PUBLISHER'S NOTES

Celebrating Black Press Week 2024

Last we celebrated Black Press Week, a time to annually reflect on the pivotal role the Black Press has historically played in our society and to consider the specific contributions and significance of Black Voice News within this important tradition.

The inception of the Black Press can be traced back to March 16, 1827, with the publication of Freedom's Journal, the first African-American owned and operated newspaper in New York City. Its founders, John Russwurm and Samuel Cornish, established the newspaper on the principle that Black people had the right and responsibility to speak on their own behalf, to articulate their own narratives, and to counter the prevalent racist misinformation of the mainstream press of their era. They stated, "We wish to plead our own cause. Too long have others spoken for us," a sentiment that laid the foundation for the mission of the Black Press.

This mission is carried on by Black Voice News, which, through our commitment to truth-telling and community engagement, continues to embody the core values of the Black Press. We serve not only as a news outlet but as a vital component of the community, offering insightful analysis, reporting on issues directly impacting Black Americans, and fostering a platform for dialogue and empowerment. Something we have done for over half a century.

Through our work, we present perspectives often overlooked or misrepresented by mainstream media. By focusing on issues of social justice, economic inequality, education, and political participation, we ensure that the narratives and concerns of Black communities are not only heard but placed at the forefront of societal discourse.

We believe in encouraging a participatory dialogue that strengthens our connection with the community. This engagement ensures that our reporting is not just about the Black community but also for and with the Black community, making it a genuine reflection of the experiences, challenges, and achievements of our readers.

As we close this year's observance of Black Press Week, it's important to remember that the Black Press remains a vital institution, not just as a historical legacy but as an active, evolving participant in the fight for justice and equality. Black Voice News is proud to continue this tradition, understanding that our role is not just to inform but to advocate, engage, and inspire.

USA over Brazil 1-0 in Inaugural CONCACAF Gold Cup

The US Women's national soccer team was victorious over Brazil at Snap Dragon Stadium in San Diego, winning the first Confederation of North, Central and Caribbean Association Football (CONCACAF) Gold Cup in front of 31,000 fans.

This year's inaugural Gold Cup for women mirrored the men's Gold Cup tradition, held every two years among North American national soccer teams. The tournament began qualifying round matches on February 20th and concluded on March 10th with Sunday's final at Snap Dragon.

The competition included the United States, Mexico, Canada, Brazil, Colombia, Costa Rica, Panama, Dominican Republic, Argentina, Peru, Paraguay, and Salvador.

Brazil handled Mexico 3-0 in the semifinal, but team USA survived a tougher match against Canada in their semifinal. Playing on a rain-soaked pitch to a 2-2 tie after regulation, the U.S. women won on a shootout to reach Sunday's final.

Led by an interim coach, at this point, the U.S. women needed this tournament to validate who they are. This hard-fought Gold Cup victory certainly helps replace the collective memories and bad feelings from early exits at the Tokyo Olympic Games and World Cup 2023. A redemption of sorts and a trophy to hoist over their heads can potentially reset the attitude and confidence of the team going forward.

T Jay Diallo, CEO
First Community Capital

First Community Capital (FCC), proudly certified by the US Department of the Treasury as a Community Development Financial Institution (CDFI), is thrilled to report substantial achievements and financial growth for the year ended 2023. As a dedicated non-profit economic development institution, FCC has steadfastly championed economic justice and opportunity, dedicating its efforts to support economically disadvantaged small businesses and Low- and Moderate-Income individuals, particularly focusing on Black, Indigenous, and People of Color (BIPOC).

Expanding Impact through Strategic Programs and Lending

Our innovative microlending and business counseling programs have significantly advanced the economic well-being of the communities we serve. The growth in our lending activities, with the total number of loans increasing to over 75 in 2023, highlights our dedication to fostering economic recovery and resilience among underrepresented communities in Riverside, San Bernardino, and Los Angeles counties.

Milestones and Recognitions

FCC's journey has been marked by significant milestones, including our certification as a Community Development Financial Institution (CDFI) by the US Department of the Treasury, a testament to our commitment to financial inclusivity and community development. This certification, along with the acquisition of our first CDFI Technical Assistance Grant in 2022 and reaching the 100 loans milestone in October 2023, underscores our impact and dedication to our mission.

