A Reflection on Black History, Black Present and Black Future

Experts tell us the importance of history is that it gives us the opportunity to “examine and interpret human identities and transformations of society and civilizations over time.”

We are also told history helps us not only understand but also learn to come to grips with complex questions about how we present ourselves in the world today and to better understand the circumstances of the world we live in. We are supposed to gain this understanding by examining how what occurred in the past, helps shape not only our experiences today but also serves as a guiding light or northstar to the future.

For us as Black people I believe it is important that we reach back, beyond the amazing accomplishments and contributions by Black Americans to this country and the world since 1619, and take a deeper, longer look at the history of civilizations that existed in Africa before colonization, before the slave trade. I propose this as a way to understand what inspired the evolution of religion, art and society of the great African nations so we can better understand the strength, spirit, inventiveness, determination and creativity that sustained us here in America.

I say this because we know that only the strongest of the strong survived the march to the slave ships, the middle passage, the auction block, slavery, reconstruction, the lynching years, Jim Crow, the fight for Civil Rights and today’s continuing struggle for equity in every aspect of life. Our survival is a testimony to our tenacity, brilliance and determination. Where did that originate and can it be magnified?

Within our very DNA we carry this wisdom, a wisdom of generations. We only need to examine the patterns of our broader history in ways that help us better understand what our forebears brought with them from the Motherland—

In April 2016, Kira Dixon Johnson went to Cedars-Sinai in Los Angeles for a scheduled cesarean section. Johnson died hours later after giving birth to her son, Langston, as a result of complications associated with his birth.

In 2022, her husband, Charles Johnson, filed a lawsuit in Los Angeles Superior Court which accused the hospital of not providing the best care to his wife because she was a Black woman, according to The Los Angeles Times. One of two lawsuits filed by Johnson, stated his wife's catheter was filling with blood, so he alerted her doctor, who ordered a CT scan. The scan was never performed.

The preventable death of Kira Dixon Johnson is what initially sparked Cheyenne Page's interest in medicine. Page, 27, is currently a first-year medical student enrolled in University of California, Riverside's Program in Medical Education (PRIME), a program designed to train future doctors to specifically serve African, Black, and Caribbean (ABC) communities of the Inland Empire.

"It was really one of those moments where I saw myself in Kira, and saw my sister and other Black women that I know and love," Page said. "And that really is something that drew me to the PRIME Program. I really love how it emphasizes the African, Black and Caribbean community."

Several studies have found that Black patients have a long history of "medical mistrust" dating back to the 1840s when the "father of gynecology" Dr. J. Marion Sims conducted medical experiments on enslaved women without anesthesia. Today, Black patients often feel ignored, undertreated and discarded when they interact with the healthcare system and physicians, fueling medical mistrust.

Efforts to address the root cause of medical mistrust among patients of color such as institute implicit bias training and the development of health equity initiatives have been ongoing across healthcare systems in the U.S. in order to

PRIME Director

combat persisting health disparities.

At age 16, Damola Adeyemo, moved to the U.S. from Nigeria and was surprised to see communities of color suffering, despite the health resources available in the U.S. Now 23, Adeyemo is a first-year medical student enrolled in PRIME. She is interested in public health and learning about the barriers to health care.

"The ABC community is a community that is very affected by the health disparities," Adeyemo explained. "I just hope that as a future physician, I'm going to do more than just learn about disparities, but actually find solutions that can help dismantle those disparities as well."

Palm Springs Prayer Vigil Unites for Restorative Justice

National Civil Rights Leader Rev. Dr. Frederick Douglass Haynes III to Host Prayer Vigil for Healing, Reflection and Justice in Palm Springs, CA. (source: youtube.com)

Ellen Perrault | Staff

In honor of Black History Month, on Sunday, February 18, beginning at 3:00 pm, the survivors and supporters of Palm Springs Section 14, and a coalition of community organizations will unite for a Prayer Vigil at The Church of St. Paul in the Desert in Palm Springs located at 125 W El Alameda, Palm Springs. The prayer vigil will serve as the cornerstone event of a citywide day of prayer.

