ASI president calls for constitutional reform

By William Ludquist
Staff Writer

A personal dispute between Aaron Watson, President of Associated Students, Inc., and Robert Sadlak, ASI Legislative Director, has led to Watson's call for constitutional reform.

"The personal conflicts were never an issue that I brought up," said Watson. "He has no plans to ask for Sadlak's resignation, but he did say, "The question is what the president, any president, can do.""

Sadlak, as CSUSB's representative to the California State Student Association, believes that one thing the ASI president cannot do is remove him from office.

"At the heart of the conflict is an ambiguous ASI bylaw that allows the president to appoint the legislative director, but says nothing one way or the other about removal," said Watson. "Sadlak feels the right to appoint implies the right to remove, much as the President of the United States can fire a Cabinet member, Sadlak believes that CSSA must remain independent from ASI, since CSSA representatives must occasionally disregard the wishes of their president or student association to pass legislation that benefits students statewide.

"The question is what Sadlak, as CSUSB's representative to the CSSA, can do."

New CSUSB curriculum considered

By Raj Daniel

"A required course of studies—core of learning—can ensure that students have opportunities to know the literature, philosophy, institutions, and art of our own and other cultures," writes Lyman V. Cheney, chairperson for the National Endowment for the Humanities.

In her recent publication entitled 50 hours: A Core Curriculum for College Students, Cheney urges colleges and universities to revise curricula so that undergraduates study essential areas of knowledge.

The publication sets forth a core of learning, 50 semester hours (75 quarter units) of required study in cultures and civilizations, foreign languages, mathematics, natural sciences and the social sciences. Sound familiar?

Yes, because CSUSB's general education curriculum reflects this exact core of learning.

"I think Ms. Cheney's publication is very thoughtful and requires careful examination and reflection.

Newsweek panelists discuss events in Europe

By William Lundquist
Staff Writer

Recent events in Warsaw Pact nations dominated the agenda when four panelists from Newsweek Magazine spoke at CSUSB on Nov. 14.

They were unanimous in their opinions that Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev is the most important news­maker in 1989.

White House Correspondent Tom DeFrank and Washington Correspondent Doug Waller replaced the previously announced Maynard Parker and John Barry on the panel. Other panelists were Rich Thomas, Chief Economic Correspondent, and Margaret Warner, Diplomatic Correspondent.

DeFrank likened the impact of recent events in the communist world to the Protestant Reformation, or the American, French, or Russian Revolutions.

"Most of the countries of eastern Europe will be socialist democracies," said Warner. "I think we're coming to a demilitarized Europe."

Waller said, "In the next five years, we'll see at least a division of U.S. troops come back. Basically, the Soviets are depriving us of an enemy."

Thomas thought that U.S. forces would remain in Germany for the foreseeable future to ease fears other nations might have about a reunited Germany.

On the upcoming Malta superpower summit, Warner said, "Gorbachev has yet to come to a meeting without a surprise.

Thomas thought that Bush might lift the trade ban on the Soviet Union if they would relax their immigration laws.

DeFrank said, "Bush is smarter, less likely to be modeled after Reagan."
Break-in rekindles safety issue

On Friday, Nov. 3, between midnight and 7:15 a.m., faculty offices 528 and 541 in the library were broken into.

Ralph Nichols, professor of communications, and Tony Huff were the victims of the theft. An Apple Macintosh Plus computer, an external hard drive and back-up pack were stolen from Nichols’ office. The items were valued at $2,400. To date the report does not include amount for Huff.

The crimes were reported by the custodian in the early morning, according to Public Safety Chief, Ed Harrison.

"It has been established that the culprit moved a table to the wall of the offices and jumped over the open portion of the partitions. There was no sign of forced entry," Harrison said.

"The partitions don’t extend to the ceiling so there is easy access over the top into the office," he said. "We had a similar situation this past summer, but it just involved pilfering."

"Whoever took the items has known they would have the time to get in and do the job," Harrison said. "It is hard to tell the magnitude of people who are in and out of that area of the building."

Harrison said, "The last person out of the area usually makes sure the exterior doors are locked. Public Safety officers then check them later in the evening."

"An officer checked the door at 11 p.m. that evening," Harrison said. "It was listed as checked in the officer’s log."

