KEEPING IT REAL

It's Women's History Month!

March 8th was International Women's Day, so we thought it would be fun to kick off the month with six interesting facts about women you may not already know. Beyond "holding up half the sky," women also:

Did you know women typically have stronger immune systems than men?

Women have a stronger immune system due to the presence of two X chromosomes, which allows them to fight off infections and recover from illnesses more quickly, according to a study conducted by researchers at Ghent University in Belgium. They also have a higher percentage of body fat, which helps protect against certain conditions. The researchers further identified genetic materials known as microRNA on the X chromosome that can turn off certain genes to help keep women healthy.

Did you know the female brain is more intricate and detailed than that of men?

Dr. Ragini Verma, PhD, University of Pennsylvania, completed a study which showed female brains are structurally different from male brains, which can influence how women think and process information. As a result, women typically have greater language skills and better recall of verbal materials than men. Women also use both sides of their brain more often. This makes them more adept at multitasking.

Does it surprise you that women have a higher pain threshold?

Women are able to endure pain better than men because they have a different memory of pain. They tend to remember pain differently and also handle discomfort better. Researchers say this may be the result of the physiological changes that occur during childbirth.

Would you be surprised to learn women's senses are better attuned than men?

They see colors better than men due to their color vocabulary, according to Israel Abramov of Brooklyn College. They are also more sensitive to sound and speech. This allows them to pick up on subtle nuances. They also have a keener sense of smell, thought to be an evolutionary trait for finding a potential partner and detecting

Rialto Unified School District's Black History Celebration Makes History

VOICE Contributor

The Rialto Unified School District (RUSD) hosted its remarkable annual Black History Celebration at Wilmer Amina Carter High School on Saturday, February 24, 2024. Themed "Celebrating Unsung Heroes," the event showcased the rich diversity and heritage of Black history, leaving an indelible mark on the hearts of the RUSD education communities.

The afternoon celebration featured a wide array of performances that paid homage to African American culture and achievements. Attendees were immersed in a cultural journey through music, dance, poetry, and powerful speeches, with a special focus on the District's Dual Language Immersion (DLI) program.

The California Department of Public Health (CDPH) launched the Take on Alzheimer's campaign in late February.

The awareness campaign is aimed toward educating all Californians about brain health, the difference between Alzheimer's and dementia, and ways to improve communication between patients' loved ones and health care providers.

Over the next 20 years, the impact of Alzheimer's Disease and Related Dimensions (AD/ADRDs) on the State of California will increase dramatically, according to the CDPH. Longer life expectancies and the aging of the baby boomer generation will lead to an increase in the number and percentage of Californians who will be 65 years of age and older. Since the primary risk factor for AD/ADRDs is older age, a significant increase is anticipated in the numbers of people who will be living with the disease.

"It's critical to build dementia expertise into programs and services supporting our state's increasingly diverse older adult population, including family caregivers and our workforce," said Susan DeMarois, Director of the California Department of Aging in a press release.

"Widespread prevention, screening and detection will enable more families to make important social, medical, financial, and personal decisions and we want our aging network to be well equipped to meet their needs."

In 2019, approximately 660,000 Californians over 65 years of age lived with AD/ADRDs, which accounted for roughly 11% of the disease's prevalence across the United States (5.8 million people).

Between 2019 and 2040 a doubling in the number of Californians living with AD/ADRDs is expected. This increase will affect all regions of the state across various demographic groups.

Women are especially impacted by the disease, making up nearly two-thirds of diagnosed Americans. Other groups disproportionately impacted include older Black Americans, who are twice as likely to develop the disease. In the next 20 years, the number of people living with AD/ADRDs is projected to triple, growing to 91,071 people.

Latinos are one-and-a-half times more likely to develop Alzheimer's than White older adults.

Additional CDPH estimates indicate that between 2019 and 2040:

- California's population will grow by 16%, while the population of people living with AD/ADRDs will expand by 127%;
- The number of Californians over 75 years of age living with AD/ADRDs will more than double, growing to over 1.3 million.
- The number of Californians between 55 and 74 years of age living with AD/ADRDs will increase 26%, growing to 194,975 people.
- The number of people living with AD/ADRDs in California's fifteen most populous counties (those with a population of 700,000 or more) will at least double.
- The number of Californians living with AD/

ADRDs will increase by 11% for women, growing to 917,482 people; and increase by 8% for men, growing to 609,197 people.

