Celebrating National Newspaper Week

Certain milestones cause you to stop and reflect on what you have achieved in life and the goals you have yet to reach. And because my personal life is so clearly linked to my professional life, on my fifty-year anniversary on this earth, I find myself thinking about the institutions I have inherited, especially the newspaper since it's also National Newspaper Week. My stewardship philosophy has been shaped by the Ghanaian Sankofa proverb, "It is not wrong to go back for that which you have forgotten."

When my family assumed ownership of the Black Voice Newspaper, I was in middle school. That was 37 years ago.

We opened an office on the Westside of San Bernardino for a number of reasons:

1. That's where we lived;
2. That's where most Black people lived because of redlining;
3. That's where all the Black churches were because that's where all the Black people were forced to live.

The office was a converted liquor store that was owned at the time by Neal Baker, the founder of the Baker's fast food chain. We eventually bought the building. Our darkroom was in the far back of the building where the liquor used to be stored. We kept the layout sheets on the racks where the refrigerators used to be, the latched doors were still there, covered, in part by the old Compugraphic typesetting machine.

Because we were a paper adjudicated in the county of Riverside, my parents needed a presence in the city of Riverside. They couldn't afford an office so Pastor Levonzo Gray and his wife First Lady Ira Gray allowed them to rest at their home when they were out delivering papers. They eventually opened an office on University Avenue, in a converted house they shared with a beautician. Of course, the Eastside of Riverside, was also the place where the Black businesses of Riverside were located. Yes the Black homeowners and churches were located there as well.

As publishers my parents' philosophy was in alignment with the founding credo of the Black Press of America, "We wish to plead our own cause. Too long have others spoken for us. Too long has the public been deceived by misrepresentations, in things which concern us dearly."

They covered news that they believed should be important to the Black community. They covered politics and government and I believe had a keen understanding of public policy and how those policies shape our lives. They became influential by having a clear point of view. They wanted to right wrongs, give voice to the voiceless, and shed light on discriminatory practices and unfair treatment, in both the public and private sectors.

Today, we may have expanded what we do but our core mission has remained the same. We have embraced new technologies and new methods of storytelling and education. We tell the stories of the community and continue to monitor important issues and public policies that affect the most vulnerable and the voiceless. From our immersive week-long study tours to our production of independent films to our geospatial mapping projects, we utilize a diversity of platforms to educate, advocate, and inform. I'm happy to share my birthday with this important national celebration. Happy National Newspaper Week!

Another Mass Shooting Rocks America

Las Vegas, NV – “I was having the time of my life one second and in the next second, I was running for my life.”

This was the experience described by one survivor of Sunday night’s massacre in Las Vegas, Nevada. Her experience was emblematic of what nearly 22,000 country music fans experienced during the massacre that night.

Not only did the Las Vegas tragedy reopen wounds associated with the 2015 attack at the Inland Region Center; across the inland empire, a number of local families were personally touched by Vegas attack and the community holds them in prayer.

When the first shots rang out in Las Vegas just after 10 p.m., the concert attendees first thought they heard fireworks. It didn’t take long, however, for fans and performers alike to figure out they were under attack. The shots continued to ring out in rapid-fire succession for more than fifteen minutes as people struggled to get away while also helping loved ones and strangers along the way in an instinctual rush to stay alive.

They would later learn how 64-year-old Steven Paddock, had checked into the Mandalay Bay Hotel with at least ten suitcases filled with weapons and ammunition; how he set himself up in two adjoining rooms on the 32nd floor that overlooked the strip and the concert venue; how he set up cameras outside his rooms to keep an eye out for authorities; how he busted out a window in each of the two rooms and trained his weapons in the direction of the concert venue where thousands of people, oblivious to his intent, enjoyed the performance as sitting ducks. When the shooting stopped, 59 people were dead and at least 527 were injured.

