The Coyotes fell short of their ultimate goal this season -- making it to the Division II Elite Eight tournament -- with a loss to Cal State Eliminated from Div-II Golden Eagles on Friday night in the West Regionals.

The Coyotes, who survived a scare from the Cal State L.A. Golden Eagles on Thursday, downing their division rivals 61-54, were simply outmatched against the second seed, falling 101-88.

The Coyotes must now look ahead to next season and the unenviable task of replacing some of their most valuable players.

In the season, the Coyotes had already beaten the Eagles twice going into their confrontation Thursday. The Eagles came out of the locker room with an effective game plan. They played solid defense and got the ball to their best player, Quincy Stinson, as much as possible. He almost single-handedly kept them in the game with 27 big points.

With just three minutes remaining in the contest, CSULA tied the game at 51 and panic was in the hearts of all the Coyote players and coaches. With clutch free throws by Jimmy Alapag and Lonnie Tapè, the Coyotes were able to go on an 8-0 run to seal the deal.

“We knew that with the way CSLA plays defense, it would be a knock-down drag-out game,” Coyotes coach Larry Reynolds said. “We played well in spurts, and luckily one of those spurts came at a crucial time.”

Antonio Hines led the way for the Coyotes with a solid 15 points.

On Friday, the Coyotes faced a challenge they hadn’t faced the entire season. Central Washington’s Wildcats had all the fire-power to match, and to exceed that of the talented Coyotes. Casso Payne had 25 points to lead Central Washington. The Wildcats had nine players see action, and five of those scored in double figures.

The Coyotes were able to get within four points (79-75), with seven minutes left in the game, but Central Washington was too much. The Wildcats shot 59 percent from the field, and had both the outside and inside games working.

“We got beat by a team that was on fire,” Reynolds said. “Some nights, you just run into a team that is ready to go.”

The Coyotes, most notably the seniors, were dejected after the game.

“We knew what they were going to do, but we didn’t defend well at all,” senior forward Lonnie Tapè said. “They were the better team.”

Tapè finished the season’s finale with 14 points.

All in all, the Coyotes had a successful season. Losing four starters from last season’s team, Head Coach Reynolds’ recruiting class was able to contend again this year. His success over the last two seasons should make for another talented class for 2001.

The Coyotes finished the season with a record of 23-6, which tied the school’s record for wins set last year. They provided excitement for everyone involved, and they’ll be back and even more entertaining next season.
As CSUSB President Albert Karnig’s third-year review was brought to a close, the message, “Keep doing what you do,” was given to the president by the CSUSB Board of Trustees. The evaluation of Dr. Karnig was conducted during the fall quarter.

The evaluation report also acknowledged that, under President Karnig’s leadership, much-needed centers and institutions were created, including the Community-University Partnerships Center and the Water Resources Center. Under Karnig, the university has also developed several plans that will be continued in the future, including the expansion and improvement of academic programs offered by CSUSB and the efforts to further diversify the campus.

According to the third-year evaluation, Dr. Karnig has proved to be a good leader for the CSUSB community. “I am pleased to have Dr. Karnig as a member of the CSU system executive team,” said Chancellor Charles B. Reed in the report. “His decisions are well-reasoned and in the best interest of the students, faculty, and the university.”

Sheryl Swoopes, WNBA three-time Championship winner and Olympic gold-medalist, visited our campus on Wednesday, March 8. Karen Patton, Director of Women’s Resource Center, and her staff hosted the memorable affair, held in Events Center C from 2:00-4:00 p.m.

The Women’s Resource Center and the Adult Re-entry Center (WRC & ARC) sponsored the event, titled “Women in Action.” The public was welcome at this free event and refreshments were available.

Participants were able to listen to Swoopes discuss several issues, including personal experiences. She recalled being told by family members, friends, and coaches that she couldn’t play basketball because she was either too skinny, too fat, female, or because women would never play in the NBA. Swoopes ignored these negative attitudes by keeping positive and working hard; now her hard work has turned into a satisfying and lucrative career. Had she listened to all the negative remarks, she may have never achieved her goals.

