Jordan says allies are key to Black progress in 80's

In December, 1979, President Jimmy Carter said that "progressive" allies were key to increasing black progress in the 1980s. He said that the United States must work with the international community to create a world where all people have equal rights and opportunities. Carter called for increased international cooperation to achieve these goals.

The president's call for allies came in the wake of a series of events that demonstrated the need for international cooperation. For example, the 1979 Iranian Revolution, which overthrew the government of Shah Mohammad Reza Pahlavi, demonstrated the need for the United States to work with other countries to support democratic governments. Carter also called for increased cooperation with other nations to address global problems such as poverty, hunger, and disease.

In his speech, Carter emphasized the importance of international cooperation in achieving the goals of the 1980s. He said that "the United States must work with its allies to create a world where all people have equal rights and opportunities."

New York, N.Y. - Carter went on to say that "the United States must work with its allies to create a world where all people have equal rights and opportunities."

Misconceptions about IRS can cause needless worry

LA Times

The Internal Revenue Service (IRS) is a federal agency responsible for collecting taxes in the United States. The IRS is known for its strict enforcement of tax laws, and for its ability to audit taxpayers who fail to file taxes or who underreport their income.

The IRS is often criticized for its complexity and its tendency to audit taxpayers who are not wealthy. Many taxpayers are unaware of the IRS's existence, and do not understand the implications of not filing taxes or of underreporting income.

In this article, the author discusses some common misconceptions about the IRS, and how these misconceptions can cause needless worry for taxpayers. The author argues that taxpayers should be aware of the IRS's existence, and should understand the importance of filing taxes and reporting income accurately.

The author also discusses the IRS's enforcement of tax laws, and the steps that can be taken if a taxpayer is audited. The author emphasizes the importance of being prepared for an IRS audit, and of understanding the IRS's processing of tax returns.

RIVERSIDE - A University of California, Riverside, professor recently got some first-hand experience of the Soviet Union's urban problems when his industrial pollution approach was attacked in the pages of the local press.

Prof. Dr. Charles Adams was recently invited to give a lecture on his idea of making cities more livable, and thus more profitable, by controlling pollution. Although the Russians didn't have problems on the table, Adams says their questions to the Americans strongly implied that they were coming to grips with their own pollution problems.

"They ended up arguing about sewage and air pollution," Adams says. "They were especially interested in local government approaches to pollution problems. They were heavily interested in getting the pollution control and the pollution political process started, or at least getting started on something to do about it.

"There's no question that the biggest single concern was sewage, but what they did with the sewer, they didn't talk by name. They talked by proximity, which I thought was a pretty close-to-the-vest approach.

The seven men and two women attended all bold law-drafting activities before obtaining of the USSR

Academy of Science which is heavily involved in pollution research. The institute played a key role in writing the government's new pollution control laws.

One of the few things people in the position in Los Angeles, or any cities, should be aware of is that there are changes in the pollution control laws here in the U.S. that are similar to what they are doing in the Soviet Union." Adams says. "The Russian people have had to come to grips with the problem of what happens if the industry is allowed to pollute. They don't pollute, but they can be fined. If they pollute, they have to get a permit and they have to do something about the problem. They have a law and they have to do it. The permitted pollution is within the law."

Mission conference to remain intact

RIVERSIDE - City Council will again in the Mission Conference at least through the 1980-81 year, according to Athletic Director Mark Johnson.

The decision to leave the Manhattan Conference was made by the City Council as a result of the Athletics Committee's recommendation. The officials had recommended participating in the conference and creating a new conference as a result of a proposal to transfer the school to the South Coast Conference.

upland resident on Quality Control Board

SANTA ANA - Ken Willis of Upland has been appointed by City Administrator George Brown to serve on the Santa Ana Regional Water Quality Control Board. It was announced recently.

The nine person board deals with water quality issues, sewer plant expansions, septage, tank permits and waste disposal for the Santa Ana River water shed which includes the west end of both Santa Berdardos and Riverside Counties and the majority of Orange County.

According to George Brown, Willis will fill the industrial seat on the board. Other board seats include public officials, citizens-at-large, environment organization, etc. In accepting the positions, Willis stated that one of his primary goals will be to explore ways in which to reduce waste water for industrial and agricultural use.

Willis has his Masters Degree in Urban Sociology from Occidental College, a past CORO Foundation Fellow in Public Affairs and has a BA in History from California State Polytechnic University. He is the Executive Director of the Roho View Chapter of the Building Industry Association of Southern California which covers the entire San Bernardino County.

In the past he served as chairman of the Board of Directors of the Bernardino County Citizens Planning Commission, and as a member of the San Bernardino Joint Water Agency Commission. He also served as an assistant in the California Department of Water Resources, and was a member of the Southern California Water Authority, and the National Audubon Society, American Water Resources Society and CORO Associates.

RIVERSIDE - The City has renewed its corporate sponsorship with Wells Fargo Bank for winning the group's flag football flag designs, which were introduced to squads in detail competition and save on transportation costs.

The question was how we increase competition while maintaining their own geographic boundaries.

The topic will come up again in a April meeting. That decision will probably not be effective at the 1981-82 year.
