Tickets are on sale for all remaining performances, including next week's Wednesday through Saturday run.

Originally described as a tale of horror when it opened on Broadway in 1934, the play will test contemporary audience response to inhumanity, according to Director William Slout who says "Three wars and innumerable civil atrocities have occurred since the play's first success, tempering public responses to deeds of brutality and leaving suspect individual abilities to feel compassion for personal distress."

The play is the story of a wealthy woman who is held captive for two years by a young artist she has befriended. Featured as Mrs. Herries is Joan Wing and as the artist, Alex Miller.

Tickets are $1 for on-campus patrons and $2 for general admission. Call Ext. 443, Drama Office.
