Prop. 187 passes: law's foes say 'see you in court'

CSU delays enforcement until get-tough-on-aliens initiative clears constitutional challenges

Anthony Bruce Gilpin special to The Chronicle
Brian Lees managing editor

The California State University will delay implementing the provisions of Proposition 187 until a judicial hearing early next year determines what parts of the controversial law can legally be enforced, CSU spokesman Steve MacCarty said Nov. 10.

At least eight lawsuits challenging the constitutionality of Prop. 187 were filed within hours of the Nov. 8 election, according to state Attorney General Dan Lungren. San Francisco Superior Court Judge Stuart R. Pollak issued a temporary restraining order, barring public schools, colleges and universities from enforcing 187's educational provisions.

MacCarty, a Public Affairs officer with the CSU Office of the Chancellor, said there will be "no change in the current status quo, or the way CSU does business until that hearing," which is set for Feb. 8, 1995. MacCarty said that CSU will not oppose the restraining order.

"We will comply with the courts' decision if it (Proposition 187) is found to be constitutional," MacCarty said.

Proposition 187, approved by 59 percent of California's voters, denies all public services, except emergency medical treatment, to undocumented immigrants and their children. The initiative statute requires state agencies to verify the immigration status of people applying for services, and to report those suspected of being illegal aliens to the U.S. Immigration and Naturalization Service.

Under the new law, California's public colleges universities and community colleges are barred from admitting students who are not citizens, lawful immigrants, resident aliens or others who can document that they are legally authorized to be in the United States.

Civil rights organizations participating in the lawsuits contend that Proposition 187 violates constitutional rights, partly by encouraging suspicion and discrimination against people who appear or sound foreign.

Gov. Pete Wilson made elimination of state services for illegal aliens the core issue of his successful re-election campaign. Wilson and Lungren have vowed to fight to preserve Proposition 187 against opposition, including that of the federal government. Analysts estimate that certain sections of Prop. 187 could cost California up to $15 billion per year in revoked federal funding.

Both sponsors and opponents of Proposition 187 anticipated that the initiative would face lengthy, passionate, and costly court battles before the initiative could be implemented. The complex and wide-ranging law contains a severability clause, that could allow some sections to take effect while others are tied up in litigation. Some experts estimate that Prop. 187-related lawsuits could delay implementation of certain sections of the law for as long as five years.

MacCarty said that the CSU system had major concerns about how Proposition 187 may violate the Buckley Amendment to the federal Family Educational Rights and Privacy Act (FERPA). It found to be in violation of the Buckley Amendment, Cal State could lose hundreds of millions of dollars in federal funding.

SCE grant allows CSUSB to establish new energy efficient buildings on campus

Michelle Vandraiss Editor in Chief

Making efforts to ensure that energy efficiency is maintained, Southern California Edison has awarded grants to various schools to help these efforts. One recent recipient of this grant money was California State University, San Bernardino. This grant was awarded in the amount of $45,556 for the efforts made for energy conservation in Jack Brown Hall, the new Student Union addition and the new Phau Library wing.

According to Bob Adamson, regional manager for SCE, "With the partnership that Cal State and Southern California Edison has established, we are trying to reduce costs through these types of programs." The Design for Excellence program which provides these grants has been in existence since the late 1980's.

In general, all buildings must meet certain energy conservation requirements, but the grants are given to those designs which go above and beyond the minimum standards.

With this grant money, according to CSU policy, must now in return go towards making further conservation improvements. For example, the money granted for the Student Union will be used to install a more efficient air conditioning system.

Examples of award making provisions within the building are things such as variable speed drives, motion sensors, and high efficiency motors. Thanks to the plantning of the university, the school will continue to see these efforts being made and rewarded.

Program Additions:
Ethnic studies sees new concentrations added

Michelle Vandraiss Editor in Chief

The Ethnic Studies Program has recently added four new concentra- tions to its curriculum here at California State University, San Ber- nardino. These new options include American Indian, African American, Asian American, and Latino studies which are in the process of being approved by the Faculty Senate and university administrators. These options came about by the request of the students who were calling the program to offer a more specialized approach to the program.

