President Anthony H. Evans has approved the formation of a Department of Computer Science, effective in September.

A total of 117 students are now working toward their bachelor of science degree in computer science, a program which began this winter. Computer science has generated 122.8 FTE this quarter, or 3.3 percent of the college enrollment. The major is the second largest, next to mathematics, in the School of Natural Sciences, and is expected to double next year, according to Dean James Crum (Natural Sciences).

Dr. Richard J. Botting, current coordinator of the Computer Science Program, will chair the new department. Dr. Botting, who came to the college in September, is a computer expert who helped systematize training programs for British civil service managers. Dr. Botting has strong undergraduate background in pure mathematics and physics and holds a Ph.D. in computer science from Brunel University in England. He taught at Brunel, where he also worked on the production of portable graphics software systems and the design of a system for the use of ALGOL to describe pictures. In addition, he participated in the work of the noted Brunel Cybernetics Institute.

Today is the last day for students to order caps and gowns from the college Bookstore if they wish to participate in commencement exercises Saturday morning, June 18.

Newman, a building maintenance worker, currently chairs the Safety Committee for Plant Operations.