Section 14 is a one-square-mile tract in downtown Palm Springs where a predominantly Black and Latino community was razed to the ground by city officials in the 1960s to make way for commercial development. Section 14 is located in the heart of the city's downtown.

Joining as an honored guest at the day's signature event will be renowned national civil rights leader, prophetic pastor, and advocate for racial justice, Rev. Dr. Frederick Douglass Haynes III of Friendship-West Baptist Church. Dr. Haynes recently succeeded Rev. Jesse Jackson as President of the international human and civil rights organization, the Rainbow PUSH Coalition.

The Rainbow PUSH Coalition is a multi-racial, progressive, international organization fighting for social change. For several decades, Rev. Dr. Haynes has been a vocal advocate for civil rights and social justice, urging faith communities to take an active role in addressing the need for systemic change.

On Sunday, this cross-faith alliance will call on people of all faiths across Palm Springs and beyond to pray for healing for the city, its leaders, and the survivors and descendants of Section 14, who continue their quest for restorative justice. Survivors and descendants of Section 14 (some Spanish speaking) will also be available for media interviews.

The event is open to the public and all are encouraged to join.

California Hospital Medical Center has awarded $270,000 in community grants to three nonprofits in the Greater Los Angeles area that work to provide the community with critical health and human services, including homelessness, human-trafficking and mental health.

Grants are awarded through Dignity Health's Community Health Improvement impact in the lives of the most underserved populations in Los Angeles.”

Since the grant program began, California Hospital has given away millions to nonprofit agencies who are changing the lives of Angelenos for the better.

“Dignity Health's annual community grants program is a testament to our dedication to improving the health and well-being of Californians,” shares Julie J. Sprengel, California Region President, CommonSpirit Health. “By awarding over five million dollars in grants to nearly 100 non-profit partners, together, we are addressing some of the more challenging public health issues, such as food and housing insecurities, domestic violence, and mental health.”

Organizations selected to receive 2024 Dignity Health Community Grants include the Downtown Women's Center (DWC). DWC, awarded $90,000, addresses the need for gender-specific, low-barrier access to physical and mental health services for women experiencing homelessness and trauma in Los Angeles. Through the program, DWC will provide case management to 900 women and provide physical, mental, and behavioral health

Several surveys, including a 2022 California Health Care Foundation (CHCF) survey on Black Californians and a 2023 KFF health survey, found that Black patients and patients of color reported more positive and respectful interactions with providers who shared their racial and ethnic background. The CHCF survey noted that respondents shared how important representation and patient advocacy is in health care.

Beyond diversity, tapping into everyone's potential

There have been several calls for diversifying the healthcare workforce, which can improve a patient's access to care. PRIME Director Dr. Adwoa Osei explained that having diversity in the field of medicine is a “no-brainer.”

“Diversity also brings in excellence. You never know what you're missing because different perspectives bring different things, and it just enriches the experience and enriches the whole journey of the whole process,” Dr. Osei said.

“I don't even know that we need to keep making a case for diversity — it's such a basic thing. I would like to say, though, that I think we need to spend more time talking about creating spaces for everyone to belong, so that they can achieve their full potential.”

Medical students enrolled in PRIME come from different ethnic and racial backgrounds, but students all share the program's mission of addressing the health care needs of underserved communities, specifically African, Black and Caribbean communities that experience some of the worst health outcomes. Fatal outcomes like Johnson's have become more frequent over the last decade as Black birthing people in California are three-to-four times more likely to die of pregnancy-related causes than other racial and ethnic groups.

“I think it's everyone's job in healthcare to invest in learning about how to be culturally competent, how to be empathetic, how to talk across different cultures and be sensitive to that,” explained Dr. Laurie Zephyrin, senior vice president for Advancing Health Equity at the Commonwealth Fund.

There is sufficient data that exists demonstrating that diversity in health care should be an obvious principle embedded into the foundation of health care policies and practices, however, more action is needed to make this a reality.

Dr. Zephyrin explained that there are multiple prongs to diversifying the health care workforce and developing practices that ensure that diversity is a “no-brainer,” such as developing early start programs that engage middle school-aged students with the goal of recruiting students from diverse backgrounds.