"I am extremely disappointed about the theft," Nichols said. "My biggest question is why or how someone has access inside the double doors at that hour. The campus police should be responsible for checking that the doors remain locked."

According to Harrison the case has become inactive because there are no leads.

"We still need to get information from Mr. Nichols and Mr. Huff regarding serial numbers to put in a statewide computer system," he said. "I am extremely disappointed about the theft."

The Chronicle
Have you heard the one about the cow, the Frenchman, and the bottle of Budweiser?

It goes something like this.

In 1872, a Frenchman by the name of Louis Pasteur discovered a way of keeping bottled beer fresh for an indefinite period of time. He called the process “pasteurization.” A year later, an American brewer by the name of Adolphus Busch got wind of the idea and he soon began using it to bottle his own beer.

Together they started a revolution in the packaging of fresh goods. In fact, 22 years later, the dairy industry would jump on the wagon. That’s where the cow fits in.

It’s an old story, but an important one. Because every time you pop open a cold Bud, you know you can count on a fresh tasting beer. One made with no additives, no preservatives. And with quality in mind. And that’s no joke.

Pasteurization. It’s just one of the reasons why Budweiser has remained the King of Beers, for over 110 years.
Safety up in lights

By Kim Kelley
Staff Writer

In 1981, a large project to conserve energy was conducted on campus which reduced the level of illumination of campus lighting. Because lighting has been a big concern among the campus community, a phased program to improve lighting was implemented on campus.

This program is in its third year, or phase, and is an ongoing program, according to David DeMaura, director of the Physical plant at CSUSB.

All exterior lights on campus use a high pressure sodium bulb. “This bulb gives us the lowest operating cost,” said DeMaura. “In comparison to an incandescent bulb it is seven times better operating cost because of the amount of time the bulbs last as well as the amount of electricity they burn,” DeMaura added.

There is a bulb which is more cost effective called the low pressure sodium, but it was felt that this bulb was of poor quality.

The high pressure sodium bulb is what gives the lights their yellow glare. To determine the amount of illumination and positioning of lighting on campus both safety and cost are taken into consideration. “It is basically a balance of both of these things that we consider. The students safety is important as well as being cost effective,” DeMaura said.

Ed Harrison, Campus Safety Police Chief, said “more activities are held at night, so there is a higher possibility for crime at that time.”

The recent faculty burglaries took place during the evening hours. “That’s why most officers are staffed at night,” Harrison said.

The decision for additional lighting involves several areas of input: the physical plant, public safety, students, the administration, and others. The monties for existing lighting are distrib-

Students against racism

By William Lundquist
Staff Writer

In response to a proposal submitted by the Cal State Chico American Indian Club, representatives of the California State Student Association (CSSA), met in San Francisco to vote on a resolution against racism.

According to Associated Students, Inc. Legislative Director Robert Sadlak, the resolution was certain to pass during today’s meeting.

The resolution is the first statewide student policy against racism. It defines racism as, "Any act of physical or verbal abuse excluding, restricting, or undermining an individual’s self-esteem or dignity based on race, ethnicity or national origin with the intent or effect of impairing or nullifying constitutional rights, liberties and freedoms in political, economic, cultural and social spheres of public life."

CSSA is calling upon the chancellor of the Cal State system to form an independent task force to review the resolution at the state level. CSSA would also like to see a similar task force established on each member campus.

The resolution was spurred by acts of racism at Chico, but the media have reported incidents of racism on Cal State campuses at Fresno, Fullerton, and Hayward.

Adams: an example to be followed

By Richard Kontra
Staff Writer

Whether he's on or off the court, Troy Adams is always moving. He can be dribbling past opponents on his way to the basket, or walking past students on the way to his classes. In short, the case may be, Adams knows what he's doing.

Adams is a senior and a points guard on the Coyote basketball team.

Adams knows his role on the court very well. He received the coaches' award last year for his role, as he says, in "keeping up morale." After four successful years at Rubidoux High School, (rowdys), always played in the forefront of his mind. All Citrus Belt League Player for his final two years and was four time "Most Inspirational Player." It was clear that his leadership qualities were important. As well as being a team leader, Coach Jim Ducey says, "He works as hard as anybody and leads by example."