- The number of people living with AD/ADRDs more than double for Californians who identify as Asian American/Pacific Islander, growing to 241,106 people.

The Take on Alzheimer's Campaign aims to reach these disproportionately impacted communities through multilingual and multicultural advertising, partnerships with community-based organizations and engaging trusted ethnic media journalists. The campaign also plans to educate these communities about brain health, the signs of aging, and AD/ADRD symptoms to make a positive impact on them and their loved ones by promoting brain health and benefiting from early detection and diagnosis.

"This campaign will empower our diverse

On March 5, Perris Union High School District Board of Trustees voted 4-1 to eliminate 23 positions and dismiss employees from eight positions across the district including social workers, behavior specialists, substance abuse interventionists and the director of the Diversity, Equity and Inclusion Department. Trustee Elizabeth Vallejo was the only member who voted no.

Fifteen-year-old Rocco Nelms addressed the board during the March 5 meeting and detailed how 190 students and teachers from Perris High School signed a petition to express concern for their mental health and wellbeing.

“I wanted to speak out and raise my voice about what was going on within our school district and how it's kind of oppressive, to not only minority students like me, but students who struggled with their mental health,” Nelms said in an interview with Black Voice News.

During the special meeting, the board of trustees voted to eliminate the Diversity, Equity and Inclusion Department, which consists of Dr. Casaundra McNair and secretary Helen Stimach. Dr. McNair is the Director of Diversity, Equity and Inclusion for the Perris Union High School District.

“If they get rid of this program, and if they get rid of this division, there's not going to be proper teachings to the students and their families, and administration staff and faculty, including teachers, to understand how to work with students of color and work with students who are part of the LGBTQIA+ community,” Nelms said.

Dr. McNair officially began her role last January and works directly for the superintendent of schools. She works within every aspect of the organization, from human resources to budgetary decisions to educational services.

Keynote speaker Rev. Sam Casey, alongside poet Brandon Allen and special guest, National Football Defensive End Kenny Clark from the Green Bay Packers, provided inspirational messages that underscored the event's theme.

Rialto USD Board President Joseph W. Martinez reflected on the day's significance, stating, "A Black History Celebration that made history. The District African American Parent Advisory Council (DAAPAC) the students, staff and Families of the Rialto Unified School District made this a celebration to remember. Thank you to everyone that made this an historic event."

The successful execution of this year's Black History Celebration is attributed to the collaborative efforts of the DAAPAC, students, staff, and the Family and Community Engagement Team. Their dedication to creating a memorable experience exemplifies RUSD's commitment to celebrating diversity

"Preserving California's Urban Oases & Still"

Wild Places: A Testament to LWCF's Impact

Jada Stevens

In urban communities two things have happened: (1) advocacy for open space has manifested as exclusionary racism in clothed as conservation, and (2) it feels like the money for conservation doesn't find its way to our communities.

40 Acre Conservation League, California's first

Black-led land trust, was founded to reimagine how conservation can benefit all people, especially people of color. The roots of land conservation are exclusionary, an affront to all people of color, especially Native Americans and Black Americans. However, the Land and Water Conservation Fund (LCWF) has had a transformative effect in creating some of the wealthiest Black communities in America.

While not a perfect program, its impact can be felt in Black communities across the state. The communities of South Los Angeles County, the Inland Empire, the East Bay, Sacramento County, and Central Valley Communities have collectively received millions of dollars of investments to bring nature closer to home.

For Black people, who are overwhelmingly concentrated in California's urban areas, having green spaces is extremely important for both physical and mental health, especially in the hood. There are two studies that are showing correlations between poor mental health and urbanization.

I can personally testify that LWCF investments in Baldwin Hills are not merely figures on paper; they're the lifeblood of the communities of Baldwin Hills, Ladera, View Park, and Windsor Hills. These funds, in partnership with the Baldwin Hills Conservancy's investments, have helped support the trails, scenic overlook, and natural spaces that keep us from feeling confined in the community. This is how conservation should support Black neighborhoods, to provide spaces where we gather, we play, and we feel alive.

Our newest Senator, Laphonza Butler, has an opportunity to both protect these funds from being clawed back in the U.S. Senate, and ensure this money arrives in our communities. Baldwin Hills is a national model of urban conservation. It's time to do more and replicate this model!