Swoopes said one of the proudest joys in her life is her son, Jordan Eric. The athlete talked about how thrilled she is to be a mother, noting that she was careful to take very good care of herself during her pregnancy. Prenatal care has become a favorite cause for Swoopes. The March of Dimes charity approached her and Swoopes was enthusiastic about being a part of all the work the organization has done, and will do, for prenatal care. She says that there is more work to be done so that mothers everywhere will get quality pre-natal care. She also pointed out that not all teenagers are adequately informed about how important pre-natal care is for their developing babies.

In a lighter moment, Swoopes talked about her admiration for other people in the basketball industry, saying, “I respect Cheryl Miller because she is a dedicated coach. She is one of the best basketball players in the world, and she is a dedicated analyst.” Swoopes is also a huge fan of Michael Jordan. During the presentation, Swoopes reminisced about meeting Jordan, causing laughter when she talked about all the things she thought she would say if she ever met the NBA star. Swoopes said that though she could not say much when they did finally meet, Jordan was such a nice person that she was instantly put at ease.

After Swoopes concluded her discussion, she offered to take questions from the audience. One audience member became a little emotional when commenting on how proud he was when the women’s American basketball team won the gold medal during the 1996 Olympics. Swoopes thanked him, and the other audience members, for their compliments, remarks, praise, and questions. She ended her visit by signing autographs and meeting with fans.

Study Mexican Culture

By Patricia Barreto-Estrada Staff Writer

The California State University system has the only state-approved program allowing students to earn a California teaching credential in an international setting. The one-year program in Mexico challenges students to expand their vocabulary and helps them understand the Mexican disciplinary structure, culture and education system by placing them in private, as well as urban schools, and having the students complete their course work with Mexican students.

Dr. Nena M. Torrez, assistant professor at the School of Education, says that this is a wonderful opportunity for students to really immerse themselves in the Mexican culture and to learn the language of the people. “Students who complete the program are at an advantage. Districts call the school to see if we have students. The school districts’ personnel directors think that students coming out of that program are better prepared than the ones trained on campus.” She also mentioned that there are numerous opportunities to explore places during the weekends, such as Xochimilco and Chichenitza.

“Welcome to Bracketville”

The Coyote Chronicle’s Special Men’s NCAA Basketball Tournament Insert
The South Region

By Chris Walenta

The second round in the East could feature a rematch of the 1991 championship game with Duke and Kansas, but it's likely that Kansas could fall to DePaul, prompting a major upset. This is just one of the storylines in a bracket where the higher seeds should win.

The Temple Owls appear to be the team to beat and everyone and their grandmother are betting on them to make it to the Sweet 16. The Blue Devils, however, are the favorites to win it all.

The Blue Devils have a deep and talented squad, and they should be able to handle the defending champion, Kansas. The Owls have a lot of experience, but they don't have the same depth as Temple.

The Owls are facing a tough first-round battle with Hofstra. Temple is riding high after their Big East win, and they are a confident team. Hofstra is a team to watch, but they don't have the same experience as Temple.

The Owls will need to be prepared for a tough second-round battle with the 16th-seeded Blue Devils. Temple has the edge in experience, but the Blue Devils have the edge in depth.

The South Region is one of the most competitive regions, and it's likely that we will see some upsets in the second round.

By Dan Farmer

The Big Dump of the East Region is a match-up between the two teams that will likely have the most fanfare. Duke is the favorite to win the region, but Temple is not far behind.

Temple has a lot of experience and depth, but Duke has the talent and depth to make a run to the Final Four. The Owls will need to be prepared for a tough battle in the second round.

The Owls have a lot of experience and depth, but Duke has the talent and depth to make a run to the Final Four. The Owls will need to be prepared for a tough battle in the second round.

With Cincinnati’s loss of star player Kenyon Martin to a broken fibula, the NCAA tournament becomes a wide-open event, especially in the West Region.