Ducey, after observing Adams for the past four years, sees that Adams' ball handling and shooting have improved. Adams has come to terms and realized that basketball is not his whole life. He is a very much a family man and participates whole-heartedly in his family's go-cart business. Adams is the track manager and says his job is to assist. "Keeping maintenance up," his family has owned and operated the track for over thirty years.

Adams is a marketing major and hopes to own his own business one day. He realizes, being a senior, that his track his job now more than ever.

Adams also sees the need for positive role models in today's society. He believes people need to focus on where they want to be in the future. Adams wants to be able to project a positive image on younger people and he thinks it is important to have a positive outlook. For now, Troy Adams is looking toward the upcoming basketball season with eagerness.

See Da Gallery

By Beth Sanders
Staff Writer

Showing now through Dec. 15 at the CSUSB art gallery is a work presented by the Da Gallery. A Pomona based organization, the Da Gallery has been making waves in the field of fine arts for 10 years. The gallery places no requirements on its artists. In this way, artists of all forms of expression are free to display their particular style, whatever that may be.

CSUSB's gallery has the artist's work displayed in such a way that you really get a feel for each artist's individual style. This showing is also an excellent opportunity for students to see pieces of art that are varied in style and medium. In short, it's a smorgasbord. Gallery hours are Monday through Friday 9-4.

Civic Light Opera provides meeting place for art devotees

By Jen Fairfield
Staff Writer

"We're trying to get youth into the opera," Dale Gorman says to me. "Trying to get them into the theatre. Men in cowboy hats yelled, "Program! Get your programer!" I took my father's arm, and we entered the theatre, ready for a night of music and dance.

We were well rewarded by the Civic Light Opera Association. "110 in the Shade" delighted us with its wit and beautiful sound, sets, and square-dancing. (Yes, square-dancing.)

The performances should not have surprised me, but the theatre itself was a delight. Its velvet curtains and spiral staircase leading to the balcony seemed right out of a 1930's escapist film. In fact, the theatre was built in the 1930's to escape the bleakness of the Depression, and to entertain the common workers.

Now, however, the theatre seems to be a meeting place of the elite of San Bernadino. Upon entering the Don Quixote Lounge adjacent to the lobby, I met a few of the Association's "Big Cheeses." I can't say that I, a lowly college student, felt unwanted. The Carriage Club, devoted to the furthering of the arts through the Civic Light Opera, assures me that any and all devotees of art (indeed, lovers of square-dancing) are encouraged to attend.

The Civic Light Opera owes much of its moral support to the Carriage Club. At every opening night you can see Dale Gorman, the president of the club, his wife Chris, and his associates chatting up in the lobby of Civic Light Headquarters in the California theatre on E Street.

The cast party is thrown by the club at the San Bernadino Elks' Lodge on the hill. This party is for the cast, not the club, and this difference is evident in the choice of live band-playing. "Stinger" covers mostly middle eighties-style music, and it's a hoot to see those senior citizens fox-trotting to "Like a Virgin."

The club also sponsors scholarships for music-minded youths.

Opinion

Is this page a waste of space?

By Kevin R. Homey
Editor-in-Chief

Here it is, another Sunday afternoon and the editor has to become a columnist again to fill space.

Commentary

If you look around this story, the rest of the page is pretty much devoid of anything else's opinion. Below this story is an editorial cartoon, displaying the opinions of a Chronicle staff artist. To the left is The Chronicle's staff box. Where's the student's opinion? Where's the heated arguments and rebuttals over hot ideological topics? This page is labelled the opinion page for a reason. This page is set up to allow you, the typical college student an opportunity to sound your voice on topics that you feel strongly about. It's a page to gripe about parking, about safety, about the person behind you in PS 10 spilling a coke and soaking your books and backpack.

Last year, a Chronicle writer wrote a commentary about the privileged treatment she thought minorities were receiving over caucasions. The letter received so many responses that a four-page insert had to be run just to handle them all. That is the first time The Chronicle has received a large-size response like that, and has yet to see another one. Why is it that only the time students actually write in to the newspaper is when they feel insulted or cheated? Why is this campus devoid of an opinion for 360 days of the year, and then suddenly explodes virtually overnight?

I'm not going write an editorial, nor assign an editorial to be written solely to insult or aggravate people into responding. That's not my style, nor is it the style of this newspaper. What I'm trying to do is to simply entice opinionated members of this university to inform the rest of us how they feel on issues and occurrences in their everyday lives.