Robust Financial and Operational Growth

The year 2023 saw remarkable financial achievements for FCC, with total assets increasing by 66% to $750K and Unrestricted Net Assets growing by 236%. These gains reflect our strong financial health and strategic growth. Additionally, our continued revenue growth, with a notable increase of 18% in 2023, alongside consistent growth in net income, underscores the effectiveness of our operational strategies and market presence.

Empowerment through Education and Events

Our technical assistance programs and community events, including the "Reimagine

First Community Capital Reports Significant Year-End Achievements and Growth for 2023

T. Jay Diallo at the Black Voice News ideas events.

Your Business" workshops and the inaugural African Immigrant Entrepreneurship Ecosystem cohort, exemplify our commitment to empowering entrepreneurs and small business owners with the knowledge and resources needed for success.

Gratitude and Future Outlook

FCC extends its deepest gratitude to our board of directors, staff, sponsors, partners, and the communities we serve. The success stories of businesses such as L & R Global Link, Martinez & Sons, and Haadi Shipping & Auto Body Work testify to the transformative impact of our services. As we move forward, FCC remains committed to its mission of economic justice and opportunity for all, reinforcing its position as an equal opportunity lender and a pillar of support for the underrepresented.

We thank our partners, including Rise Economy, CAMEO, PNC Bank, US Bank, Bank of America, CCEDA, Credit Builders Alliance, African American Alliance of CDFI's & CEOs, Pacific Premier Bank,

City National Bank, CA Investment and Innovation Program (Cal IIP), Pacific Western Bank, Sisters of Charity of Cincinnati, Loma Linda Health University (LLUH), Uplift San Bernardino, Riverside County Black Chamber of Commerce, Murrieta / Wildomar Chamber of Commerce, Tito's Handmade Vodka, for their continued support and collaboration. Together, we are making a difference in the lives of those we serve and contributing to a more equitable and prosperous future.

*About First Community Capital
Headquartered in Riverside, CA, First Community Capital is a non-profit, CDFI certified by the US Department of the Treasury, dedicated to providing accessible capital and support to disadvantaged small businesses and individuals. We are committed to being an equal opportunity lender, with a focus on serving BIPOC communities, women, veterans, refugees, immigrants, and individuals impacted by the justice system.*

NEWS IN BRIEF

California Service Corps Announces Effort to Recruit Thousands of Young People

Charlene Williams College Corp fellow of Perris, CA accepts a certificate of recognition from Josh Fryday, chief service officer for California Volunteers, and the City of Riverside Mayor Patricia Lock Dawson.

California Black Media

California Volunteers, part of Gov. Gavin Newsom's California for All initiative, last week announced that it is recruiting hundreds of young people in the across the state to participate in its paid service programs aligned with opportunities to solve some of the state's most challenging problems like climate change, hatred, education disparities, and more.

Riverside Mayor Patricia Lock Dawson joined Josh Fryday, California's Chief Service Officer at the event organized to celebrate the first anniversary of California Volunteers launch of its Job Corps fellow program in Riverside and to announce the new recruitment.

Lock Dawson said in Riverside alone, 100 California Volunteer college job corps fellows have been placed with a number of organizations.

"Governor Newsom and California Volunteers working in partnership with leaders like Mayor Lock Dawson believe that service has the power to connect us. Service has the power to teach us," said Fryday.

"We are announcing today here in Riverside to recruit across the State of California over 10,000 members of the California Service Corps," said Fryday. "We need your help getting the word out about CaServiceCorps.com where you can find out about all the opportunities to fit your needs and your passion.

"You don't have to let your past define your future. In fact your future is now and it starts today with the Service Corps," said Lock Dawson.

California First Partner Jennifer Siebel Newsom Marks Equal Pay Day With Website Launch

California Black Media

On March 12, National Equal Pay Day, California First Partner Jennifer Siebel Newsom reminded companies operating in California of their responsibility to pay women equitably and sign on to the California Equal Pay Pledge, which was first launched in 2019.

Siebel Newsom also announced the launch of a new website, the Equal Pay Playbook, a resource she says is a "key component" of the her gender equity strategy.

"Women are the backbone of their communities and the economy and the breadwinner or co-breadwinner in most households in the U.S., yet the gender wage gap continues to deliver the message that our work and our contributions have less value than men's," said Siebel Newsom.

"More than 200 California-based companies, organizations, and municipalities have signed the California Equal Pay Pledge -- more than doubling the number of Pledge signatories on Equal Pay Day in 2023," according to a press release from Siebel Newsom's office.