“Underdogs” are hiding out there, ready to shock the nation with upset wins. Out of the eight first-round games in the West Regionals, three in particular stand out. First, let’s take a look at the possible sleeper picks out on the table. Indiana State, the alma-mater of Larry Bird, has a great shot at upsetting the Texas Longhorns. There’s no Larry Bird to lend the team the title game, but the Sycamores of the Missouri Valley are back in the field for the first time since their magical run of ’79.

The Sycamores have a balanced attack, with four players averaging double figures in scoring. Indiana State proved that they could play with the best teams in the nation when they defeated no. 14 Indiana earlier in the year. Texas, with Chris Mihm and solid guard play, has had a good season but Indiana State may have some of that old magic still in them. Every year since 1988 a number 12 seed has beaten a number five seed. The Sycamores will keep that streak in tact. Number seven, Louisville, versus number 10 Gonzaga, could also be an interesting contest. Gonzaga, who had that magical run last year, has their two best players, Richie Frahm and Matt Santangelo back for another run this year. Louisville has been probably the most up and down team in college basketball this season. They have nine losses and are 18-13, however, they still have a chance for their first round, set against Gonzaga, to show why they are amongst the best in the country.

The Midwest Region

By Curtar Fetherston
Staff Writer

The Midwest Region is arguably the toughest bracket in this year’s tournament, so let’s not waste any time. Michigan State is the first school in NCAA history to get a number one seed with seven losses on the season, however, the Spartans earned it in my opinion. I could care less about what the RPI rankings tell me about who had the toughest schedule and who played cupcakes. In my opinion, MSU played everyone who is anyone in college basketball this year and their record shows it. The great coaches know that to prepare a young team for a cut-throat tournament like March Madness, you need to be experienced on the road against the best.

With this experience in mind, I believe that Michigan State will blow past Valparaiso and avoid the dreaded first-round scare. Number two seed Iowa State didn’t play the same caliber opponents as MSU, but they are a strong team with one of the best low post players in the country, Marcus Fizer, a finesse point guard and solid perimeter shooter. Iowa State is a lock to oust Central Connecticut State in the first round. Both of these top seeds played in extremely talented and well-coached divisions, the Big Ten and the surprisingly tough Big 12, and will be very difficult to beat.

Number three seed, the Maryland Terrapins, should easily get past first-round foe Iowa. The seventh times a charm could be a very interesting one to watch when Aberdeen, without their best player Chris Porter, who was suspended from the game for accepting money from an agent, matches up with Creighton, the second best team with Creighton in the game. Division I. I like Creighton in this game because of their range but mostly because Porter will be on the bench and not on the floor where his Tiger’s need him. Many people around the College basketball scene were surprised that UCLA moved up to the number two seed, but I wasn’t. Their win over Stanford last week solidified them as one of the teams to watch in this year’s tournament. As it so happens, I like UCLA to overcome State in the first round, setting up a crucial second round match-up with Maryland. Syracuse is a team that started off the season 9-0 but struggled late in the season and ended up as number four seed. The Orangemen didn’t produce in the Big East Tournament, but I believe that they will knock out their first round opponent, Samford without too much difficulty. I also like Utah State, a number eight seed over Drexel and the Orangemen in the Sweet Sixteen match-up.

The most interesting second round game has to be Michigan and Georgia Tech. It’s tough to get a number one team on a number eight seed over surprising St. Louis, the ninth seed. Last but not least, we have the twelve-five seed match-up. There has been a twelve-five seed upset every year since 1988 and this year will be no different. Kentucky, the five seed, has to be playing the best team ever in the nation. Maryland plays solid defense and they are well coached, but Maryland guard John Dixon has to be playing the best team ever in the nation, expected constant lead changes, tough fouls, clutch 3-pointers, and excellent guard play. The SDSU task is simple, contain Marcus Fizer. Unfortunately that is far easier said than done considering that he is perhaps the most dangerous player in the tournament. I see the ball in the hands of Mateen Cleaves and as he cuts across the lane just in front of the basket he draws a foul line and he softly shoots the ball off the front of the rim, off the backboard and into the net sending the Spartans to their second final four in as many years. It won’t be pretty, but Michigan State may use this tough victory to propel themselves to the National Championship.