She explained that she's been really impressed by UC PRIME programs like Program in Medical Education – Transforming Indigenous Doctor Education (PRIME-TIDE) which prepares medical students to provide healthcare to Native communities. According to the Association of American Medical Colleges, in 2023, just 0.3% of physicians identified as American Indian/Alaska Native.

“Programs that intentionally recruit from diverse populations from underserved populations are critical, and I think we need policies and resources and regulations to support that,” Dr. Zephyrin explained.

Part of UCR PRIME's curriculum includes attending seminars that feature different presenters. The discussions in these seminars have made an impression on Adeyemo as she learns about health disparities through different lenses such as through a historical lens.

“If you don't talk about it, you don't really understand where to start finding solutions,” Adeyemo said. She explained that having these discussions with her peers, who are from different backgrounds and offer unique perspectives, opens her mind up to thinking about how to find solutions to problems.

Page shared that PRIME's curriculum and assigned readings have really made an impression on her as she learns more about structural racism and the depth of health disparities. Such topics aren't as heavily discussed in general medicine discourse, outside of PRIME, according to Page.

Diversity of physicians can result in better care

A paper published by Lancet noted that 5.4% of physicians identify as Black, and of this percentage, 2.8% are Black women.

“We need more physicians of color, [from] different backgrounds, that will be able to identify with the patients and improve their health care. It can be done by more than just someone of color, they would have to actually be trained,” said Dr. Betty Daniels, who was recently elected Medical Staff President at Dignity Health – Community Hospital of San Bernardino. Dr. Daniels explained that doctors need to understand the health care needs and differences among patients who have different racial/ethnic backgrounds.

As medical school programs like PRIME aim to educate future doctors about engaging with communities of color, discussing barriers to care and practicing cultural competency, in order to provide equitable care to historically underserved communities.

“I think it's really vital for us to be learning what we are about cultural competencies and how to best advocate for our patients — even

Between Progress and Preservation:

A Visual Narrative of the Impact of Warehouse Development in the Inland Empire

(Illustration: Aryana Noroozi)

by Aryana Noroozi

Dubbed the “land of the cheap dirt,” in comparison to the cost of land in neighboring coastal regions of Southern California, the inland region begins approximately sixty miles east of Los Angeles. Historically, homebuyers and real estate developers have taken advantage of the area’s lower cost of living and land. But those who settled here could not have predicted the impact of e-commerce, from its onset to its global boom, and the degree to which it would affect them.

Beginning in the 2000’s and exacerbated by the COVID-19 pandemic of 2020, the demand for online shopping, and consequently for goods — stored and distributed in warehouses — has grown exponentially.

At the same time, more homes were built and families from the Los Angeles metropolitan area and other parts of the country continued to buy in the region, looking for a lower cost of living and refuge from urban life.

These dueling demands for land use collide today, as warehouses sit directly next to homes and schools. In some communities, such as Bloomington, homes are bought from residents and sold to warehouse developers through real estate brokers.

Over the past decade, communities like Rialto and Fontana have witnessed the transformation of their open land to industrial business parks. Hundreds of cement acres form grids of distribution centers that are at the heart of a system that modern day Americans know too well. Shipping containers arrive on trucks carrying online orders that are packaged inside warehouses and then redistributed onto more trucks, making their way to customer doorsteps across the nation. Currently, the region is transited by approximately five hundred thousand trucks with two or more axles per day.

FEATURE STORY

Communities like Bloomington initially witnessed this change occurring in neighboring communities, but now, they too face the reality of proliferating warehouse developments. Bloomington is emblematic of the entire region's discourse around warehousing. with Some community members are fighting relentlessly to protect schools, parks and homes while others feel that development is the only way to progress.

Bloomington exemplifies how a community can fall along a spectrum when it comes to taking a stance on the issue of warehouse development. Here, some residents find no room for discussion with developers. Instead, they fight to preserve their community's Mexican ranch culture, an important piece of its land and identity. Others believe compromise is crucial and that warehouse development will happen either way. Discussions about the future of Bloomington have made their way across the region, from environmental activist groups, city and county elected officials, planning commissioners and those invested in trucking and construction industries, including independent truckers.

When it comes to development, a look at Bloomington brings the idea of what's at stake front and center. The narratives of the community, its land, and history beg questions of what is to be lost and gained as warehousing continues to expand.