The same day, the U.S. Department of Labor released the findings of a study titled "Still Bearing the Cost." It revealed that Black women lost $42.7 billion in wages compared to White men in 2023.

"These losses are driven entirely by the fact that Black and Hispanic women are concentrated disproportionately in jobs that, on average, pay lower wages than those held by White men," a U.S. DOJ press release stated.

A Hold That Won't Let Go: A System Lacks Access to Mental Health Resources

by Aryana Noroozi

Although Jorge Arturo Ruiz, 49, known as Arturo, showed signs of bipolar disorder throughout his life, he wasn't diagnosed until he served a six-and-a-half-year prison sentence for domestic violence and great bodily injury. Arturo, a Los Angeles County native and now resident of Moreno Valley, entered prison in 2017. He is one of roughly 37,000 incarcerated people who experienced a mental health condition while serving time in California state prisons.

Over the past decade, the number of incarcerated individuals in California jails with an active mental health case has risen by 63%, according to the California Department of Health Care Services (DHCS).

An estimated 18% of the general population has a mental health condition, while that proportion jumps to more than 37% for those in prison according to an analysis by the California Budget and Policy Center. This is true across the full spectrum of diagnoses, including bipolar disorders.

According to the National Institute of Mental Health (NIMH), bipolar disorder is a mental illness that causes unusual shifts in a person's mood, energy, activity levels, and concentration. These shifts can make it difficult to carry out day-to-day tasks due to clear changes in mood, energy and activity levels.

"It affected my relationships before prison. It affected my business' success. I would make a lot of people mad and I would lose business," Arturo said. "I lost a lot of good quality employees because of my bipolarity."

The NIMH reports that these moods range from periods of extremely "up," elated, irritable or energized behavior, known as manic episodes, to very “down,” sad, indifferent or hopeless periods, known as depressive episodes.

While completing his sentence at Corcoran State Prison, Arturo saw a therapist monthly and a psychiatrist regularly. But since his release just over a year ago, Arturo has had difficulty finding an adequate psychiatrist and therapist. Arturo finds this period of reintegrating into a new life after prison challenging and a time that

After I became an alcoholic...I started doing coke and I fell in love with her. Once I did the first hit, I wasn't bipolar anymore. I was just happy the whole time, and everytime I started to feel a little bipolar, I would just do another hit is critical to maintain access to mental health treatment.

Arturo's story sheds light on the complex dilemmas faced by many incarcerated or formerly incarcerated individuals who entered the system with preexisting mental health conditions and had to navigate mental healthcare while in prison. The struggle to access quality mental health care is ongoing as Arturo works to rebuild his life.

How childhood experiences impact mental health

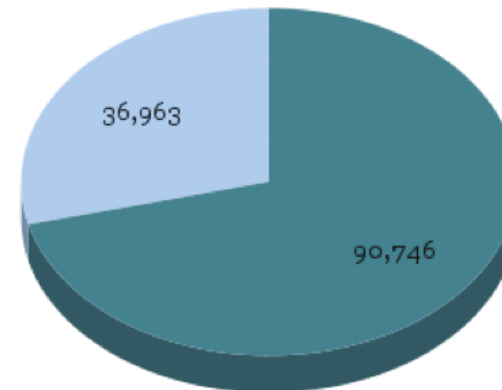

Arturo was born in Los Angeles, but after his father left, his mother moved the family back to

Nearly 29% of Incarcerated Individuals Received Mental Health Treatment

In December 2018, there were 127,709 individuals incarcerated at the state level.

Mexicali where they lived with her parents and siblings. She worked most of the time and dated often.

“I would meet a new boyfriend every other weekend. So, I guess it was a very psychologically disturbing and abusive environment,” he said.

Arturo recalled his mother sending him out to sell ice cream with a cart on the street. He remembers what it felt like to dodge speeding cars and to be beaten by gangsters who sometimes stole his money.

According to a 2020 research study which examined more than 2,000 adults with bipolar disorder, different adverse childhood experiences (ACE) can have varying impacts on patients diagnosed with bipolar disorder. Adverse childhood experiences (ACE) are potentially physical, emotional or sexual traumatic events that occur in childhood.

The study found “a positive association between substance misuse and ACEs, which remained even after adjustment for sex and age. In addition to ACEs, being male was associated with an increased frequency of substance abuse or dependence.”