I sit every day in the Pub and eat my lunch. Everyday I hear comments about this, comments about that, "why doesn't someone do something" about this or that. People come up to me as I walk across campus and agree or disagree with my commentaries, and they go into some incredible detail as to what they like or dislike about it. But come the deadline for submissions and nothing at all comes in.

According to others in the student services field, the apathy is widespread: Associated Students, Inc. has several boards and committees that are inactive this year because no students have wanted to get involved. In fact, most students who do get involved get involved in several different committees because they are in such high demand.

The elected officials of ASI have exhausted all of their recruitment ideas and have all but given up on trying to fill these positions.

The problem is simple, but so is the solution. If you want something changed, tell the appropriate people. If you want more parking, tell the administration, not the students you eat lunch with. A letter to the editor will not only inform your lunch-mates and the administration of your opinions, but will write in on behalf of the rest of the student body. Your letter just might cause other concerned students to write in as well.

As Johnathan Murtagh wrote in his parking editorial, "not one letter does a change make." We need to use the power of the students' voice. My comments about any of these matters will not cause anything to happen, but if forty-two letters (that's slightly over 1 percent of the student population here) has a much greater chance.

Please use this page. Spend an hour a week, or a month, and write a letter. You will, in some small way, contribute to the educational process of your fellow students. Their responses to your letter can do the same for you as well. Let's make some changes and work together to do something for this university.

The Chronicle welcomes views from readers on a wide variety of topics. Letters and commentaries may be sent to the editorial office at 8500 University Parkway. is one reason why strong general education requirements are a healthy portion of the entire curriculum," El-Ahraf said.

An interesting point which Cheney explains in her publication is that many changes have simply carved out of it, "distribution requirements," as opposed to a strong core, which direct students to take some courses in certain areas and others in others.

For instance, she cites programs in today's colleges and universities where one can fulfill humanities distribution requirements with courses in interior design, or social science requirements by taking a "Lifetime Fitness" course.

"It's difficult for other colleges and universities which do not have a general education degree. Dr. Cheney claims that any college or university's most distinctive element is that CSUSB has efficiently acted on these ideas and principles."

El-Ahraf concluded by stating, "The principles and ideas Ms. Cheney has to try to build a well-rounded person," El-Ahraf said.

"But here (CSUSB) there is a well defined structure. For example, in order to graduate, students must take the specified courses as a part of the general education curriculum," El-Ahraf said.

TYPING. Pick up & deliver to your home, dorm or place of business. Dora W. Morris. 799-3989. The biology building has a new spotlight and the library has 4 new spotlights which are darker. The Student Union lighting has been improved with one-third more illumination. The Creative Arts building is now better illuminated and the Physical Education building is next to see additional lighting.

The parking lot that will soon be paved by the P.E. building will also get additional lighting. The parking area seems to be the biggest cause for concern regarding lighting. When the seasons change and the trees add more foliage, the lighting in the parking area will be overpowered."

"Thanks for caring about lighting overseas are tangible."

Most students do not realize that the costs of studying overseas are tangible. There are no overseas tuition or administrative costs, students have to pay the current CSUSB campus fees, roundtrip transportation, and living expenses. Financial aid that is available on campus is applicable overseas.

To be eligible to study overseas a student must have a cumulative grade point average of 2.75 or 3.00, have upper division or graduate standing by the end of the spring quarter 1990, and have the necessary prerequisites which include having college level foreign language in the chosen country. The deadline for application is February 1, 1990.

Aussies beat Yotes at home
By Kevin R. Horney
CSUSB men's basketball team got a good look at Aussie-ball as it dropped its opening home game to the Australian Men's Youth Team 96-80. Before being defeated by the tournament hosts 81-80, CSUSB started off in a bad way as they threw the ball away, giving up 15 points in the first 30 seconds. The Aussies were much more efficient as they stretched the lead by one; 23-22.

The second half proved worse for the Yotes as they went 0-5 from the field in the first 30 seconds. The Aussies were much more efficient as they stretched the lead over the Yotes for the rest of the game.

The Coyotes players Greg Rowe and Paul Evans go up for a rebound brought the Yotes with the Aussies, and Falvey's three-pointer put the Yotes up by one; 23-22.