According to Brij Khare, political science professor and director of the program, says, "The program is job oriented. It is going to make students more equipped to deal with interpersonal, multicultural situations, especially in this region-the Inland Empire."

The coursework for this program now lies at seven required courses; two within ethnic studies and five elective courses.

This program now has a newly established center which puts it "a step above having just a program," sates Khare. The curriculum will widen as research is done, grants are applied for and community contributions are made.

The center will also be providing mentoring to help students and increase the rate of retention among its students.

Heckler's Corner

By Jeremy Heckler

Well folks it looks like one of the weirdest campaigns in the history of California is over and the public has really backed a pent almost thirty million dollars of his own sating somethmg that doesn't look like an ots of oth^ cute things to make life just all ele-elected Pete Wilson to a second term. The reason totally escapes me why a state would vote to re-elect someone who has put a stick of dynamite to state government and blown it into tiny pieces. Is it something in the air that you could blast a hole into or what?

In his four years in office, Pete passed bills to hike our student fees, and did lots of other cute things to make life just all the more difficult for all the students of California State University and University of California schools. The only reason that you could see why my fellow students could vote for Pete Wilson is that they are a gluton for punishment.

The one good thing that came out of the elections is that California proved that it could not be bought by Mike Huffington. I don’t know, but he just looked like someone who you could blow into his ear and feel it on the other side of his head. The fact that he spent almost thirty million dollars of his own money on the campaign is another sign of his foolishness.

In general, it seems like 1994 was the culmination of the filth campaigns. Every thirty seconds I could find some poor schmuck getting roasted by his opponent for doing something bad. I couldn’t find an ad saying how good a candidate is or what they have done to make themselves worthy of election. Then again this is a country where it’s a God-given right to be rude to each other and end up liking people.

In matters of fairness, I should deal with some local issues like the fact that the Coffee Shop actually sells breakfast. Well, okay they sell muffins, donuts, and believe it or not, oatmeal. I ordered the oatmeal recently and here’s what I got: a styrofoam cup of warm water and a package of oatmeal. I don’t know but it seems to me that I would rather get a bowl just because I feel better eating something that doesn’t look like a funeral breakfast.

During the past two weeks CSUSB has experienced a cold spell, although most of the Biological Sciences building couldn’t tell. During this time, Biological Sciences has experienced a heat wave bringing indoor heat to many of the buildings’ permanent staff members. The weirdest thing is that nobody really cares why it’s so hot because the temperature reads a normal, comfortable 76 degrees. Why it is like this world may never know.

That’s all for my column this week folks. Send your gripes/personally to the Heckler so that you can see yourself in the next issue.

Joe Coyote Returns: Students can expect fee increases once again in the very near future

Brian Lees
Managing Editor

Our Chronicle correspondent to Sacramento, Joe Coyote, has just returned again with some more disturbing news from the state capital. This time, the cause of distress is a simple phrase that causes students to scream in horror: fee increases.

“That’s right folks,” said Joe after catching his breath and sucking in his slobber for the sake of politeness. “Pete Wilson has done it again. All CSU students can expect at least a 10% increase in fees by the start of the next academic year, if not sooner.”

The question that everyone wants to have answered is why would he do something like this at this time?

“Well,” Joe explained, “I’ve already established that Wilson has a great dislike for education in general, but in this case, he offers what he feels is a more plausible and more acceptable explanation.”

“You see,” Joe continued, “Wilson is a bit of a Libertarian in disguise. And like most Libertarians, he believes that students should pay for the full cost of their educations without any form of government funding for the schools to bear a portion of those costs.”

The Libertarians believe that there should be NO taxation for the purpose of producing monies for funding any level of education, including elementary education. Unfortunately, Wilson also shares this view. Thus, the fees for college students continually rise and the budgets for elementary and secondary schools continually get slashed.