Paddock’s younger brother said, “He was just a guy.” Yes, he was just a guy; but he was also a mass murder who killed dozens, injured hundreds and once again, broke the heart of a nation, a nation that can neither heal itself nor protect its citizens from such senseless carnage. Why? Because it has placed the right to bear arms with minimal restriction, above the lives of its citizens; because it has sold its responsibility and accountability for the lives of Americans to a gun lobby that places profits above all else; because it lacks the courage necessary to demand elected officials act on the wishes of the nation’s majority who continue to cry out for common-sense gun control or to elect representatives who will.

Voting System Woes

Russia probed California and Riverside investigated potential double voting

Sacramento

A little more than a week ago, Secretary of State Alex Padilla recently announced his receipt of formal notification from the Department of Homeland Security (DHS) confirming California was among 21 states targeted by Russian hackers during the 2016 election cycle.

DHS advised Padilla, “Russian cyber actors scanned California’s Internet-facing systems in 2016. DHS confirmed that they have no evidence that any systems were penetrated or compromised in any way. Scanning is an unauthorized attempt to identify weaknesses in a computer or network – akin to a burglar looking for unlocked doors in a house.”

Padilla further stated, “Our office actively monitors scanning activity as part of our routine cyber security protocols. We have no information or evidence that our systems have been breached in any way or that any voter information was compromised.”

It was Padilla’s following statement that should raise alarm bells regarding the veracity of our national leadership: “We are concerned, however, that in June 2017, Jeanette Manfra, Acting Undersecretary for Cybersecurity and Communications at DHS, testified before the US Senate Intelligence Committee that ‘the owners of the systems within those 21 states have been notified.’ This was simply not true and DHS acknowledged they failed to contact us and ‘two or three’ other states.”

“Add to that the fact it took DHS more than a year to notify the impacted states, including California, the Russians were scanning their systems. The practice of withholding critical information from elections officials is a detriment to the security of our elections and our democracy,” Padilla added.

In June, Padilla notified the National Security Agency (NSA) in writing of how seriously concerned he was about the agency’s failure to provide timely and critical information to America’s elections officials. He stressed, “We shouldn’t have to learn about potential threats from leaked NSA documents or media reports.

It is the intelligence community’s responsibility to inform elections officials of any potential threats to our elections. They failed in this responsibility.”

In the meantime, the Riverside County District Attorney’s (DA) office has failed to provide a full explanation regarding why it initiated search warrants over the summer to examine the voter records of more than 60 individuals. The effort was allegedly part of an investigation into possible illegal voting in 2016. Individuals for whom the warrants were issued supposedly voted more than once in the same election. Yet some election officials believe the warrants themselves were out of the ordinary. To date, no charges have been filed.

Last July, the DA reported it had investigated a few dozen complaints from voters who claimed their party affiliations were changed. However, during the same period, the County Registrar of voters reported only two such complaints. The DA found no evidence of wrongdoing.

The Voice will continue to follow this story.

Fontana Awarded ‘Safe Routes to School’ Grant

Fontana

The City of Fontana was awarded a $1.9 million grant for the Safe Routes to School program, part of California’s 2017 Active Transportation Program.

The goal of the program is to improve the pathways of more than 5,000 students who walk or bike to eight schools on busy streets.

According to Fontana Media Contact Martha Guzman-Hurtado, the project will include the construction of new, Americans with Disabilities Act-compliant sidewalks on four segments of city streets, curb and gutter ramps, street striping, and traffic signs. The following Fontana locations will be impacted: Ramona Avenue between Juniper Avenue and Sierra Avenue; Alder Avenue between Baseline Avenue and Shamrock Avenue; and two sections along Locust Avenue, from Miller Avenue to Arrow Boulevard.

When the grant was announced, Fontana’s Director of Engineering, Ricardo Sandoval, shared, “Our goal continues to be to provide better mobility for everyone in Fontana.”

