease of 35 percent. For a copy of the report visit: <https://openjustice.doj.ca.gov/2016/hate>.

In an interview with The Voice/Black Voice News, Levin, from CSUSB's Center for the Study of Hate & Extremism, explained his center “looked at 25 large cities and counties among the largest in the United States and in those places, saw a 6 percent increase in 2016” and the 2017 data for the same cities, year-to-date hate crimes were “all up.”

“In the 2016 data, as we said, we saw a six percent increase but we saw a much bigger increase in larger cities and large states. California, we found, had a 14 percent increase in hate crime.” Levin explained the information was from “official law enforcement data.”

“If this increase sustains nationally, it will be the first back to back increase we’ve had since 2004, which was significantly smaller than the number of hate crimes we had in 2001,” Levin voiced, explaining 2001 was the “highest level we’ve had in 25 years.”

Levin acknowledged African-Americans are the “single largest group” targeted for hate crimes in the United States, currently at 29.8 percent. But, “their proportion as a cohort of all victims has actually declined” whereas “we have seen an increase in anti-religion hate crimes.”

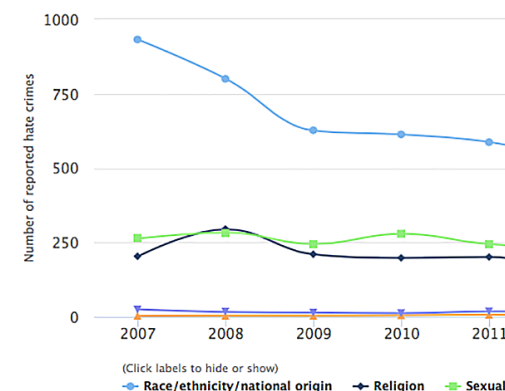

Levin explained there are many categories of hate-crime offenders: the “mission offender” or someone who has developed a “depth of prejudice” toward another group of people; the “thrill offender” who is out for “excitement and peer validation;” the “reactive-defensive offender” who reacts to an event such as “neighborhood integration” or a “terrorist attack” or “some kind of perceived act of disrespect;” a “mentally ill offender” with difficulty understanding and making reasoned judgments; and a small number of “conflicted offenders” who will “attack people from within their own group.”

Levin credited Jack Levin, PhD, a professor emeritus at Northeastern University and Co-

“Hate Crimes are among the most serious of crimes because the perpetrator targets his or her victim as lacking full humanity because of his or her skin color, language, sexual orientation, or disability. In a hate crime impacts the entire group the victim belongs, spreading conflict throughout the community.”

- California Attorney General Kamela Harris

Director of the Brudnick Center on Violence and Conflict, and Jack McDevitt, Director of Northeastern's Institute on Race and Justice, for creating almost all of the categories of hate crime offenders, while Levin came up with the “mentally ill offender.”

“There are a lot of causes, some are broad national types of variables while others are much more localized,” Levin explained. “So if you have a hate group or serial offender or some kind of neighborhood school or university tension, those things ... can cause hate crimes as well.”

Levin explained, for example, people are reacting to an event, such as when then-candidate Donald Trump proposed his “Muslim Ban” leading to a “87.5 percent” increase in hate crimes against Muslims for the “next five days” with the increase exceeding “the monthly average” of hate crimes for the “previous five years.”

“The one thing I think is worth noting is that we’re seeing a disturbing number of incidents that don’t rise to the level of a hate crime,” Levin said. “I think we have to ramp up our responses to noncriminal events using community and educational measures to respond to those events when the criminal law is not adequate to.”

Levin spoke of online harassment that may not be illegal, and incidents without law enforcement response, encouraging victims to “reach out to people as opposed to alienate them and drive them away,” differentiating when people are “misguided or ignorant,” and “be a little bit more tolerant,” making it a learning experience.

“Human relations commissions, universities, things like that; enforcement of the laws and leaders using the bully pulpit to decry prejudice are among those things; but also, enforcement of the law with respect to both data collection of hate crimes and investigation of them,” Levin cited as solutions, as well as fostering regular inter-group contact and education.

“We don’t have the kind of human relations infrastructure in the Inland Empire that may exist in other neighboring counties,” Levin acknowledged. “I do think that universities and inter-faith communities can fill that gap in part.”

From his experiences and conversations with police chiefs in the Cities of Riverside and San Bernardino, and interfaith leaders in the Inland Empire, Levin believes they are “really concerned about this” and are very “forthcoming with their data,” which he sees as “a really good sign.”

When The Voice/Black Voice News asked Levin about demographic changes where minority populations are increasing in areas and Anglo-white populations are decreasing as a possible cause of hate crimes he replied,

“What I think is so interesting has been the emergence of Euro-nationalism as the country’s demographics have changed. We’re now about 61 percent Anglo-white in the United States, in California in 2014, we became a no majority state.” In California, no single racial or ethnic group forms a majority of the state’s population.