A Bloomington resident wears a Mexican folklórico dress as she rides her horse at the David Jayne Equestrian Arena where residents finished a march protesting the development of the Bloomington Business Park Specific Plan, September 18, 2022. Warehouse developments have continued to vastly expand across the inland region including within the unincorporated area of Bloomington. The community's unique Mexican ranch culture lifestyle faces an ongoing threat from these developments as officials rezone and developers encroach on undeveloped plots of land. Beverly Knippel looks out her bedroom window as she packs to move with her husband John from Bloomington, California to Yulee, Florida, August 26, 2023. According to Earthjustice, 117 homeowners in Bloomington sold their homes to warehouse developers to be demolished for the construction of the Bloomington Business Park, a 2.1 million square foot warehouse planned in Bloomington. Real estate brokers negotiated deals between residents like the Knippels and Howard Industrial Partners, the developer of the project. The Knippels' home was demolished in late September 2023. Left image: Carolina Verduzco (right) and her daughters Saori Castillo, 10, (left) and Sophia Castillo, 15, (center) pose for a portrait at the David Jayne Equestrian Arena after a march in protest of the Bloomington Business Park, September 18, 2022. Verduzco says that she is not against the logistics industry but rather the reckless way that it came into her community and is an outlier in her beliefs about sitting down with developers to discuss meeting the needs of the community.

Right image: As a local business owner running a barber shop that has been within her family for 35 years, Verduzco has belonged to a movement to incorporate Bloomington for over 20 years. She joined her community in the fight against the Bloomington Business Park, even though she anticipated the project would be approved. "Until we accept that this is what it is, we can't move past that. We need to have those honest conversations and if we don't... we're not going to be able to rescue a lot of things that are still valuable to us." (Aryana Noroozi for Black Voice News / CatchLight Local)

Members of the rapidly growing construction workers union, Laborers' International Union of North America (LIUNA) show their support for the Bloomington Business Park Specific Plan at the San Bernardino County Planning Commission meeting, September 22, 2022.

Supporters as well as opponents of the Bloomington Business Plan made their voices heard during the heated meeting.

"Some say a project like this is only a temporary job that leaves behind low paying jobs with no real opportunities. But that's just not true," said Jason Vallez, a member of the Laborers' International Union of North America during public comments. "This is how we [construction workers] keep food on the table and pay the bills," he added

At the end of the meeting, the Planning Commission voted to move the project ahead to the San Bernardino County Board of Supervisors, which unanimously approved the project in November 2022. (Aryana Noroozi for Black Voice News / CatchLight Local)

A Bloomington resident rides his horse on an open plot of land in front of an existing warehouse, the Bloomington Commerce Center, on April 11, 2023. The Bloomington Business Park will be built directly across from this existing warehouse, where Walter Zimmerman Elementary School currently stands and, according to Howard Industrial Partners, is projected to be demolished in 2026. (Aryana Noroozi for Black Voice News / CatchLight Local)

Candice Youngblood poses for a portrait on the pedestrian bridge, over the 71 freeway in Pomona, that she used to cross walking to school, February 24, 2023. Today, Youngblood, an attorney at Earthjustice, is one of the attorneys litigating the Bloomington Business Park Specific Plan lawsuit.

EarthJustice is one of the legal firms litigating a case against San Bernardino County for violating the California Environmental Quality Act (CEQA) for its approval of the development. Their case argues that in approving the Bloomington Business Park Specific Plan, San Bernardino County failed to consider alternatives to the project and analyze and mitigate the project's impacts, including cumulative environmental impacts, which are requirements set by CEQA. CEQA is a public participation statute and its requirements serve to inform the community that will be impacted, provide community members an opportunity to express their concerns, and help shape the decision related to a project's development through public review.

Youngblood grew up near four major freeways in Los Angeles County, where her late father, Coy Youngblood Sr., was a diesel truck driver. As a child, she spent time with her dad "working on his truck...sometimes I would go on hauls with him," she said. "I just never thought about the fact that something we were in contact with was actually having such a negative health impact on us. I was spending so much time around diesel pollution."