Arturo attends his godson's (right) first communion in 2012. He was 37 years old and had not begun using cocaine or excessively drinking alcohol at this time. (Photo courtesy Arturo Ruiz)

The authors found that 63.1% of the patients had a history of exposure to at least one ACE. They also noted that the more exposure to numerous ACEs had a significant association to the severity of clinical symptoms such as suicide attempts and multiple conditions related to substance misuse.

As Arturo grew older, he didn't understand the highs and lows he experienced. He began to mask and self-medicate in the years leading up to his case. According to the NIMH, many people with bipolar disorder also struggle with substance abuse.

For Arturo, drinking and substance use became a way to numb the pain.

"After I became an alcoholic...I started doing coke and I fell in love with her. Once I did the first hit, I wasn't bipolar anymore. I was just happy the whole time, and everytime I started to feel a little bipolar, I would just do another hit."

Arturo attributes his substance abuse to putting himself in a predicament that led to his arrest.

An analysis of post-release care by Judi Nightingale, director of Population Health in Riverside County, highlighted the correlation between mental health attributes and recidivism. The report noted that 25% of incarcerated people with a mental health illness had three or more prior convictions compared to 5% of those without a mental health condition.

After serving time, Arturo was released into what he described as a new world.

"I come out — there's no car, there's no house because I got rid of everything and there's really no money coming in," he said.

"Mental illnesses are either the primary reason or a significant contributing factor to the reason they're intersecting with the criminal justice system," said Monica Ngyuen in a previous interview. Nguyen is a Riverside County deputy public defender and member of the mental health court.

She explained that the same reasons her clients couldn't access mental health treatment prior to their alleged offense do not simply disappear once they enter the system. Consider someone who is self-medicating with drugs and now faces a drug charge, Nguyen described. Their mental illness worsens as they struggle with their mental illness, substance use and potential jail time.

According to the Substance Abuse and Mental Health Services Administration (SAMHSA), there are several types of medications used to treat bipolar disorder such as mood stabilizers, antipsychotics, and antidepressants.

Accessing treatment while inside

Prior to being sentenced, Arturo's mental health worsened. He wanted to go to trial, but was urged to take an eight month deal so that his daughter wouldn't be sent to Child Protective Services since his ex-wife was also arrested and charged alongside him.

Arturo expected to go to fire camp in lieu of prison, but instead he received a longer sentence and was sent to prison. It was during this time that Arturo began to feel a heavy weight on his shoulders.

Over the course of his six-and-a-half-year sentence, Arturo spent time in seven prisons across California and one in Arizona. It wasn't until the last stretch of his sentence that he received treatment. After picking a fight at Chuckawalla Valley State Prison in Blythe, he ended up meeting with a psychiatrist.

"I was suicidal and I was picking fights with the biggest guys to see if they would punch my ticket," he said. The psychiatrist suspected that Arturo's behavior was a sign of suicidal behavior.

The psychiatrist wrote a referral for Arturo to begin treatment, but it was months later, when he was transferred to Corcoran — where he spent his final 18 months in prison — that he received treatment. According to Arturo, the treatment remained consistent for the duration of his confinement.

The California Department of Corrections and Rehabilitation (CDCR) has specific criteria for those who need a referral for mental health treatment. According to their mental health services program guide, any incarcerated individual who demonstrates unusual or uncharacteristic behavior while committing a disciplinary infraction is eligible for a referral.

At Corcoran, Arturo saw a therapist monthly and was diagnosed with bipolar disorder.

“That’s when I started learning about my disorder and I started learning how to cope with things,” he said.

He was prescribed medication that helped him feel more calm.

“You’re always on edge. You’re always vigilant. You’re always watching your back,” he said, explaining how the medication allowed him to be less hypervigilant.

Any incarcerated individual can be referred for mental health services at any time and can be referred for evaluation by concerned staff members.

According to CDCR policy, those incarcerated may self-refer or be referred by any staff member for a review by a mental health clinician. Referrals can be made on an emergent, urgent or routine basis. In the case of emergent referrals, the patient must be under constant observation until evaluated. An urgent referral must be seen within 24 hours and a routine referral should be seen within five working days.

However, formerly incarcerated individuals shared that in their experiences, this time frame is not always honored.

Last year, Raymond Goins was released from a 28-year sentence for robbery of an inhabited dwelling with a firearm. Today, he works with Silicon Valley De-Bug, a community-based advocacy organization. He said self-referrals can take months to be considered, if ever followed up on. While serving time, Raymond self-referred multiple times, but on several occasions CDCR claimed they never received his referrals.