All Three Black San Bernardino Councilmembers Not Returning to City Hall

For The First Time in 57 Years the 6th Ward Will Not Have Black Representation

by S.E. Williams

This week's primary election has left San Bernardino's Black community pondering its political future with the loss of all three of the current Black city councilmembers.

Less than four years ago, the City of San Bernardino marked a milestone with the election of three Black city councilmembers. Those elected included Damon Alexander, Kimberly Calvin and Ben Reynoso.

Their election came more than 50 years after the city council was first integrated with the election of the city's first Black councilman, Norris Gregory. Despite his election coming in the midst of the civil rights era, Norris held on and served two terms. Fate, however, was not as kind to Alexander, Calvin and Reynoso as preliminary results from Tuesday's Presidential Primary Election showed all three councilmember going down in defeat.

Perhaps their election in 2020 was a sign of the times. It was in the midst of the COVID-19 pandemic and Black and Brown communities were being impacted disproportionately, the brutal murder of George Floyd, a Black man, at the hands of police in Minneapolis, MN, stirred the consciousness of the nation, and municipalities were beginning to declare racism a public health crisis. Many viewed the simultaneous election of three Black candidates as a promise of change.

After the polls closed Tuesday, it looks as though none of the current Black city council members will be returning for the upcoming term. Damon Alexander and Ben Reynoso, despite their past service, did not secure top positions in their respective wards. And Kimberly Calvin, the third Black council member, faced a setback when a campaign error left her off the primary ballot, forcing her to mount a write-in campaign.

With Mario Flores' win in that race, it is the first time in 57 years — since Norris Gregory's historic win in 1967 — that San Bernardino's 6th Ward will not have a Black city council member representing it at city hall.

Longtime San Bernardino resident, former

The sign is still here saving children today... The ward system was designed to have the citizens select a local voice in the city government. In this election it was Mayor Tran who selected, encouraged and funded the Flores campaign. It's a sad day because he will be a mouthpiece for the mayor.

- Hardy Brown, Sr.
BVN Publisher Emeritus

San Bernardino city school board member, and publisher emeritus Hardy Brown recalls how long Black representation has been integral to city government. "I was involved in Councilman Gregory's election by hosting a coffee for him at our home on California Street. We were able to get a stop sign in front of Rio Vista Elementary School for the safety of the children crossing the street."

"The sign is still here saving children today," he said, "The ward system was designed to have the citizens select a local voice in the city government. In this election it was Mayor Tran who selected, encouraged and funded the Flores campaign. It's a sad day because he will be a mouthpiece for the mayor."

The potential lack of Black voices on the city council raises critical questions about equitable representation and community involvement in the city's decision-making processes.

"I am dismayed that there is an effort to erase Black representation in a community that has been historically marginalized by the city leadership," Former Assemblymember and 6th Ward resident Cheryl Brown said.

"I wonder what Norris Gregory would say. It's also telling that we supported a mayor who has now turned against us and lied about it," she continued.

Recognizing the significance of Black representation beyond symbolism, community leaders stress the importance of ensuring that diverse voices are heard and valued in local governance. They emphasized the need for proactive measures to cultivate a leadership that reflects the city's demographic diversity.

Westside Action Group President Alton Garrett shared, "The voters in San Bernardino have spoken and their voices have been heard loud and clear." However, he said, the result of Tuesday's election "is a combination of low voter turn-out and people who are eligible to vote not voting. Regardless of the reasons, the voters in San Bernardino have a city council that does not represent their city, and they have to live with until the next election cycle."

In response to these developments, there is a renewed focus on supporting and empowering Black candidates to participate in the political process. Community initiatives, like BLU Educational Foundation's Black Public Officials Leadership Training program, aim to nurture a new generation of Black leaders capable of making meaningful contributions to local governance through training in base building, candidate development, campaign development, and connection to a Black political network.

Low voter turnout may also have played a role in how the election appears to be playing out. As of Thursday evening, preliminary results show turnout in San Bernardino County was an abysmal 14.99%.

"There is enough blame to go around," said Mr. Garrett, "we do not need to point fingers, we need to correct the situation so this never happens again."

Additionally, students learn best when they have someone in their classroom that looks like them, or on their campus that they're able to identify with," McNair explained.