We all asked if there was some way that this could all be stopped.

“Unfortunately, the incessant onslaught of student fee increases is unavoidable. While state legislators tried to stop him two years ago, he held out for as long as he could without signing a budget until he got his way. In the process of doing so, however, California’s all-important bond rating, which is used to determine the value of bonds used in construction of our schools, went down the proverbial drain.”

“The only thing that works in the students’ favor in this situation is a state bill that was introduced and passed into law last spring, which prohibits administrators salaries from increasing in the same year that student fees also simultaneously increase. But there are loopholes and tricky little ways to get around this even.”

It is inconceivable that students would have such little consideration and so little power, we thought, but Joe said that we were being naive.

“This has been going on for quite some time and will continue to until people begin to wake up and vote their value education more. When obviously doesn’t care about education; he’s more interested in building prisons to house those members of society who were probably denied a decent education in the first place. As long as education remains second-rate in this state, this state itself will remain second-rate.”

But how could this all be blamed on Pete Wilson, we thought. Is that really fair?

“Well, the CSU Board of Trustees just unanimously approved a $1.69 billion proposed budget for 1995/96, which includes a request for an additional $37 million to offset any fee increase in the coming year.”

“The current budget is a $1.55 billion. The new request, without the additional $37 million, is 5.4 percent, or $146 million, higher. It would fund an additional 2,500 full-time equivalent students, maintain employee benefits, restore some classes, provide additional funds for libraries, decrease the student/faculty ratio and provide an average five percent compensation increase for faculty and staff.”

“However, this all has to go through our recently re-elected governor, and the chances are that he will opt for the fee increases because of his extreme opposition to using tax dollars to fund ‘educational welfare.’ He’d rather support ‘corporate welfare.’”

And with this final depressing, yet profoundly true statement, Joe took off again for Sacramento as fast as his four skinny legs would carry him. Joe will return soon (hopefully) with news related to the state election results from the November 8 election. Until that time, Joe reminds the students of this great campus to remember that they do have a voice (no matter how small), and that they should exercise that voice regularly.

In a society that has the right to vote, make changes and do their best to live according to their laws and the leaders that they choose, it is amazing to me how in one day’s election process that nothing can change. For four years, all we as Californians have heard about is the terrible job that Gov. Pete Wilson has done, but in the one chance we have to change it, nothing is changed. Granted, as in all elections, it was only a choice of the lesser of two evils.

In general, this seems to give a statement to the character of the American society. We have gone so low in our standards that we will accept something if it is just a little better than before. It is sad to think how it will be for each new political decision; it is not what is the best option, but the one that is just a little better than the other alternative. Strange how this occurs in all our major decisions in life.

Let’s look at the decisions we make for our government leaders. These people, no matter what they may say, are your basic career politicians, who will say just about anything to ensure that they will gain your “trust” and obtain your vote.

The other problem is that these same people in whom we place our utmost confidence to try to do what we ask of them, create laws to end our problems, but these same laws are not the cure. For example, the idea behind Proposition 187 was in accordance to the needs of California, tougher regulations of the immigration within our state and the payment of benefits for immigrants. There was only problem, it was written to the point that it would not solve the problem, but create new ones. So it is with our society!

What we need is to gain character and refuse to accept second best, but to demand the best possible answer to our problems as a country, state, and as individuals.

On campus there are many resources that are not utilized by students who could benefit from offered assistance. The office of Services to Students with Disabilities (SSD) is one of these programs. According to Nicholas Erickson, CSUSB's Coordinator of Academic Support Services, only a small percentage of the students eligible for SSD's services take advantage of this valuable resource.

SSD works closely with Student Services and can be considered as one of the many resources that CSUSB provides for students. The Writing Center and Reading Center provide support for students who may be from non-english speaking backgrounds. The Career Center provides help for those who are inexperienced with finding a job. Similarly, SSD provides services to individuals who may need assistance with physical or learning handicaps.