“In my opinion, the policies and practices that could help remedy this is basic accountability and compassion,” Goins said. “[Humanize] the individual that is requesting help and disregard the inherent bias that staff has towards [incarcerated people].”

Finding mental health support after release

“Connecting people to mental health services can improve their health, their wellbeing, their financial security, and also reduce the likelihood that they return to the justice system,” said Vikki

Wachino, executive director and founder of the Health and Reentry Project. Health and Reentry Project is an organization working to make policy changes at the intersection of health and reentry by partnering with those on the ground.

The Public Policy Institute of California analyzed 12-years of data from California jails and reported that those who are incarcerated with mental health needs have increased over 12 years, from 20% in January 2010 to 53% in June 2023.

Across Riverside County, there are five jails and five county jails. According to data analysis by the Vera Institute of Justice, 38% of the jail population in Riverside had mental health needs in 2021.

As Arturo prepared for release from prison, exit counseling offered him little support when it came to coordinating mental health resources upon reentry.

Instead, Arturo was urged to reach out to the community. When it came to psychiatric care he described a “warm hand off” to a general psychiatrist. Once he was released, a physician began to call him once a month and ask if he is having suicidal thoughts and engaging in harmful or abusive behavior, then sent refills for medication.

“There is no, ‘How do you feel in the morning,’” Arturo shared. “He calls you from a blocked number and when you ask him for his email, he won’t give it to you and he won’t give you his number.”

While Arturo is confident he will be able to find adequate treatment, he worries for those who don’t share his level of education or resourcefulness. He’s concerned they will be “stuck” with inadequate treatment.

“They should be able to assign really good help so that you could thrive in your reentry process,” he said.

Nguyen explained that justice can be reformed if it is viewed as restorative.

“If you have that very narrow view of justice, you cannot reform,” she said. “Restorative justice is where you restore the defendant to a place where he or she can think straight or they can think straight. Therefore, they become a functioning member of society because they’ve gotten a handle on their mental illness.”

Gaps in resources during a critical time for support

Arturo has stopped taking the medications he was prescribed in prison. He doesn’t believe that he would be functional if he was still on the medications because they made him feel dull and depleted his memory.

“I don’t need to be sedated. I’m out here. I need to be functional, integrating myself into society,” he said.

Part of Arturo’s reintegration includes continuing his education. In 1998 he earned a bachelor of science degree in criminal justice from California State University, Los Angeles. In prison, he also took courses and upon release began studying history at Riverside Community College (RCC). Last semester he received Dean’s List honors and plans to attend a law program or obtain a master’s degree in business.

Arturo’s experience at RCC has been critical to his reentry process and mental health. He feels supported by the faculty and has access to necessary resources. But maintaining academic success coupled with working multiple jobs and volunteering in his community, under the constraints of parole, has not been easy.

Eliminating interactions with volatile people, from family members to former partners, has been a crucial yet difficult task. Arturo is currently renting a room in a sober living house with six other men whom he describes as dysfunctional.

“I’m under so much pressure that you don’t see. You just feel it like right here,” Arturo said, as he motioned to the base of his skull.

Coupled with frequent random visits from parole officers, working two to three jobs at a time and having his wages garnished for restitution, Arturo is juggling multiple stressors.

Over the past month, Arturo felt like he was close to a mental breakdown with the mounting pressures he faces.

The state’s solutions to improve continuation of care prior to release, under California Advancing and Innovating Medi-Cal (CalAIM).

DHCS will partner with state agencies, counties, and community-based organizations to establish and coordinate a community reentry process. The program is intended to assist people leaving incarceration connect to the physical and mental health services they need prior to release.

A case study for the program depicted an individual being treated for bipolar disorder while in prison. It described how, through the initiative, he will be assigned a pre-release care manager who conducts a needs assessment and develops a reentry care plan to support his transition into the community.

Prior to release, he will also be connected to a psychiatrist in the community who will continue to care for him. This will start while patients are still in prison – through a “handoff meeting” between the patient, his correctional facility psychiatrist and his community-based psychiatrist. He will also receive a supply of his bipolar medication to take with him upon release. He will also be connected with Community Supports such as housing, to help him build stability in the community.

“Historically, people with mental health issues, who are leaving prison have struggled to connect to access services as they’re being released,” said Wachino. “Those changes could be life saving for people.”

