Small classes, which have been a distinctive feature of the university, should continue along with the quarter system, recommends the Ad Hoc Committee on Preservation of Small Classes.

The Faculty Senate committee, which has been working all year, also recommended abandonment of the Ruml plan, the system of granting five units of credit for four hours of classroom instruction plus one hour of independent study.

The Faculty Senate gave first reading to the report Tuesday, agreeing that meetings to discuss the issues should be held in the schools instead of calling for a faculty referendum or poll. The Faculty Senate recommendation will be presented to President Evans for a policy decision.

The committee report declared the preponderance of small classes has provided the university with its distinctive feature and should be retained for institutional individuality. The study committee—composed of faculty, staff and students—recommended students spend no more than 35 percent of their time in large or intermediate classes, leaving 65 percent for small classes or individualized instruction.

A decision to convert from the Ruml plan to a four-units-for-four-hours system would require alteration in the curriculum. Overall reforms could be made in the General Education requirements, adding breadth and depth without increasing the total percentage of a student’s time devoted to GE courses. A two-year timeline would be needed to implement the new system in fall 1988.

The committee said it found no compelling academic reason to recommend converting the university from a quarter to a semester system at this time. While a conversion would be administratively convenient, the university could lose staff positions and incur significant cash costs, it reported.

Members of the ad hoc committee were: Dr. John Craig (Chemistry), Barbara Harrington (Academic Scheduling), Dr. Ronald Hennigar (Accounting and Finance), Joani George (AS president), Dr. Loralee MacPike (English), Dr. Ward McAfee (History), Dr. Jerrold Pritchard (Academic Programs), Dr. Andrew Schultz (Education), Dr. Robert Schwabe (Institutional Research), James H. Urata (Administrative Affairs), and Silvia von Kluge (student).

Members of the Southern California Academy of Natural Sciences will gather at Cal State May 2-3 for their annual meeting, announced Dr. James Crum, chair of the local conference committee.

Approximately 600-800 are expected to attend the conference, including several Mexican scientists from Baja, Dr. Crum said. In addition to several symposiums, the attendants will review science papers submitted by local high school students, he added.

New officers have been elected to head Cal State's student government: Penni Overstreet (junior, criminal justice) president; Steve Hekman (sophomore, marketing) vice president; and Frank Novek (freshman, biology) treasurer. They will assume office June 1.

Only one school representative was elected to the Associated Students Board of Directors: Sandra Boyd (graduate student, psychology). Since there were no candidates for the other schools, representatives will be appointed when the new vice president takes office.