The SSD department can be broken down into three major sub departments. Academic Support Services covers services to students who need aid in reading, writing, or just getting around campus. Specialized testing and counseling are provided by Counseling Services Coordinator, Barbara Sovereign, who works with learning disabilities as well as adaptive counseling.

The Coordinator of Special Programs and Services, Dr. Theron Pace, develops campus-wide projects that improve all aspects of student life. He is in charge of the Program of the Month. Each quarter more than five hundred tests are given to students with special needs.

Aiding students who have difficulty reading, either because of vision impairment or a learning disability, is one of the services provided by Academic Support Services. Books and papers can be read directly to students or put on tape. In an average quarter, between 50 and 60 text books are tapped for students. Some textbooks are available on tape and these can be requested for student's use as well.

Computer technology allows several other reading services. People who read braille can bring in papers that can be translated into braille. A computer which talks, as well as many other electronic services and equipment are available.

Other assistance provided by Academic Support Services include: writing, typing, and aid with library research. These services are provided for people with mobility or learning disabilities. Special testing arrangements are also provided. Each quarter more than five hundred tests are given to students with special needs.

Assistance for the hearing impaired includes sign language interpreters. Presently, CSUSB provides seven staff sign language interpreters for students. There are several "telecommunication devices for the deaf" (TDD) on campus. These devices allow the hearing impaired to talk through a relay system over telephone lines to anyone with a telephone or another TDD.

Counseling assistance is provided through the SSD office by Barbara Sovereign. This service is not meant to replace the services provided by the Counseling Center. What she does is to provide counseling for students with disabilities to help them contend with life on campus. By assessing a student's disabilities, arrangements can be made to allow disabled students to compete with other students on a fair and equal basis.

Dr. Theron Pace is in charge of Special Programs. Though he works with the department on many projects, he has what he calls a "Program of the Month." Each month a new program is initiated to improve the quality of CSUSB. Previous programs include: the barrier removal project, which improved access to buildings all around campus. Presently, he is overseeing a project on a computer questionnaire which will assess the literacy of students.

Overseeing this department and its resources is Acting Director, Dr. Terry Rizzo. Giving an overview of the department, Dr. Terry Rizzo said, "If we don't provide whatever academic support service needed for students with disabilities, we certainly help look them up with folks who do." With over 340 disabled students on campus, it is difficult to handle all of their needs with one department. Dr. Terry Rizzo said that all around campus, everyone has given SSD wonderful support. "They are always behind us."
UNFORTUNATELY, THIS IS WHERE PEOPLE ARE PUTTING TOO MANY RETIREMENT DOLLARS.

Every year, a lot of people make a huge mistake on their taxes. They don't take advantage of tax deferral and end up sending Uncle Sam money they could be saving for retirement.

Fortunately, that's a mistake you can easily avoid with TIAA-CREF SRAs. SRAs not only ease your current tax-bite, they offer a remarkably easy way to build retirement income—especially for the "extras" that your regular pension and Social Security benefits may not cover. Because your contributions are made in before-tax dollars, you pay less taxes now. And since all earnings on your SRA are tax-deferred as well, the money you don't send to Washington works even harder for you. Down the road, that can make a dramatic difference in your quality of life.

What else makes SRAs so special? A range of allocation choices—from the guaranteed security of TIAA to the diversified investment accounts of CREF's variable annuity—all backed by the nation's number one retirement system.

Campus Police still investigating Oct. 23 parking lot shooting

Vincent Hudson
Chronicle Staff Writer

Campus police are still investigating a shooting incident that occurred in parking lot D on October 23.

At approximately 1:40 am, a gunfight erupted on campus, damaging two vehicles. No injuries were reported, however.

"Gunfire was exchanged from several locations," said Acting Director of Public Safety Stephen Nowicki. "Some of the gunfire came from stationary areas. One vehicle was struck several times; the other was struck once."

Several shots were fired from all over the parking lot, but none of the seven officers on duty were injured.