"The other major part of my role is making sure that our staff is diverse, so that our students can relate and have hope that there is something for them on the other side of high school."

Ahead of the special board meeting held on March 9, Assemblymember Dr. Corey Jackson released a statement urging school districts to consider community input when making budget cuts to educators and programs offered throughout the district. Jackson acknowledged the challenges of making financial decisions, but noted that the Perris Union High School District special board meeting "serves as a cautionary example of moving too hastily without allowing the community sufficient time to respond to potential cuts."

"Diversity, Equity, and Inclusion programs have proven value add to school districts and communities," Jackson stated in the press release.

The proposal also included the elimination of the District Equity Team (36 staff members made up of certificated, classified employees and managers), student Listening Sessions and other programs and trainings conducted by McNair.

"It's going to have a tremendous impact. I can tell you that almost all of the positions that are up for elimination (tonight), over 70% of those employees are people of color number one," McNair said. "So, it's going to have a tremendous impact on the relatability of staff to students."

During the 2022 fiscal year, Perris Union High District was identified as a "significantly disproportionate" local education agency (LEA) by the California Department of Education due to the large number of Hispanic students who missed more than 10 days of school.

According to the department, LEAs identified as significantly disproportionate undergo trainings that provide schools with knowledge and technical skills to understand the problems and concerns in their schools, and identify actions to address disproportionality.

Perris Union High School District developed a plan to address the disparities in suspensions among Hispanic students and implemented alternative suspension programs that allowed students to stay on campus and access services instead of being sent home. Intervention services and substance abuse services were also offered at school campuses across the district to support student needs.

"By removing these services to students — just thinking about the behaviorists and the substance abuse specialists — we're going to see an increase of the fights on campus, altercations, as well as the violations of finding students with controlled substances," McNair said.

Nelms, who identifies as Black and part of the LGBTQIA+ community, shared that the loss of wellness programs and support staff on campus will have a huge impact on vulnerable students.

"If they get rid of the wellness centers, the social workers will not be able to help these children who are in foster care who are on our campus, which is a smaller percentage, but we still matter and we still count," Nelms said.

Although the board has ruled on eliminating dozens of positions, this isn't the end, according to Nelms who shared that students and educators are going to continue to petition and reach out to different organizations to find grants.

According to McNair, all of the cuts to these positions were related to direct student services, which will have a big impact on students across the district.

"If there was something I could say to the board, I'd tell them that they were elected communities to support brain health, better understand and the difference between signs of aging and symptoms of dementia and encourage individuals to have important conversations with their loved ones and health care providers,” said CDPH Director and State Public Health Officer, Dr. Tomás J. Aragón in a release.

The campaign also believes starting honest and empathetic conversations with friends, loved ones or a healthcare provider can be critical to improving outcomes and combating fear and stigma associated with AD/ADRDs.

Based on population-level evidence, the sex health conditions and behaviors that increase risk for cognitive decline and AD are midlife hypertension (age 45-64), physical inactivity, midlife obesity (age 45-64), diabetes, smoking (age 45 and older) and poor sleep (less than six hours a night).

California Attorney General Boosts Bill Banning Medical Debt From Credit Reports

Molly Castle Work KFF Health News

California Attorney General Rob Bonta announced Monday that he is throwing his weight behind legislation to bar medical debt from showing up on consumer credit reports, a Democratic-led effort to offer protection to patients squeezed by health care bills.

Bonta is a sponsor of Sen. Monique Limón’s bill, which seeks to block health care providers, as well as any contracted collection agency, from sharing a patient’s medical debt with credit reporting agencies. It would also prevent credit reporting agencies from accepting, storing, or sharing any information concerning medical debt. Medical debt isn’t necessarily an accurate reflection of credit risk, and its inclusion in credit reports can depress credit scores and make it hard for people to get a job, rent an apartment, or secure a car loan.

“This is a broken part of our current system that needs to be fixed,” Bonta, a Democrat, told KFF Health News. “This is California’s opportunity, and we relish the ability to be up in front of key issues.”

If enacted, California would become the third state to remove medical bills from consumer credit reports, following Colorado and New York in 2023. Minnesota has a proposal to do the same. Last year, the Biden administration announced plans to develop similar federal rules through the Consumer Financial Protection Bureau, but they have yet to be released. And should former President Donald Trump return to the White House, he would have the prerogative to undo the rules.