Sandoval shared that the grant will improve the city’s existing sidewalk infrastructure in several highly traveled areas, while promoting

SoCal STD Rates Through the Roof

Surge Among Young, African Americans, Gay and Bisexual Men

Public health officials throughout Southern California are grappling with alarming increases in syphilis, gonorrhea and chlamydia that are part of a national epidemic.

Cases of these three sexually transmitted diseases have been increasing nationally since 2014, according to new statistics released by the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention.

The rapid rise in cases reverses a downward trend that began in 2006. Health officials say the rates reflect decreasing condom usage, a lack of awareness about STDs among doctors and patients, and a falling number of STD clinics.

In 2016, there were more than 250,000 cases of STDs reported, which represents a 40 percent increase compared to 2011, the data showed.

Those cases included nearly 200,000 cases of chlamydia, nearly 65,000 cases of gonorrhea and more than 11,000 cases of early syphilis, according to the CDPH.

In San Bernardino County, between 2011 and 2015, reported gonorrhea cases increased by 96 percent, syphilis by 137 percent and chlamydia by 2.5 percent.

For Riverside County, between 2011 and 2015, reported gonorrhea cases were up 142 percent, syphilis 74 percent and chlamydia 12 percent.

The CDC says with most STD cases going undiagnosed and untreated, people are at “risk for severe and often irreversible health consequences,” including infertility, chronic pain and increased transmission of HIV. Treating STDs costs roughly $16 billion annually.

In California, the highest STD rates are found among young people, African-Americans and gay and bisexual men, according to the state.

The reasons are complex, but include medical and social factors ranging from a lack of adequate screening to decreased fear of curable sexually transmitted diseases.

No one really knows the definitive cause of all this. No one can pin it on one or two things.

The CDC recommends the following screening guidelines:

- Sexually active women under 25, or older women with new or multiple sex partners, should be tested annually for chlamydia and gonorrhea.
- Pregnant women should be tested for syphilis and chlamydia early in pregnancy.
- Sexually active gay and bisexual men should be tested for syphilis, chlamydia, gonorrhea and HIV at least once a year, more frequently for those with multiple or anonymous partners.

Community groups have developed strategies to target at-risk populations. In San Bernardino County, Planned Parenthood runs two programs with outreach not only to schools, but group homes and foster care agencies.

UCR ARTSblock Celebrates Opening Party of Mundos Alternos

Riverside

Art enthusiasts from across the region celebrated the Opening Party of Mundos Alternos: Art and Science Fiction in the Americas at UCR ARTSblock on Saturday.

Robb Hernández, assistant professor of English at UCR and co-curator of the exhibition, described it as the first effort of transnational scope to identify the growing tendency of science fiction in contemporary Latin American and Latino art. “A tendency,” he noted, “that recasts ‘the future’ at a time when debates over immigration reform, militarized borders, mass deportations, and efforts to build ‘the wall’ might suggest otherwise.”

During the opening party, VIPs shared in an intimate gathering with the artists. Additionally, the evening paid respect to victims of the recent series of Hurricane: Harvey, Irma, and Maria. In the wake of Hurricane Maria, some artists were unable to travel to the U.S. for the opening party. One, stuck in his home due to a downed electrical wire across the gate bordering his property, sent a video that was played for those in attendance Saturday evening.

While touring the exhibition, attendees enjoyed large-scale installations, photographs, sculptures, drawings, paintings, performances, and video installations across ARTSblock’s two adjacent buildings: the California Museum of Photography and the Barbara and Art Culver Center of the Arts. Among the many laudable displays were a couple of crowd favorites: “Inflatable Bodies: Organic Arches” by Chico MacMurtrie, and “Alien Toy” by artist Rubén Artiz Torres.

Reflecting on the evening, Executive Director Sheila Bergman said, “The Opening Party was grand! The standout moment was the palpable energy of our artists, visitors, faculty, and students within the museum and arts center. Our commitment to producing exemplary exhibitions, performances, and incubate bold ideas resonated with the broader local, national, and international community that attended our event.”