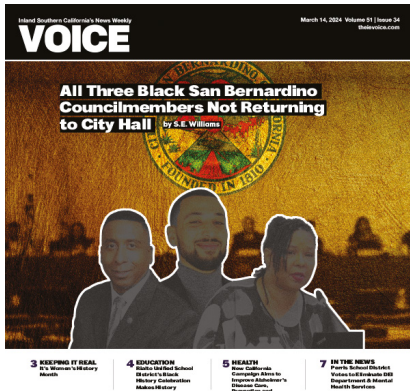

However, Arturo’s release experience differs vastly from the hypothetical individual featured in the program’s case study. Arturo said it was unclear whether he was assigned a case manager during his reentry process. Instead, he recalled a CDCR staff member providing him with release documents. A week before he was released, Arturo’s parole conditions were changed to exclude him from residing in Los Angeles County after he had already made plans to live there. He had no choice, but to find accommodations in Riverside County without any housing from

CDCR.

The Medi-Cal Justice-Involved Initiative is intended to close gaps in connecting incarcerated and newly released individuals with health care services. While the initiative received approval in January 2023, DHCS announced that they will delay the initiative from April 1, 2024 to October 1, 2024 to allow partnering agencies to better prepare for the two-year implementation period.

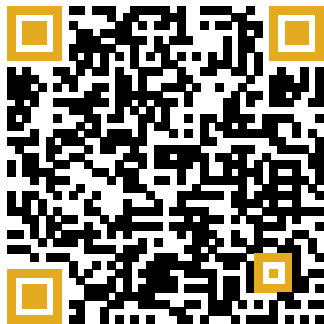

Every year, an estimated 35,000 people like Arturo are released from California prisons. The question of what resources are readily available and accessible during their reentry process remains unclear.

House overwhelmingly passes Smith's legislation to bolster the fight against human trafficking

VOICE Contributor

Last month, in a landslide vote of 414-11, the House of Representatives passed comprehensive legislation authored by Rep. Chris Smith (R-NJ) to reauthorize the Trafficking Victims Protection Act for five years and strengthen and expand successful anti-trafficking programs to bolster the fight against modern-day slavery.

"This critical legislation reauthorizes funding for FY2024 through 2028—a total of five years—to continue current year enacted appropriation and authorization levels to enhance programs, strengthen laws, and add accountability," said Smith, who authored the landmark Trafficking Victims Protection Act of 2000 and four subsequent anti-trafficking laws.

Named in honor of the renowned abolitionist Frederick Douglass, Smith's bill—the Frederick Douglass Trafficking Victims Prevention and Protection Reauthorization Act (HR 5856)—now moves to the Senate, where it is expected to garner broad consensus.

Asm. Mike Gipson Backs Bill Calling for Standardization of Active Shooter Drills California Black Media

Assemblymember Mike Gipson (D-Carson) announced last week that he is backing

Assembly Bill (AB) 1858, legislation that would standardize active shooter drills in California schools.

AB 1858, introduced by Assemblymember Chris Ward (D-El Cajon) would ban simulated gunfire and notify students in advance of the drills.

"I was honored to join Students Demand Action and Moms Demand Action for Gun Sense in America to speak about the importance of AB 1858, which will provide much-needed standardized guidelines for school shooter drills," wrote Gipson on Facebook.

"The bill would require, on or before June 15, 2025, the State Department of Education to curate and post on its internet website best practices pertaining to school shooter or other armed assailant drills for use by school districts, county offices of education, and charter schools, as provided," the language of AB 1858 states. "The bill would prohibit a school district, county office of education, or charter school from conducting a school shooter or other armed assailant drill unless it adopts policies that conform to these best practices."

"When it comes to fire drills in California schools, we are not filling the halls with smoke and turning up the thermostat. We should not be subjecting our kids to fake gunmen and simulated gunfire when it comes to active shooter drills," said Ward.

SPORTS

The "Golden ball" was awarded to impressive, young 19-year old U.S. midfielder Jaeden Shaw, as the best overall player in the tournament. Shaw plays for the local San Diego Wave in the NWSL, scoring four times for the U.S. in the Gold Cup and may have played herself onto the Olympic roster for Paris this summer. USA's Alyssa Naeher was awarded the "Golden Glove" as best keeper with four shutouts.

Team USA will now prepare for Japan on April 6th in the 'SheBelieves Cup' to be played at Mercedes Benz Field in Atlanta. Brazil will face Canada on the same day, winning sides to play each other on April 9th.