Limón said it’s important for the state to enshrine its own protections into law alongside the federal push. “We may be waiting for a very long time to see outcomes that California could potentially deliver in the next year,” said the Santa Barbara Democrat.

Bonta said he’s not sure what sort of opposition to the bill to expect, but he wonders if providers and collection agencies will be resistant.

A KFF Health News analysis found that credit reporting threats are the most common collection tactic used by hospitals to get patients to pay their bills. A hospital, for example, might be concerned that a credit score ban might make it more difficult to get patients to pay for medical care they have already received.

The three largest U.S. credit agencies — Equifax, Experian, and TransUnion — have said they would stop including some medical debt on credit reports as of 2022. Among the excluded debts are paid-off bills and those less than $500, but the agencies’ voluntary actions left out millions of patients with bigger medical bills on their credit reports.

Limón said she often hears from constituents about the impact medical debt has on their lives. Medical debt disproportionately affects low-income, Black, and Latino Californians, according to the California Health Care Foundation.

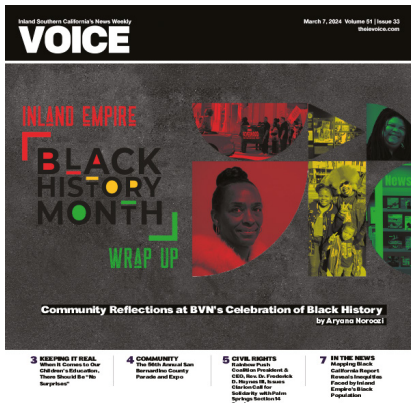

And, increasingly, people with healthy incomes who often carry medical insurance are incurring medical debt. A KFF Health News-NPR investigation found that about 100 million people across the country are saddled with medical debt, which has forced some to give up their homes, ration food, and take on extra work.

Though the legislation wouldn’t forgive medical debt, Limón said she hopes it will encourage people to seek medical care when they need it.

“You hear so many people now that are concerned about getting medical care because they can’t afford it and instead wait to get worse,” Limón said. “If the bill passes, we’ll see less fear and more people going to get medical care.”

Who do you think has a better memory women or men?

The answer is Yes! This is because they are more likely to identify with the emotional nuances and details of a story. This makes it easier for them to remember according to one study. They also have better verbal memories, due to their natural ability to pick up on subtle variations in language. In addition, they are better than men at connecting words and recognizing patterns.

Finally, did you know women are better at going the extra mile?

According to experts, women have greater physical endurance primarily because they have higher levels of something called slow-twitch muscle fibers. They also have greater lung capacity and hormones that help them conserve energy and use it more efficiently.

Gov. Newsom Announces New Council; $182 Million Investment to Create More Jobs Faster

Tanu Henry, Antonio Ray Harvey and Joe W. Bowers Jr. | California Black Media

Sacramento - Gov. Gavin Newsom is committed to creating more jobs, faster, and increasing pathways to higher paying careers for Californians from all backgrounds, according to his office.

To achieve these goals, on March 8, Newsom announced the formation of a new state-level committee focused on increasing jobs called the California Jobs First Council. He also awarded $182 million in grants to 13 organizations around the state involved in developing viable economic development projects that will stimulate employment and attract significant government and private sector investments.

Gov. Newsom has appointed Dee Dee Myers, Senior Advisor to Governor Newsom and Director of the Governor's Office of Business & Economic Development to co-chair the council. She will work alongside co-chair Stewart Knox, California Secretary of Labor & Workforce Development.

"I am looking forward to working with my colleagues to align strategic investments that further economic growth and job creation in every region of California," said Myers.

Other members of the council are the Director of the Governor's Office of Planning & Research; Secretary of the California Natural Resources Agency; Secretary of the California Department of Food and Agriculture; Secretary of the California Environmental Protection Agency; Secretary of the California Health & Human Services Agency;

Secretary of the California Department of Veterans Affairs; and the President of the Public Utilities Commission.

"California has created more opportunities, more jobs, and more businesses than any other state, but we need to ensure that we're all moving forward together," Newsom said in a statement. "Through this new council and these investments, we're aligning all of our economic resources to create more jobs, faster for Californians in every community."