“I want to build on this momentum,” Bergman continued, “and have it catalyze greater

Milagros Peña, Dean of UC Riverside’s College of Humanities, Arts, and Social Sciences, described the evening as incredible. “It was so wonderful to see so many people turn out to see and experience the works from artists representing so many parts of Latin America and the Caribbean.”

According to Peña, those who gathered in celebration were also mindful of the recent, catastrophic events in Mexico and the Caribbean, noting the artwork truly represents mundos

At the same time Saturday, the Riverside Art Museum held an opening reception of Myth & Mirage: Inland Southern California, Birthplace of the Spanish Colonial Revival exhibition in coordination with the grand opening of ‘Mundos Alternos’ at ARTSblock.

Mundos Alternos, scheduled to run through February 4, 2018, is part of Pacific Standard Time: LA/LA, an initiative of the J. Injustice?

Contributor

On Count One—Attempted Murder: “Not Guilty,” the court clerk read. Albert Joseph Moyer IV’s family exhaled a sigh of relief and mouthed, “Thank you. Thank you,” in a humble prayer of gratitude, a prayer stifled by the clerk’s next series of pronouncements.

On the lesser charge of Attempted Voluntary Manslaughter: “Guilty.” Inflicting Corporal Injury on a Spouse: “Guilty.” Making Criminal Threats of Death/Great Bodily Injury: “Guilty.” Assault of a Person by means of force likely to produce Great Bodily Injury: “Guilty.” False Imprisonment to Prevent or Dissuade a

Witness/Victim from Testifying: “Guilty.” And False Imprisonment: “Guilty.”

Although the Moyer family stoically retained their prayerful postures through each count, the verdicts were overwhelming and tears flowed unabated. Six guilty verdicts on felony charges, three of them super-strikes (serious or violent felony offense). A journey of four years yielded a sorely devastating outcome.

As disappointing as the verdicts were to the family, they were devastating to Moyer himself. After all, he declined two plea deals because he had kept faith, hoping against all odds that truth and justice would prevail. Now Moyer, along with those who love him and others concerned about the fairness of this case, wonder whether ‘the proverbial paradigm of American justice for Black people’ laid the groundwork for his convictions in this case.

Advocates believe Moyer was caught up, as many Black men are, in a criminal justice system that has never been blind in its administration of justice for Black people, unless wealth levels the playing field. As noted by Hillary Clinton last year, “African Americans are more likely to be arrested by police, [convicted], and sentenced to longer prison terms for doing the same thing that whites do.” And, noted by the NAACP, “African Americans are incarcerated at more than five times the rate of Whites.

In the wake of last week’s verdicts, many familiar with the case, though staunchly against three different accounts of the events. Although parts of her statements were consistent, there were over two dozen discrepancies between how she initially described that night’s events when officers first arrived on the scene versus what she said during an in-depth interview with officers later that same evening versus her later under-oath testimony at the preliminary hearing.

Moyer claimed T.L. attacked him in a jealous rage, split his forehead open with a glass candle holder, and that he fought back in self-defense. T.L. claimed it was Moyer who attacked her in a jealous rage and choked her when she told him she wanted to end their relationship.

Moyer’s fate may have been sealed from the start. The officers on the scene the night of the incident arrested only him; a district attorney threw the book at him for refusing to accept a identify the dominant aggressor in any incident. The dominant aggressor is the person determined to be the most significant, rather than the first, aggressor.”

The Penal Code also states that when identifying the dominant aggressor, an officer shall consider the intent of the law to protect victims of domestic violence from continuing abuse, threats creating fear of physical injury, history of domestic violence between the persons involved, and whether either person acted in self-defense. In addition, officers retain a measure of discretion regarding domestic violence situations.