"We surmise that semi-automatic weapons, and possibly a .38 pistol, were used only because we saw a figure firing from one area," said Nowicki, "and when we reached that area, the figure was gone and there were no shell casings on the ground."

In the days following the shooting, many rumors circulated around the incident being a drive-by shooting. According to campus police, a car was seen driving in the parking lot at the time of the shooting. There is no evidence, however, to support the claim that any shots were fired from the vehicle.

With no further incidents on campus since the October 23 shooting, campus police have not felt the need to have "an escalated presence on campus."

"The shooting seems to be an isolated incident," said Nowicki. "We have not necessarily taken any additional security steps on campus."

The results of the investigation are still pending. As soon as we get more details here at The Chronicle, we will print them.
An ode to the end of the quarter blues: a student's perspective

Ben Wirick
Chronicle Staff Writer

It's almost time...

Feeling a little stressed out? Just you wait. This is the seventh week of the quarter, the time just after mid-terms and just before the fury of finals. It is time to take a big deep breath, and then say "Here we go again." Just when you thought it was all over, the all-nighters, overdose of coffee and caffeine are just around the corner. Again. The time of taking careful class notes, and paying attention to every syllable that the professor says are creeping up like a fox eying out a helpless rabbit.

The seventh week of the quarter means that you are 75% through a fox eying out a helpless rabbit.

It's almost time to shuffle through those old notes, and try to get the meaning of that class. It's almost time to remember what classes that you attended, break out the syllabus and read the old assignments. It's almost time to go back over the highlighted areas of your text and say "Why is this highlighted?" It's almost time to look over those old tests and say "I forgot about that stuff." It's almost time to get familiar with the library, writing center and computer lab hours.

Our classes are not the only stressful time about to come up. For most of us, registration for the winter quarter is already started. We are signing up to do this all over again. So, when you are sitting home, pulling out your hair over the over-load of work and screaming "Why am I doing this?" just think, you are probably looking at the classes you are going to take next quarter with a smile on your face thinking "Next quarter is going to be fun!"

Enjoy this week, take a nice, big deep breath and get ready to remember the proper combination of cream and sugar in your coffee. Guess what? It's almost time to stay awake for 36 hours at a time. Just think, these are some of the best times of our lives!

The Writing Center: the solution to the problems of many CSUSB students

Brian Lees
Managing Editor

Many students find writing term papers and essay exams very challenging. But for those students who have struggled through the difficulties their writing assignments have presented them there is hope: the Writing Center.

The Writing Center, located inside of the Learning Center in University Hall room 387, is available to students who need help in developing their writing skills for their class assignments.

The center, coordinated by Dr. Carol P. Haviland and sponsored by the English Department and the Dean of Undergraduate Studies, is usually staffed by graduate students pursuing a master of arts degree in English composition.

Students who come to the center get ideas for papers, have drafts evaluated for organization, or be helped with editing and proof-reading problems.

The center also helps faculty members to see writing as a mode of learning and communication for students that is essential to their education.

"Simply put, it's a place where writers can work with other writers on assignments," explained Haviland.

"The Writing Center is not a place where tutors will do your work for you," said an English 101 student. "What they do is help you write your papers."

A CSUSB faculty member had this to say about his experience with the Writing Center: "The faculty writing consultant helped me see how the writing assignments I give my students can help them learn the subject matter in my courses--as well as become better writers."

Students can schedule appointments in person or see whoever is free at the time from Monday through Thursday, 8:30 am to 8:00 pm, and Friday, 8:30 am to 4:30 pm. For more information, students are encouraged to call the Writing Center at 880-5833.

Great Expectations: Hole--live
In concert at the Palladium

Jon Lyons
Entertainment Editor

Courtney Love is a curious personality. Having become famous for being the wife of Kurt Cobain has its good and bad points. The exposure for her and her band Hole got them signed to DGC records faster than most second-rate girl punk bands. However, the fact that she was married to arguably our generation's greatest songwriter can mean that expectations for her own work are very high. Early in 1993, Hole released Live Through This, a mix of riot girl punk and heart-felt ballads. Love's songwriting has definitely improved over time, and the support band has become far more accomplished players than the ones showcased on their debut, Pretty On The Inside. All seemed ready for Love to take her place as one of the premier female rock singers in today's music world.