“Americans, for the most part, reject notions of racial intellectual inferiority,” Levin opined. “However, a nefarious type of prejudice that labels people of different faiths or different races as being not only culturally inferior but toxically erosive to society has unfortunately taken root and is part of this euro-nationalism which extends beyond the United States and into Europe.”

Levin explained he created the Center for the Study of Hate & Extremism at CSUSB “to look at research and the public policy implications relating to extremism, hate crime and terrorism,” as well as to host experts, community leaders and top policy experts to address the issues at public events held on campus.

Next week, Part 2 of this two-part series will examine what the 2016 Report on Hate Crime in California revealed about incidents of hate crimes in the inland region.

PAGE aka MARJORIE ELLEN PAGE A Petition for Probate has been filed by DONNA JAYNE OLDENKAMP in the Superior Court of California, County of: RIVERSIDE. The Petition for Probate requests that DONNA JAYNE OLDENKAMP be appointed as personal representative to administer the estate of the decedent. Your appearance may be in person or by your attorney. If you are a creditor or a contingent creditor of the decedent, you must file your claim with the court and mail a copy to the personal representative appointed by the court within four months from the date of first issuance of letters as provided in Probate Code section 9100. The time for filing claims will not expire before four months from the hearing date noticed above. You may examine the file kept by the court. If you are a person interested in the estate, you may file with the court a Request for Special Notice (form DE-154) of the filing of an inventory and appraisal of estate assets or of any petition or account as provided in Probate Code section 1250. # California Fire Fee Suspended for Thousands of Inland Area Homeowners

Riverside

Since its controversial implementation in 2011, the California Fire Fee has remained a focal point of resistance for mountain areas and wildland interface communities throughout the state.

The recent, successful vote to extend Cap and Trade legislation included a deal to suspend the fire fee, allegedly in exchange for yes votes to extend the groundbreaking climate change-driven Cap and Trade legislation.

The controversial fee required homeowners living in rural and some suburban communities to pay an annual wildfire prevention fee (currently $117 per year) to help off-set costs associated with defending against wildland fires. California has collected more than $475 million dollars in additional revenue since the fee was implemented in 2011.

Those who opposed the fee, including many who make their homes in local mountain communities, decried the fee as double taxation because property taxes in many California communities were already apportioned to fire agencies, and the annual fire fee was imposed on homeowners in addition to that.

If the Cap and Trade extension legislation is signed into law by the Governor as anticipated, the fire fee suspension agreement is only temporary and will expire in 2030 with the Cap and Trade extension that made the fire fee suspension possible.

When the fire fee was initially implemented, California faced a $25 billion budget shortfall. Legislators claimed the fee was warranted to close the gap that was in part driven by the cost of fighting wildfires. Those directly impacted by the fees included property owners within the state's 31 million-acre State Responsibility Area, including nearly 96,000 property owners in Riverside and San Bernardino Counties.

In recent years, according to fire officials, proceeds from the fee have primarily been used for fire prevention and other firefighting-related tasks. As a result, suspension of the fee should not disrupt fire prevention efforts.

Suspension of the fee is viewed as a win for those who fought tirelessly for its repeal. Still others are concerned the money saved may only be gobbled up by higher prices at the gas pump that could result from the extension of Cap and Trade.

In the meantime, one California Senator, Ted Gaines, El Dorado Hills, has introduced Senate Bill 9 that calls for the total and permanent elimination of the fire fee.

Attorney Britt Imes, who prosecuted the case, Smith provided Taylor with Davis' cell phone number. Several phone calls were placed to lure Davis to a secluded area near Westside Park Elementary School.

At the agreed-upon meeting place, Ellis approached Davis' car. Davis was seated in the driver's seat and Shameka Reliford was in the passenger seat. Two other passengers were in the backseat. Ellis asked Davis, "Do you got me?" Davis replied, "Yes."

This exchange was repeated, then Ellis took a step back, produced a handgun and fired 4 to 5 times into the vehicle. Davis was killed immediately. Reliford was taken to Victor Valley Community Hospital, where she later died.

While Ellis received the death penalty, others indicted in the case were sentenced as follows: Taylor was sentenced to life without the possibility of parole, Smith was sentenced to 18 years in state prison, Jacobs was sentenced to 13 years, 8 months, and Bowen was sentenced to probation for being an accessory after the fact.

"Seeking the death penalty is one of the single most difficult decisions I have to make, and it is reserved for the worst of the worst criminals," Ramos said regarding Ellis' case. "When we seek the death penalty, it is important to remember that it is not a reflection of our brutality, but rather an expression of our disdain for the defendant's brutal actions."

Ramos also stressed the importance of holding individuals accountable for their criminal actions and making streets safer. "It's about securing justice for the victims, it's about protecting our future," he added. "But with every conviction and every battle we wage comes the responsibility to be just as proactive with our prevention and intervention programs. From the community policing efforts of our local law enforcement partners to gang prevention programs across the county, we are working hard to make San Bernardino County a safer place."

Since the Gang Unit was established in 2005, it has filed a total of 11,215 gang related cases.