Joan C. Browning: a Profile in Courage

By Donald Willis
Opinions Editor

1954 was a pivotal year in American History. Brown vs. the Board of Education had outlawed segregation, and southern states responded by passing laws to continue the tradition of Jim Crow. South Carolina and Georgia even changed their flags to incorporate the “Stars and Bars.” At this time, Joan C. Browning was a student at Georgia State College for Women, and was outraged by her university’s threat to close if any African Americans attempted to enroll.

On Thursday March 9, Browning lectured to a crowd of 70 students in the commons, on her experiences as a “White Woman on a Black Freedom Ride: Race and Gender in the Civil Rights Movement.” At this lecture she spoke of her faith in god, freedom and equality for all women and men. For a “southern belle” to hold these beliefs was radical, but she never wavered - and her beliefs were matched with action as she participated in many protests to rid the South of its “genteel” tradition.

Browning grew up in Georgia’s segregated Telfair County, where her family benefited from a government loan to purchase a farm. As an introspective child, she read about the slaves who were brought to Georgia, and empathized with the human experience of being taken from your home to another land to work as a slave. In her high school years Browning received a $2500 scholarship to attend college, but she felt dejected when she found the same program would only grant a $25 scholarship to an African American student. These experiences enraged Joan and heightened her belief that all men are created equal.

In college she experienced campus riots to keep Blacks out. However she was able to meet other individuals who shared her beliefs on inequality. She was able to attend a conference on the sit-in movement where she met African American students from Paine College. At this meeting, the strategy for Georgia’s sit-in was planned, and Joan was becoming a willing participant. There she was, able to interact with people and form lifelong friendships.

After the conference, she went to many lectures and on one occasion was able to hear Martin Luther King Jr. speak on the principles of Christian brotherhood and fellowship, which demanded action. These included love for fellow men and non-violence, values that would define the Civil Rights movement.

One day Joan received an anonymous phone call threatening that if she attended a movement lecture her dormitory would be burned down. Many White Southerners like Browning were supportive of the civil rights movement, but the Ku Klux Klan, the police, and other institutions of social control made them afraid to act on their beliefs. Sympathetic southerners, whose names and addresses were printed in newspapers, were fired from their jobs and were run out of their communities.

The Ku Klux Klan drove from city to city, holding rallies and threatening sympathetic Whites and Blacks. Joan was arrested many times in the fight for civil rights and her life was threatened countless times. Her scholarship was taken away, and the Ku Klux Klan that she could not attend college.

Do "Whatever it Takes"

By Jorgie G. Salazar
Feature Editor

Many college students suffer from what is commonly known as "Chronic Not-Datingitus," which is the swelling of the love muscle. This occurs when, or it has been a long time since they have actively participated in the pursuit of a significant other. In layman's terms, it's being totally single. Disease can be caused by finals, writings papers, working a lot of hours, or by any other part of your life that consumes much of your time. In this Doctor's opinion, there is only one cure: GO OUT MORE!!!
Here is just one quick way to get out of the infirmary, away from all of the other lonely hearts. Go up to a girl or guy you see around campus, talk to them, and ask them if they would like to see a movie. Not just any movie, a FREE movie available only to CalState students. CalState students who actively participated in the online College Jeopardy competition, won a free movie screening of "Whatever it Takes," set for release in mid-April. I agree that this isn't the absolute best date movie, but it has just the right amount of mushy High School love drama and teenybopper shenanigans for a delightful evening with a total stranger.
"Whatever it Takes" is a story about the leader of the losers, Ryan Woodman (Shane West), who, like the rest of the schoolboys at Gilmore High, is drooling over the most beautiful girl in school, Ashley Grant (played by my future girlfriend, Jodi Lyn O'Keefe). Ryan enlist the help of the resident "school hunk," Chris (James Franco). Of course, Ryan's best friend is a girl, Maggie (Marla Sokoloff), who is the object of Chris' affection. So with four weeks left until graduation, they hatch a plan to snap each others' respective dreamgirl, working together in a modern-day version of Cyrano de Bergerac. This movie could just be the cure for what ails you. So, Doctor's orders: Instead of "Take two of these and call me in the morning," take em to the movies, and call THEM the next morning. Remember, you can be part of the free screening of "Whatever it Takes" at the Regal Del Rosa Cinema on Thursday, March 30. Doors open at 7:00pm. And like Rex Reed said, "I'll see you at the movies."