Then tragedy struck in the form of the suicides of Cobain and Hole bassist Kristin Pfaff. Love was forced to some soul-searching, and the band's tour plans to support the album were delayed for a considerable amount of time. Most industry insiders figured that Love would just pack it in and never play again. But that is definitely not Love's personality. That is why seeing Hole perform at the Palladium in front of a sold out crowd was such a treat.

Hole took the stage following a stellar set by Chicago's Veruca Salt, who warmed up the crowd with a mixture of hard-driving guitar work and beautiful harmonies. Although the crowd was unfamiliar with most of their material, Veruca Salt was able to dramatically increase it's growing fan base. Hole had a lot to prove to both themselves and their audience. Love and Co. took the stage in a very low key manner joined briefly by Frances Bean Cobain, Love's year old daughter. Following a huge ovation, Hole tore into "Plump" from the new album. After a brief interlude, Love baited the crowd by having them scream expletives at the balcony full of industry big wigs and radio executives. When they began playing again they jumped into a hard-core version of Duran Duran's "Hungry Like The Wolf," that both shocked and excited the crowd once they finally realized what they were bouncing around to. Other highlights were a hyperactive rendition of "Miss World," an anemic take on "Pretty On The Inside," and faithful versions of "Violet" and "She Walks On Me". Hole left the stage in a triumphant manner fit for the role of rock gods and goddesses.

They returned to the stage for the encore, with Love wearing a sparkling tiara and prancing like a homecoming queen. They led the encore off with an appropriately rewritten "Credit In The Straight World." Then came the second cover highlight of the evening. Love and guitarist Eric Erlandsson chatted briefly before launching into an amazing version of "Where Did You Sleep Last Night," the old blues standard made famous by Nirvana in their Unplugged performance. Love seemed to almost break down into tears as she screamed out the lyrics to one of her husband's favorite songs. When she finished, she collected herself before the whole band returned to close with "Rock Star," the final track on Live Through This.

In the span of an hour and a half, Hole redefined their sound from the once-punky nineties of a young girl to a well-thought out, very meaningful set of rock classics. Considering the amount of pain and torment that Courtney Love has been through, she deserves all the adoration and acclaim that comes her way.

Psychology looks into society's culture

Corina L. Borsuk
Chronicle staff writer

Research is a fact of life for many students and professors at colleges and universities the world over. In recognition of the hard-work and discoveries that can be part of every research project, The Chronicle will be spotlighting the research being conducted here at CSUSB.

Dr. Elizabeth Klonoff, professor of psychology, is researching the Role of African American Acculturation in conjunction with Dr. Hope Landrine, a former faculty member currently with the Public Health Foundation. Acculturation is the level to which people have adapted to the dominate culture that they live in. To test the acculturation level of African Americans, Doctors Klonoff and Landrime asked African Americans questions associated with African American culture. They then asked groups of African Americans and other ethnic groups to answer those same questions to determine how they were answered by African Americans compared to other groups.

"Historically, research, particularly in psychology, has considered African Americans to be a racial group," according to Dr. Klonoff, but her research has gone far in underscoring the idea that being African American has more to do with ethnicity and culture than a physical racial distinction. One advantage to viewing African Americans as an ethnic group is that it provides a way of studying differences in people that may be explanatory.

An important finding drawn from this research is that more traditional, less acculturated, African Americans tend to report higher instances of smoking, drinking and drug use than those that are more acculturated. This is exactly opposite to the relation of acculturation to those problems in other ethnic groups. In general, Dr. Klonoff feels these results suggest that the current methods of health education and advisories are not effective in reaching culturally traditional African Americans. Klonoff and Landrime hope that the results of their research will encourage health officials to gear their prevention warnings to the beliefs and attitudes of traditional African Americans.