The link between her asthma and the pollution where she grew up became clear to Youngblood during a college course. "What was being described in this case study was the truth of my upbringing. We were actually talking about me," she said.

Coming from a family of truck drivers, she is committed to developing "blue-green" (blue collar and environmental) solutions in the transition to clean energy. (Aryana Noroozi for Black Voice News / CatchLight Local)

Vote by Mail and Write in Kimberly "Kim" Calvin for San Bernardino City Council 6th Ward

By now you should have received your mail in ballot, and have hopefully begun the process of carefully voting for the candidates that will best represent you in the various halls of government, be it city hall, county board, state and federal houses of congress, and of course the White House.

I'd like to emphasize a few key races beginning with Joe Biden for President and Kamala Harris for Vice President. I first met Vice President Harris when she was campaigning for California Attorney General. She felt it was important to come to the Inland Empire to introduce herself. It was one of many trips she made to the region, making it clear that she wanted to represent the entire state. I believe that the Biden Administration has served the Black community well.

I also can't say enough about Congressman Pete Aguilar. He has brought over one billion dollars back to his district and is now the number two in Democratic Congressional leadership. I am proud to know and call him my friend.

Then there are Assemblymembers James Ramos of San Bernardino and Dr. Corey Jackson of Moreno Valley. I can say they have remained true to who they were before they were elected to the Assembly. They are doing outstanding work as leaders representing us in Sacramento. In the City of San Bernardino I urge you to re-elect Kim Calvin, Ben Reynoso and Damon Alexander to San Bernardino City Council. The San Bernardino Police Officers Association is out to run the city again by electing their personal puppets to assist their three other puppets already on the council. The mayor also has become part of the problem and recruited a neophyte candidate to run against Kim Calvin in the 6th Ward.

Edward Henderson California Black Media

San Francisco resident Anthony Hardnett works at Hospitality House, a community-based organization that offers recovery, reintegration and personal growth resources to people struggling with addiction and homelessness in and around the city's downtown area.

Growing up in the 1980s, Hardnett was a multi-sport star athlete. His speed on the track coupled with his exceptional skills as a running back in football earned him the respect and admiration of his community.

"Everyone," he says, saw his potential and predicted he would be one of the few to "make it out."

Unfortunately, Hardnett was drawn to the temptations of street life, leading him into substance abuse and crime – and, eventually, to a 29-year prison sentence, when he was just 21 years old.

"I saw people with the perms and slick dudes and girls. I saw that as being cool. I graduated from weed to cocaine and that's what took it to another level," he remembers.

After getting clean during his time in prison and earning a degree in counseling, Hardnett told California Black Media that he is motivated to transform as many lives as possible. In his role, Hardnett says he knows how the lack of resources for treating and preventing mental health and addiction are both complicating and contributing to California's homelessness crisis, which is having an outsized impact on African Americans.

Last year, Newsom announced Proposition (Prop) 1, an expansive ballot measure that he said would enhance access to treatment and housing for the chronically homeless population that Hardnett, his organization and some other mental health advocates are most concerned about. Many advocates believe that this segment of the homeless population is the hardest to transition from the streets to permanent housing.

"We see the signs of our broken mental health system every day -- too many Californians suffering from mental health needs or substance use disorders are unable to get the support or care they need," said Gov. Newsom in a statement at the time. "This will prioritize getting people off the streets, out of tents and into treatment."

Prop 1: A Mix of Skepticism and Hope Is Shaping Opinions About Calif's Upcoming Mental Health Ballot Proposal

San Francisco resident Anthony Hardnett receives a certificate with a smile, showcasing his achievement upon successful completion of his program. (Photo courtesy)

On March 5, the date of the presidential primary election, California voters will have the final word on whether the state will overhaul and expand access to mental health services treatment in two important ways.

Senate Bill (SB) 326 and Assembly Bill (AB) 531 are the foundation of Prop 1.

SB 326 modernizes the Mental Health Services Act (MHSA) passed in 2004 by reallocating funds. These reforms aim to expand services, including treatment for individuals with substance use disorders (SUD), prioritizing care for those with serious mental illnesses, ensuring sustained resources for housing and workforce, and maintaining investments in early intervention efforts.