On the night of the Moyer incident, according to testimony, the officers who interviewed T.L. decided Moyer was the dominant aggressor based on her statements. Although a separate officer interviewed Moyer independently, the decision to arrest was made without his input. Arresting Moyer and not T.L. was a matter of police discretion.

“Prosecutors are more powerful than judges—but the tough-on-crime stance they take to get elected multiplies racial injustices.”

— Gordon Weekes

domestic violence, were incredulous in regard to its outcome. “How did an incident of domestic violence—where both parties sustained injuries, where the accused required medical treatment (including stitches) and the victim did not, where the victim was not available to testify, where there were no third-party witnesses, where the only other witnesses were neighbors who heard a commotion from a separate unit hundreds of yards away and across a parking structure, and where the accused had no previous felony convictions—how did this case result in six guilty verdicts on felony counts?”

The truth about what happened that October night four years ago was known by Moyer and T.L. Over the years, Moyer’s version of events remained basically consistent, but T.L. gave plea bargain and plead guilty on lesser charges (scholars estimate that about 90 to 95 percent of federal and state court cases are resolved in this manner); and a jury that delivered verdicts based on the evidence presented, instructions provided by the court, and the restrictions of the codes under which Moyer was charged.

California has a mandatory arrest policy for domestic violence. According to the policy, when an officer believes an incident of domestic violence has occurred, and the officer has probable cause to think someone has abused a spouse, partner, or family member, the officer must make an arrest. In some cases, both parties are arrested and charged.

According to California Penal Code 13701 (b) “Peace officers shall make reasonable efforts to

In 2006, California passed legislation permitting the admission of prior actions of domestic violence in domestic violence prosecutions, allowing a previously domestic violence claim made by T.L. against Moyer in the city of Long Beach on March 21, 2013, to be admitted into evidence.

At trial, the Long Beach Police Officer who responded to the incident testified that when he arrived on the scene, T.L. was standing outside her apartment building and although she seemed upset, he did not see any signs she had been abused. He did note a tiny scratch on her forehead but not the bumps, bruises, and abrasions expected based on the type of beating she described. When he asked her if she had injuries, she said “no” and refused medical attention. The officer never went into the apartment. She stated Moyer was not there. There was no follow-up by Long Beach police.

With the state’s mandatory arrest policy, probable cause, a previous incident of domestic violence, and police discretion, Moyer was arrested and the table set for prosecution. The fact that he claimed self-defense was not considered when he was arrested. Moyer’s fate then rested in the hands of the prosecutor.

Gordon Weekes, long-time Assistant Public Defender in Broward County, Florida wrote, “Prosecutors have more power in this system than any judge, any supreme court, any police officer, or any attorney. They decide what charges to file—or, more importantly, what charges not to file.”

According to Moyer’s father, Albert Joseph Moyer III, the District Attorney’s office made two offers. Moyer’s first attorney, Anthony Brooklier, said that if Moyer agreed to plead guilty to a charge of making a terrorist/criminal threat, he would have gone home in sixty days. The charge was a wobbler, meaning it could be reduced from a felony to a misdemeanor after three years’ probation. Reportedly, however, the attorney never communicated this offer to Moyer.

Moyer later secured a new attorney, Angela Fedrichs, who informed him of a second offer from the District Attorney, to plead guilty to Domestic Violence with a penalty of four years and eight months. The DA allegedly told Moyer’s attorney something to the effect of “if your client doesn’t take this deal, I’m going to make him suffer.” Moyer declined. His current attorney, Acer Chiang, expressed his belief that the reason the DA came after Moyer so aggressively was because he did not take either offer. When the DA’s office was originally contacted to comment on the case, it declined.

After Moyer was arrested and charged in this case, T.L. failed to appear for several court dates until she appeared at the preliminary hearing in May 2015. After her testimony, which varied from two previous statements, the charges against Moyer were enhanced to include attempted murder, and his bail increased from $125,000 to one million dollars, and he was remanded into custody where he has remained for more than two years.