CSUSB concert choir performing at Carnegie Hall in June of 1995

Kathy Carey
Chronicle Staff Writer

The California State University Concert Choir is invited to sing at Carnegie Hall in New York City. They will be performing "Magnificat" by J.S. Bach. World famous British conductor, John Rutter will be conducting this event. This will be a five day trip for the Choir from June 7-12 in 1995.

"It's a privilege to go to such a famous place. Carnegie Hall," commented choir student Shane Churchill on the upcoming trip to New York.

The Concert Choir is preparing for this trip by rehearsing, organizing fundraisers, and carefully planning their studies for the spring quarter that occurs before the trip in June.

Since there is a small tour budget, the choir is depending largely on fundraisers to sponsor the trip. The Amadeus Club is organizing the choir's fundraising. They have a donut and coffee table set up in the mornings in front of the creative arts building. They are also selling coupon books, and have other fundraising events coming up in the spring.

There are currently 29 members in the Concert Choir this term, but any student at CSUSB is welcome to join.

Professor Tamara Harsh, director of the CSUSB Concert Choir and the CSUSB Chamber Singers stated, "I'd like to see more Cal State students singing in the choir. Singing can enrich your life, relieve stress, and it can be a great hobby."

Auditions are not necessary to join the Concert Choir, but Harsh expects students to work hard and to be dedicated. With that in mind, many of her students find choir to be a rewarding experience.

Joshua Hanafin, a choir student in the bass section explained, "It's a unique feeling compared to most other classes, there's a sense of camaraderie between the students. When the sections work together, it comes together like a family."

Similarly, choir student Churchill remarked, "When you really think about it, you create something beautiful together. It's a sense of satisfaction in the construction of beauty. That is the art."

Mary Alice Lott, CSUSB Women's Basketball

Daisy B. Dizon

As the captain of the Women's Basketball Team, Mary Alice Lott reflects back on last season's success and offers her insights into this year's exciting challenges for the women's team.

"Last year, everything happened so fast. We took the necessary steps to get to the championship, but I don't think anyone really realized what was happening until we were there. It was the experience of a lifetime."

During their 1993-1994 season, the CSUSB Women's Basketball Team seized the Division 2 Regional Championship Title and took second place in the NCAA National Tournament, gaining the best national overall record of 29 wins and 4 losses. Recognized for her flawless outside shots and polished playing style, Lott maintained the highest free-throw percentage for their conference.

Putting the past season into perspective, Lott said, "Last year, we had everything: hard work and all the mechanics. The girls were experienced players; they had developed skills. Everything just fell together. It was an honor to play with a team like that."

From 1989 to 1992, Lott dominated the MVP award for three consecutive years at Palm Springs High School. During her freshman year at CSUSB, Lott received the award for academic achievement, then later won a California Collegiate Athletic Association honorable mention in her sophomore year.

Lott, 20, is a junior majoring in communications. Her parents, Fred and Eva Lott, and brother Francis, age 22, drive to all her games from Palm Springs and faithfully cheer her on.

"I couldn't have made it through the season without my family. They have given me so much love and encouragement. I also appreciate the support that the school and students have given us."

A feared offensive player, Lott plays the position of shooting guard and forward. Her strong performance and vibrant optimism have won her the respect of her peers. Lott said that she will be able to contribute to the new team's success by helping her teammates see their abilities and collective strengths.

"This year, we are a young team with a lot of talent. We are lucky to have good shooters and tall post players, I can see everyone coming together as a unit. The women have a lot of heart and strong character. All of them have a deep desire to play and work hard; there's a willingness to learn."

"If anyone can bring our team together and instill maturity, Coach (Luvina) Beckley can. She doesn't let us get comfortable. She doesn't tolerate laziness and mediocrity. Coach Beckley makes me push past my comfort zone and takes my abilities beyond what I think it can do. She has strengthened my character, " Lott said.