AB 531 includes the $6.4 billion general obligation bond to build 11,150 new treatment beds and supportive housing units as well as outpatient capacity to help serve tens of thousands of people annually. Included in the bond is $1 billion set aside specifically for veterans' housing.

If passed, Prop 1 would direct counties, which are responsible for more than 90% of spending addressing homelessness and addiction, to prioritize housing over other treatment and prevention programs.

Since Newsom announced Prop 1, the state has invested more than $14 million on a public awareness campaign about the initiative.

Although Blacks in California comprise 6.5% of the state's population, they make up more than 40% of unhoused people across California. The drug-induced death rates among Blacks in California is also relatively high at 28.3% as compared to 23.2% among Whites and 11.1% among Latinos.

A 2023, University of California San Francisco study also found that an estimated 83% of people of unhoused people in the state had experienced a mental health condition.

IN MY OPINION

Unfortunately, the mayor put out a “hit piece” on Councilmember Calvin that repurposed language from an Executive Summary Report released to the public: “Ms. Calvin is clearly a highly engaged councilmember and was able to articulate a vision for her ward that she would address the needs of her community. While her passion for her electorate is evident, it appears that her desire to enact positive change would at times create an atmosphere that was not conducive to an efficient and collaborative workforce and may have violated city rules.” Councilmember Calvin has always voiced her concerns for the people in Ward 6, which is what all elected officials are supposed to do.

While the San Bernardino Police Officers Association glowingly endorsed Councilmember Juan Figueroa for securing a police substation in Ward 3, saying that the substation is ensuring the safety and well-being of the community, when Ward 5 Councilmember Ben Reynoso spoke up during a council meeting to discuss the idea of locating a substation in his ward the mayor and non-Black councilmembers voted no for the discussion.

In my opinion, this council and mayor have an anti-Black bias that is splitting the current council down racial lines. The police officers association has the money to produce slick campaign materials and mail to every voter, but less than 10 police officer currently live in the City of San Bernardino. Think about that for a minute. The police have told me personally several years ago they are afraid to live in the community with us, yet they want to select who will represent us. We cannot allow that to happen. In San Bernardino vote Ben Reynoso, Damon Alexander, and write-in Kim Calvin for city council.

Your VOTE BY MAIL BALLOT should have arrived in the mail. Return it by Election Day March 5th. If you haven’t received your ballot contact either the San Bernardino County Registrar of Voters (sbcountyelections.com) or the Riverside County Registrar of Voters (voteinfo.net).

KEEPING IT REAL

There is no more powerful force than a people steeped in their history. And there is no higher cause than honoring our struggle and ancestors by remembering.

those intangible attributes, the whispers of the ancestors, passed from generation to generation like the texture of our hair, the melanin in our skin, our height, our hips, our noses and our lips.

I believe this is where we find keys to understanding how to navigate current and future dilemmas as we continue to thrive as a people. Part of that, of course, is contingent on our relationships with other groups because here in America we are such a small percent of the total population. Therefore, we must strengthen alliances even as we strive for self reliance. In addition, we must be aware of what is happening to other Black people in the diaspora.

I know many of you might say this is a throwback to the thinking of the 1960s. To that I say and what if it is? The potential for progress through a greater understanding of Black history relative to Africa is as powerful today as it was 60 years ago.

In the meantime, let’s celebrate Black History today and everyday, we owe it to our ancestors and the seventh generation.

Of course, this is just my opinion. I’m keeping it real.

from the position as a first-year medical student to becoming an attending. We're always going to be advocating for our people in our community," Page said.

Similar to the goals of PRIME, Dr. Daniels hopes to encourage her staff to continue to engage with the community in her leadership role. Her goal is to lead by example and work with medical staff to understand how they can show their support and commitment to the community.

As a parent who has a son studying urology, a speciality that focuses on the urinary-tract system, Dr. Daniels offered a word of advice to him, and other physicians of color: "Be available. Be good listeners. Be proud of who you are."

Dr. Daniels believes that being a good listener is 50% of being a good physician.

support to 350 women through individualized services and educational workshops designed to address the health barriers that impact housing retention. With an understanding that health challenges are among the most significant barriers to participants' stability, DWC's approach to holistic wellness also ensures women experiencing homelessness are able to pursue broader goals, like finding and retaining employment or housing.