Movie: The Matrix, because it has great martial arts choreography and because it stimulates people to think about reality.

Book: "Two Treatises" by John Locke. Because two treatises are better than one.

Cd: 2 PACS All Eyes on Me. It's a CD that took rap music to a different level.

Horoscopes

by carol hishida

Aries (3/21-4/20): It's an excellent week to carve out your empire, to conquer the unconquerable, to blaze a trail across the unknown. You'll find yourself surprised by your strength, prowess and control.

Taurus (4/21-5/20): Try taking off your wrist-watch and going someplace where there are no clocks. You have your own perceptions of time and you could use the peace of mind that comes from not being hurried. A hasty decision could land you in a world of trouble, so don't make any rash decisions that you may later regret.

Gemini (5/21-6/20): Prophecies are self-fulfilling and positive energy has a snowballing effect as it rolls down the mountainside. This is a great time to get flirty with that certain someone and to pursue new friendships, as well as potential relationships.

Cancer (6/21-7/20): You might feel as though this is a perfect week to hide from everyone, but you may not have that luxury. Thinking before speaking will reduce the likelihood that you will say something you might end up regretting.

Leo (7/21-8/20): Your life is going to heat up, adding an element of fun — even to things undertaken in dead earnest. You excel in things you're passionate about, so indulge in whatever sparks your interest.

Virgo (8/21-9/20): It may be best to hold on to the intense emotions this week, but don't ignore your private feelings — they're there for a reason. Remember, there are plenty of ways to vent your pent-up emotion, so release them in the most constructive way you can imagine.

Libra (9/21-10/20): Hectic things are happening everywhere you look. The answer to a riddle appears out of the chaos, and although you may not like what you see, the nature of the obstacle is revealed.

Scorpio (10/21-11/20): Someone might manage to annoy you with out even trying, so don't be too quick in your reactions. Hint: Try to read the lines between the lines to see what their intentions might be, they may have your best interest in mind, even if they don't show it right away.

Sagittarius (11/22-12/20): You're in for a new set of experiences over the next week. With finals coming up, action and drama may color even the most ordinary events. Keep in mind, love and learning are oddly similar processes. If you can imagine it, you can achieve it!

Capricorn (12/21-1/20): Outside pressure may make you feel a bit out of character this week, but don't let it overwhelm you or cloud your thinking. Also, take some time to organize and straighten your home environment, and you will feel more at ease.

Aquarius (1/21-2/20): Take some time for yourself this week, and contemplate the ways in which you are truly "free." It may be helpful to write about or verbally describe your moment of inspiration. This will lead to increased self-awareness and clarity, preparing you for upcoming finals.

Pisces (2/21-3/20): Hopefully you won't be embarrassed by your own wooly tactics, because they may not be very effective this week. Not everybody will be taking Pisces seriously right now, so take this time to indulge in some harmless frivolity. Let yourself go and have some good old fashioned fun!

she was kicked out of her university, and blacklisted. However, Joan later became a freedom fighter for the Student Non-Violent Coordinating Committee, a social action to reinforce federal laws that barred segregation on public transportation.

Browning represents southerners who believed in equal rights for all men, and supported the civil rights movement. Her lecture, sponsored by Phi Alpha Theta through the hard work of Dr. Hanson, was enlightening and empowering. Joan C. Browning is a courageous woman who fought for her convictions, and never wavered.