To learn what happened during the trial, what happened to T.L. after she testified at Moyer’s preliminary hearing, what facts the jurors were not allowed to hear, and why and how the jury reached the decisions it did, follow the Strange Case of Albert Joseph Moyer IV as it unfolded, in next week’s edition of The Voice.

ICE's Operation Safe City not so Safe for Some Immigrants

Riverside

Last week, the U.S. Department of Immigration and Customs Enforcement (ICE), in partnership with Enforcement and Removal Operations (ERO) teams, arrested nearly 500 people from 42 countries in a national operation that lasted four days.

Nearly 167 of those arrested were taken into custody in Southern California, including at least 66 people from the communities of Riverside, San Bernardino, Orange, Ventura, Santa Barbara, and San Luis Obispo collectively.

ICE claimed the Operation Safe City raids targeted cities and regions where ICE deportation officers are denied access to jails and prisons to interview suspected immigration violators, or jurisdictions where ICE detainers are not honored. In California, ICE must take custody within 48 hours or seek a judge's order for an individual to be held longer.

The ICE raids come on the heels of an August 16 announcement by U.S. Attorney General Jeff Sessions that sanctuary cities that fail to fully abide by Federal immigration laws would jeopardize their access to certain Federal grant money as a way to force compliance with the president's reversal of sanctuary city policies made shortly after he took office in January.

In a printed statement about the raids, ICE noted, "Sanctuary jurisdictions that do not honor detainers or allow us access to jails and prisons are shielding criminal aliens from immigration enforcement and creating a magnet for illegal immigration." Acting ICE Director Tom Homan said, "As a result, ICE is forced to dedicate more resources to conduct at-large arrests in these communities."

In commenting about last week's raids, although ICE claimed it merely sought immigrants who had criminal convictions, only some of those picked up had convictions for crimes related to violence. Others were picked up for drug offenses, and at least 25 percent had convictions for driving under the influence. Of the 498 arrested, only 317 had previous felony convictions.

According to ICE, some of those arrested will face federal criminal prosecutions for illegal entry and illegal re-entry after removal. The arrestees who are not federally prosecuted will be processed administratively for removal from the United States. Those who have outstanding orders of removal, or who returned to the United States illegally after being removed, are subject to immediate removal from the country. The remaining individuals are in ICE custody awaiting a hearing before an immigration judge, or pending travel arrangements for removal in the near future.

In meantime, as concerns over the president's aggressive action toward immigrants has continued to escalate, several outlets have reported that many immigration detainees are having difficulty consulting with legal representatives, due to the remote location of most immigration detention facilities. In Southern California, for example, immigration facilities are located in Adelanto and Lancaster.

a community that is more walkable and bikeable.

Students at several area schools will benefit from the project, including those who attend Mango, Juniper, North Tamarind, Locust, Virginia and Ted J. Porter elementary schools, Alder Middle School, and Eric Birch High School.

Students are not expected to be the only beneficiaries. According to city officials, more than 25,000 residents who live within a half mile of the project sites are also expected to benefit as well. Construction is expected to begin in 2019.

According to the California Department of Transportation, the Safe Routes to School program has taken hold in communities throughout the United States, to increase the number of children who walk or bicycle to school. Funding these projects removes the barriers that prevent children from walking or biking, such as a lack of infrastructure, unsafe infrastructure, or lack of programs that promote walking and bicycling through education and/or encouragement programs aimed at children, parents, and the community.

About thirty years ago, nearly 60 percent of children who lived within a two-mile radius of a school walked or bicycled there. Today, that number has dropped to less than 15 percent, resulting in worsening air quality and increased congestion around schools. In the same time frame, according to state officials, rates of overweight or obese children have increased from five percent thirty years ago to 20 percent today, contributing to a rise in preventable childhood diseases.

For more information regarding California's Safe Routes to School programs visit <http://www.dot.ca.gov/hq/LocalPrograms/saferoutes/saferoutes.htm>.
