THE YASUDA CONNECTION

President Anthony Evans hands Minoru Yasuda, chairman of the Board of Directors for the Yasuda Institute of Education, a ceremonial pen used to sign the July 1 agreement between the universities to build a $2.2 million Extended Education classroom and conference building here. The Yasuda Institute donated $925,000 toward the venture, which is symbolic of the maturing relationship and exchange programs between Cal State and the Japanese Institute. Forged by the Office of Extended Education, the partnership is due in great measure to the work of Linda Chaffee, director (American Culture & Language Programs). "Linda and her staff probably have worked harder at strengthening the relationship between the two institutions than anybody else," says Dean Lee Porter (Extended Education). The rendering shown here represents three potential phases of a facility for Extended Education.

THE SWALLOWS (GULP) RETURN TO SAN JUAN BERNARDINO

It could have been a scene out of Hitchcock's "The Birds." Stepping outside the doors of the Events Center in the brand new, never-been-used Student Union addition, Helga Lingren, the Student Union director, gazed in amazement at what seemed a hundred cliff swallows flying about the building's north side. "We have new tenants," says Lingren, "and we can't even figure out how to charge them rent."

Not to mention a cleaning deposit. Swallows, of course, are the romantic singing birds of San Juan Capistrano fame. Much more romantic from a distance than Lingren and others around campus uniformly found the birds' only deposit at the bottom of a shoe. And if you're thinking eviction, forget it. The California Fish and Game code says it is "unlawful to take, possess or needlessly destroy the nest or eggs of any bird."

Lingren first noticed the swallows on June 9 while going to the Events Center to Dr. Judith Kymer and Anna Marie Deasy (University Relations), who planned to use the room during graduation ceremonies the following Saturday. By that time, however, the swallows already were making good use of the facility, setting up housekeeping all around the Student Union. Their milky brown nests much almost perfectly match the color of the outside walls, and look like upside down mud igloos stuck underneath eaves in bunches, a kind of tract housing. At last count, Lingren had spotted nearly 60. The low proximity of the swallows' nests about the Student Union have made their arrival even more romantic from a distance these days to Lingren and others around campus uniform­ly enough to have found the birds' only deposit at the bottom of a shoe. And if you're thinking eviction, forget it. The California Fish and Game code says it is "unlawful to take, possess or needlessly destroy the nest or eggs of any bird."

They're really neat," Lingren says, "and like outside the Creative Arts Building, another spot where one would expect cliff swallows to nest—high up in a corner where the Recital Hall roof rises above the rest of the building. There, the swallows have built two or three feet away from an old bee hive. The fact of life about the birds and the bees here is that they do not get along. If the bees return soon, thinks Judy Dymond (Theatre Arts), the swallows will probably move out.

FAN OVERHEATS, SMOKE FILLS ROOM

San Bernardino fire fighters removed smoke emitted by a burned out fan motor from the second floor of the Biology Building July 6. The smoke was spotted by a support technician around 5 p.m. after it drifted down a duct and into a stock room in BI-232. Officer Randy Keller (Public Safety) took the call and the fire department was notified as was Levy Wilke, chief engineer (Heating, Air-conditioning and Ventilation).

Officials soon determined that the smoke was coming from an old exhaust fan motor that had overheated, ruling out the possibility of a chemical fire. The smoke did not set off any alarms, says Tony Ichnan (Environmental Health and Safety), probably because "there wasn't enough" of it. What smoke there was, fire fighters cleared away with an ejector fan.

Cal State employees, who had been evacuated from the building immediately, were able to return to their jobs by approxi­mately 5:30 p.m. As a precautionary measure, Keller was treated for smoke inhalation at St. Bernardine's Medical Center and released. The fan was replaced the following day.
A NOTE FROM HUMAN RESOURCES

1993/94 CLASSIFICATION PROGRAM

Classification review requests may be submitted during the month of July 1993 to the Human Resources Department (HRD). All requests require the review and signature of the appropriate division vice president prior to forwarding to HRD. Documents and information may be obtained in HRD.

Submission time frames are in July and January of each fiscal year for all classification review requests. Whether the review is initiated by an employee or by a supervisor, manager, director or dean, it is anticipated that a limited amount of funds will be available during this fiscal year to accommodate the classification review program.

AFRICAN-AMERICAN MEN'S CONFERENCE

Cal State alumnus Lawrence Daniels, a San Bernardino businessman, is helping to develop an African-American men's conference and organization aimed at strengthening the African-American voice in the United States.

Daniels and his fellow executive steering committee members hope to pull together current efforts and resources, as well as renew the hope and self-esteem of young African-American men.

The committee is planning a men's conference for next year that will coincide with the African-American women's conference. At this year's women's conference held last month in San Diego, Daniels attended a workshop for men where the idea for their own conference was developed.

STUDENT RESEARCHERS TAKE TOP HONORS

Five Cal State, San Bernardino students swept a recent Inland Empire research paper competition and are now competing with entries from 12 universities in a regional contest of the American Production and Inventory Control Society (APICS), announced Dr. Jadav Varandani, professor (Information and Decision Sciences) and a chapter liaison.

Earning first-place awards were Cal State graduate student Carolyn Bartowski-Antinious of Redlands and undergraduate students Patti Stephens of Victorville. Second-place honors were awarded to CSUSB graduate student Sharon Dragan of Upland, and undergraduate Kai-Ing Hwang of Colton.

A third-place award was bestowed upon John Cuervas of Riverside. Cal State associate professors Kamwar Farahbod and Harold Dyck (Information and Decision Sciences) are local chapter advisors.

HONORS

Karen A. Logue recently earned the Human Resource Certification Institute's (HRCI) certification as a senior professional in Human Resources. HRCI is an affiliate of the Society for Human Resource Management, the largest organization in the world representing human resource professionals, and recognizes those who demonstrate expertise in their field.

For the second straight year, Dr. Judith Rynner (University Relations) was elected to a one-year term as president of the National Orange Show Board of Directors. This is her sixth year on the 16-member board.