Coach Beckley really knows how to coach the fundamentals that we need. She took my playing skills to a higher level. I gained, in less than one year, probably four year's worth of basketball knowledge, she continued.

Lott said that in her third year playing for the team, experience will definitely be on her side this season. She is making effective adjustments on her playing style, such as creating a more aggressive defense.

With more leadership on the court, Lott will prove to be a positive motivating force for the new 1994-1995 CSUSB Women's Basketball Team.

"Hopefully this year will be just as exciting and successful. It would be awesome to be in the championships again. It will be a challenge, but I know we can do it."

Sharing thoughts on "Victim Blame"
by Marjorie Boomersbach
special to The Chronicle

On Thursday, November 3, CSU, San Bernardino psychology professor Dr. Geraldine Stahly spoke to students about her area of research, "Victim Blame." The talk was part of the Women's Resource and Re-entry Center's Brown Bag Lunch speaking series, where either students, faculty or staff are invited to share the projects or research they are involved in an informal manner.

Stahly is a social psychologist and researcher whose area of expertise has led her into forensic work. As a forensic psychologist, she is frequently called to testify as an expert witness in court cases when juries need to be informed about behavior of or an attitude towards victims.

The behavior and attitude towards victims was the topic of her talk Thursday, which began with an explanation of why we tend to blame victims for their own victimization. Stahly explained that people for the most part operate under a "just world hypothesis." That is, they see the world as a safe place in general, good things happen to good people, and bad things happen to those who behave badly. When an innocent person is victimized, "cognitive dissonance" is created. This is an uncomfortable state when two incompatible thoughts are occurring at the same time. In this case, the belief that "I live in a just world," would collide with the reality that something terrible just happened to an innocent person. To help get rid of this "cognitive dissonance," people adopt various strategies. One such strategy is to blame the victim for their plight, therefore erasing the possibility that something bad could arbitrarily happen to anyone. This is also why victims tend to blame themselves, and why recovery from victimization can be difficult. Stahly explains that this is one of the reasons why battered women remain in abusive relationships. The victims often blame themselves for the fact that they are being beaten.

Thursday's talk was informative as Stahly fielded many questions about her research. She invited students who were interested in the subject to come visit her during her office hours due to the fact that there was not enough time to answer all the questions that those in attendance still had regarding the subject.

ASI Corner
by: Rami Fodda
special to The Chronicle

Last week we had the ASI information table. During this event, we tried to increase student awareness about ASI operation and services and recruit more students for our team.

As I sat down to man the table, one student approached. She gave me a piercing stare and said, “So, you are the student government. What do you do to represent me?”

I smiled and proceeded to explain how we are the voice of the student and we are the mediator between them and the administration.

She interrupted me, saying, “But how do you make the board hear?”

Again I smiled and proceeded to explain how we are the voice of the students and we are the mediator between them and the administration.

She interrupted me again, saying, “But how do you make my voice heard?”

This incident really got me thinking. How do we really make the student voice heard? Well, to attempt to answer this question, I turned to ASI Vice President James Lai.

James explained to me that the most effective way that the student voice is heard is through student representation on campus-wide committees. There are committees on just about every aspect of the campus, such as the Bookstore Committee, Food Committee, International Student Advisory Committee, and many more. Through effective representation on these committees, the students can have a lot of say about what happens on campus.

Another way students can get their voices heard is by talking to their ASI elected representatives. There are representatives from the 5 schools, 1 for undeclared, 1 for dual and special majors, and 2 At-Large. All of those representatives have office hours, and students are strongly urged to talk to them about any concerns that they have.

James assured me that University President Anthony Evans and all of the vice presidents are very open and eager to welcome the student representatives and address all the issues they bring up on behalf of the students.

So I strongly believe that the students’ voices can be heard on campus through ASI. We just need strong student leadership and representation to make this voice heard.

If you think you possess those qualities, I urge you to join the team—join ASI.
