BIOLOGICAL SCIENCES
BUILDING SELECTED AS ONE OF NATION'S BEST

CSCSB's Biological Sciences Building has been named one of the top 15 college buildings in the country in a design competition.

The editors of College and University Business magazine made the awards to recognize outstanding examples of form and function in college structures.

More than 1,400 architects involved in major building projects on college campuses nominated their most outstanding work for consideration.

"The versatility of concrete and its compatibility with the natural elements of the West Coast encouraged us to build our materials vocabulary for California State College's biological sciences building around the word 'concrete,'" said principal architect Robert Wilkerson of Albert C. Martin and Associates.

"The concrete will become more mellow with aging, which is another advantage of the material," Wilkerson added.

Two other California State College buildings were among the 15 national winners. They are Yosemite Residence Hall at Cal Poly, San Luis Obispo, and Aztec Center, student union at San Diego State.

"BULLETIN" HAS NEW MASTHEAD

Jim Gooch, Duplicating Center Supervisor, designed and drew the new masthead for the CSCSB Bulletin. He followed the mountain-and-modern-building theme used by Douglas Philips, commercial artist who designed the 1968-69 Catalog cover.