The organization Journey Out was awarded $90,000. Its project will focus on addressing the community health needs of violence and injury, behavioral health, and housing by providing victims of human trafficking with emotional and mental health services, case management and connections to community services, and emergency housing needs. In addition, Journey Out will collaborate with the Medical Safe Haven Program, SISTAHFRIENDS, and Jenesse Center to serve human trafficking victims with a whole-person approach, as well as provide victims with the support services they need to move their lives forward and free from violence and abuse.

Another awardee, the St. Francis Center (SFC), also received $90,000 to provide health and hygiene programs and wraparound supportive services to unhoused and extremely low-income communities. This grant will support SFC's hunger relief programs, including the unhoused breakfast program and pantry programs. It will increase the health and wellness of the local community by providing resource services, referrals and in-house services, including showers, clean clothing, underwear, socks, and laundry services. By partnering with health and wellness providers and similar organizations, SFC will continue to offer no-cost medical and wellness services to the community on a consistent basis.

Founded in 1887, Dignity Health - California Hospital Medical Center is a 318-bed, acute care, nonprofit hospital located in downtown Los Angeles. It offers a full complement of services including a Level II trauma center, the Los Angeles Center for Women's Health, obstetrics and pediatric services, and comprehensive cardiac and surgical services. The hospital shares a legacy of humankindness with Dignity Health. Follow this link to learn more about the organization.

"Modernizing the 20-year-old MHSA as the Behavioral Health Services Act (BHSA) responds to the critical need to address the tragic reality of unhoused people we see on our streets and the mental health and substance use issues that many experience, but also pays heed to the housing and critical wraparound support services that people struggling with homelessness need," said SB 326 Co-Author and Assembly Health Committee Chair Assemblymember Jim Wood.

Opponents of the proposition are concerned about the damage it could cause to existing mental healthcare programs. They fear that the heavy focus on housing will give counties no choice but to slash jobs and cut essential programs.

Karen Vicari, Director of Public Policy for Mental Health America spoke with California Black Media about why she is urging a "no" vote on Prop 1.

"Prop 1 will divert 30% of MHSA money that's currently going towards services that will divert that money towards other things like housing navigation," she said. "Not creating housing but services to help people find housing where there isn't any to be found. That's our biggest concern."

Vicari is also concerned about the types of programs that are bound to be cut.

"There are a lot of services for African American people that are going to be on the chopping block, she said. Those community centers do amazing work," added Vicari.

"Most of the bond money will go towards building in-patient treatment facilities for the highest-need people. Two billion goes to permanent supportive housing, but half of that is going towards veterans," she said. "So, only $922 million that will go towards actual housing. It is a drop in the bucket considering the state has already put $25 billion into homelessness efforts and it continues to rise."

Hardnett says he sees the solution to the addiction and homelessness problems is a combination of personal willpower, culturally competent treatment programs, more funding for addiction and more availability and access to care and stable housing.

"Some people say I only got clean because I was in prison. No, you can do it out here too," said Hardnett. You can get off the drugs, or any other habit you're on. Some people just need more help than others. By the grace of God, I made it out."

Join us in this concert as we celebrate Black History Month by showcasing talented Black composers whose compositions feature complexity, musical messaging, and sheer beauty. Don't miss these memorable pieces that will nurture your spirit and soul.

The program will include music by Florence Price as well as from the movie Selma.

The orchestra will perform the world premiere of Concerto Cinematique, featuring its composer and violinist, Chris Woods. This commission for the Riverside Philharmonic is sponsored by patrons Kathy Wright and Dwight Tate.

"The concerto became not only an expression of my deepest thoughts, feelings, and aspirations but also a way for me to inspire others to find meaning through their art and creativity."

- Chris Woods

We'll conclude the concert with the ground-breaking Negro Folk Symphony, the 1934 masterpiece by William Dawson. Filled with passion and skill, this piece has emotional intensity comparable to pieces by Mahler and Brahms, while adding Gershwin-like jazz rhythms to create a layered musical complexity.

Don't miss these musical gems!
